The Supreme Court of Indiana has decided that a student attending school in any other county than that in which he has his permanent residence, is not an elector under the law, and that in order to be such he must have definitely determined to make the town where he is attending school the place of his residence, and must be assessed for purposes of taxation.

The shut down of oil wells, manipulated by the Producers' Protective Association and the Standard Oil Company, went into effect a few days ago, it is alleged, is to continue eighteen months. Standard Oil is to divide the profits of 5,000,000 barrels of oil at 62 cents among the syndicate who shall live up to the contract, and 2 000,000 barrels are to be set aside to create a wage fund for the laboring men thrown out of employment.

At Louisville, Charles B. Brownfield, a dissipated character, cut the throats of his wife, his 10-year-old daughter, and his brother-in-law, William F. Bruner, and then hanged himself. He left a note stating that he was tired of life owing to his propensity for gambling; that he did not want his wife and child to be left penniless, and that he killed Bruner because he didn't think he was fit to live.

THE SECRET ORDERS
OF
WESTERN AFRICA.

BY J. AUGUSTUS COLE, OF SHAINGAY, WEST AFRICA.

Bishop Flickinger of the U. B. church says that, "This volume will well repay a careful reading not only for its discussion and exposition of these societies, but because it gives much valuable information respecting other institutions of that great continent."

J. Augustus Cole, the author of this pamphlet is a native of Western Africa, and is of pure negro blood. He has given much time and care to the investigation of the secret societies and heathen customs of Western Africa. He joined several of the secret orders for the purpose of obtaining full and correct information regarding their nature and operation. His culture and superior powers of discrimination render what he has written most complete and reliable.

HOME AND HEALTH.

THE NUTRITIOUS VALUE OF CERTAIN FOODS.

It has come to this: that the simplest articles of diet are safest, and that is, in my opinion, another argument in favor of plain living. Yes, the simplest are the safest, and let me add, the best are the cheapest. The butcher, for example, or the egg merchant cannot adulterate his wares, but he may have several qualities; and there is a stage at which all animal foods arrive, when kept in shops, which renders them to a large extent poisonous, and this is bad, if not worse than adulteration.

We often hear it said that shop eggs, as they are called, are good enough for frying, with bacon for example. This is a positive mistake; an egg that has even the suspicion of staleness about it, is deleterious to health, not to say dangerous, no matter whether it be fried or boiled. And the same may be said of flesh meats of all kinds, and I will not except even hare or venison. I am quite prepared to have this little sentence pooh-poohed by the robust and healthy. I only add that I adhere to it, that I have the courage of my convictions, and furthermore, that I have invalids and dyspeptics, and those with delicate digestions in my thoughts as I write.

I grant you, my healthy athlete, who can tramp over the moors with the gun and bag from morning dawn to dewy eve, and never feel tired, that the eating of long kept game may not seem to injure you, but the bare fact that piquant sauces and stimulants are needed to aid its digestion is exceedingly suspicious. There are two animals in particular that like their food high and tender; one is the crocodile, the other our friend the dog; but both have wonderful strong digestive powers; little inferior, in point of fact, to that of the ostrich, about which bird so many fanciful stories have been written and told.

It may be said, without much fear of contradiction, that any kind of food or any mixed diet or meat which requires the aid of stimulants, either of the nature of condiment or wines, is not salutary. Such diet as this is a tax upon the whole system, and causes heat and discomfort, and a feverish state of the blood, which can only end in debility of the nervous system, and more or less of prostration.

But those who would obtain the greatest amount of health and comfort from the food they eat must be most careful in its selection. Leaving idiosyncrasy out of count for the present, although every one ought to know what agrees with him and what does not, there are many things connected with the value and digestibility of food obtained from various sources that I do well to remind the reader of.—Cassell's Family Magazine.

POP OVERS.—Two cups of milk, two and one-half cups of flour, two eggs, butter size of one-half walnut, salt, melt the butter, beat all thoroughly together, put in cups and bake thirty minutes.

CORNMEAL MUFFINS.—One and one-half cups cornmeal, the same of flour, two teaspoonfuls baking powder, half cup sugar, half teaspoonful salt, small teaspoonful melted butter, two eggs, milk enough to make a stiff batter.

TOMATO FRITTERS.—One quart stewed tomatoes, one egg, one small teaspoonful soda. Stir in flour enough to make a batter like that for griddle cakes. Have some lard very hot on the stove, drop the batter in a spoonful at a time and fry.

REMEDY FOR SORE THROAT.—Buy at a drug store one ounce of camphorated oil, and five cents worth of chlorate of potash. Whenever any soreness appears in the throat, put the potash in half a tumbler of water, and with it gargle the throat thoroughly, then rub the neck thoroughly with the camphorated oil at night before going to bed, and also place around the throat a small strip of woolen flannel. This is a simple, cheap and sure remedy.

CURE FOR FRECKLES.—Horseradish grated into a cup of cold sour milk—let it stand twelve hours, then strain and apply two or three times a day—will, it is said, remove freckles from hands or face in a short time. Or, one ounce of lemon juice mixed with a quarter of a drachm of pulverized borax and half a drachm of sugar, will also remove them. Keep the lotion in a glass bottle, corked tightly a few days before using, and apply to the freckles occasionally, and they will soon be removed.

A monthly journal whose aim it is to advance

and to help break down everything that hinders its spread.

It teaches that men need to be converted to the personal Christ, and not simply to a system of truth, and that there must be implanted in them a divine life as well as a correct belief. The seeks to show that the division of Christians into sects is a great wrong, and a very serious obstacle to the advancement of the Redeemer's kingdom, and it seeks to show Christians how they may be one in Christ, and to persuade and help them thus to unite. The

EVANGELIST.

also opposes Intemperance, Secret Societies, Worldliness, and the spirit of Caste, and aims to "war a good warfare" against all wrong.

Talks ON THE Labor Troubles,

BY REV. C. C. BROWN.

The Danger—The Laborer's Grievance—The Laborer's Foe—The Laborer's Fallacy—The Laborer's Hope—Mind and Muscle—Co-Laborers.

TIMELY TALKS ON AN IMPORTANT SUBJECT.

The Papers Say of this Book:

"It is well to remind the world of the great law of human brotherhood, but how to make the 'more general application of it?' 'Aye, there's the rub!' Our author contributes his mite in that direction, and his voice and reasoning will reach some ears and perhaps touch some understandings and move some selfish hearts that are buttoned up very closely and hedged around by over much respectability and comfortable prosperity."—Chicago Tribune.

"The writer does his work in a way remarkable alike for its directness, its common sense, its impartiality, its lucidity and its force. He has no theories to support; he deals with facts as he finds them; he fortifies his assertions by arrays of demonstrative statistics. The work is among the best of the kind if it is not the best that we have seen. While it is scarcely possible for it to be put in the hands of all our wage-workers, we wish it could be read by every one of them."—Chicago Interior.

Farm Notes.

WINTER CARE OF COWS.

The arrangement of the barn and yard should be such as to reduce the labor as much as possible. Excessive warmth is not conducive to robustness, health or profit. If a man's house is kept closed up and heated with stoves to a temperature of eighty degrees, and his food and drink are all taken hot with a view to preventing the effects of the cold and to insure more comfort, the dwellers in that house will become sick or diseased; the impure air will poison the blood; the warmth will relax the skin, dry it and open the pores, and the slightest draft will cause a fit of shivering and induce dangerous colds. It is in precisely such houses that sore throats, diphtheria, scarlet fever, and other diseases are so frequent, while in the house where the windows are thrown open to the breezes, and the cold, brisk, pure air is welcomed, and exercise and health give warmth, fed by the abundant oxygen of the fresh air coursing through the blood, there are health and vigor and comfort. It is the same in the dairy. Pleuro-pneumonia invades those herds which are kept in close, warm, unwholesome stables, and the dreaded tuberculosis finds there its prey; while from the wide airy stable, well ventilated and filled with pure cold air, the well fed cows will emerge to frolic in the snow, and enjoy themselves in the bright sunshine and the crisp air, when the thermometer marks down nearly to zero. Except in stormy weather, the cows should spend at least three or four hours every day in the yard, picking some rough feed and getting water and exercise.—American Agriculturist.

AN OPPORTUNITY FOR MANURE MAKING.

To preserve a healthful condition, maintain the vital warmth, and keep the skin in proper action, thorough carding and brushing should not be neglected in a winter dairy, and the utmost cleanliness in every respect should be observed. Abundant supplies of absorbents, of which dried swamp muck is the best, and hard wood sawdust and fresh leaves next, and in place of these cut straw, or any other fine waste material should be procured. The winter dairy is a grand opportunity for making manure, and the improvement of a farm, and to this end every possible economy in saving and preserving the manure should be exercised. The feeding must be liberal and of the best food. It must be regular in quality, quantity and time; because out of the food the butter must come, and in quality and quantity will be exactly equivalent to the food given.—Agriculturist.

Garget—Ropy Milk.—Several correspondents desire information in regard to garget in its different stages. This disease is an inflammation of the milk glands, most commonly coming on just previous to or at the time of calving, but may appear with greater or less severity at any time when the flow of milk is abundant. The symptoms are, enlargement of the udder, which becomes hard, congested and painful; one or both sides may be attacked, and, on pressure, hard cakes may be felt in the udder, the teats sympathetically becoming tense, painful, and often nearly or entirely impervious. The milk, when drawn, is ropy, and if the inflammation goes on, may become bloody and mixed with matter. Of course, the object of any treatment is, first to allay the inflammation. For this purpose, bathe or foment the udder and teats in warm water, or with warm soap suds. If the organ is very much swollen, support it by means of a bag or bandage passed over the hind-quarters, cutting holes for the teats. In this bag may be placed a linseed-and-meal poultice, if the inflammation continues great. If necessary, draw off the milk by a milk-tube, which should be done three times a day. Give a purge of half a pound of salts, lessen the amount of food, which should be very simple, without grain, and offer very little fluid. If the glands remain hard after inflammation has subsided, rub with iodine ointment. The too early and sudden removal of the calf often brings on this condition. The restoration of the calf may sometimes greatly accelerate the cure. If we interfere with nature's laws, we must sooner or later suffer the consequences.—Ex.

PERSECUTION

By the Roman Catholic Church.

A Moral Mystery how any Friend of Religious Liberty could Consent to "Hand over Ireland to Parnellite Rule."

By Rev. John Lee, A. M., B. D.

General Viscount Wolseley: "Interesting."
Chicago Inter-Ocean: "A searching review."
Christian Cynosure: "It deserves a wide circulation at the present time."
Bishop Coxe, Protestant Episcopal, of Western New York: "Most useful publication; a logical sequel to 'Our Country,' by Josiah Strong."
Emile De Laveleye of Belgium, the great publicist: "I have read with the greatest interest your answer to Cardinal Manning. I think Rome's encroachments in the United States ought to be carefully watched and resisted."
Rev. C. C. McCabe, D. D.: "It is a useful book and ought to have a wide sale. You are dealing with a question which will soon dominate every other in American politics. The Assassin of Nations is in our midst and is approaching the Temple of Liberty with stealthy tread. The people of this country will understand the Belfast frenzy some day better than they do now."
The Right Hon. Lord Robert Montague: "I have read it with the greatest pleasure, and with amazement at the intimate acquaintance with the acts of Romanism in our midst which you have evinced. I only wish that, instead of publishing your pamphlet in Chicago, you had sown it broadcast over England, Scotland and Ireland."

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

WASHINGTON.

There is no longer any doubt but that during the first few days of the coming session of Congress the President will nominate Secretary Lamar to fill the vacancy on the Supreme bench, caused by the death of Justice Woods, and at the same time Postmaster General Vilas will be nominated to succeed Lamar as Secretary of the Interior.

Secretary Lamar addressed a letter to Commissioner Sparks, Friday, replying in a curt manner to the latter's communication relative to the adjustment of the Chicago, St. Paul, Minneapolis, and Omaha Railroad land grants, and in conclusion says that either Mr. Sparks or the writer (Secretary Lamar) must retire from the department forthwith.

The Department of Agriculture reports that the picking of cotton has progressed rapidly. The result in fractions of a bale indicate a crop of about 6,300,000 bales, on an acreage of about 18,640,000, or 33.8 of a bale per acre.

THE ANARCHISTS.

Governor Oglesby, after hearing the pleas of the friends of the anarchists last Wednesday, decided to commute the sentences of Fielden and Schwab, who were taken to the penitentiary at Joliet Saturday. The governor refused to interfere in the other cases.

After the four bombs were found in Lingg's cell last week Sunday he was placed under close guard, but about 9 A. M Thursday a fearful explosion in his cell showed that he had not been too closely watched. The bomb maker had committed suicide by means of a fulminating cap, which he held in his mouth and lit with a candle. How he secured the fulminate with which the deed was committed is a mystery, as his cell and clothing had been thoroughly searched. The explosion blew out one side of his face, shattering teeth, jaws and tongue horribly. He died in about five hours.

Six minutes before noon Friday, Spies, Fischer, Engel and Parsons were hung in the county jail in this city. They were not allowed to harangue the 200 spectators, and died with the same hardihood and indifference to death which they have for years manifested in their inflammatory speeches. Their bodies were given to their friends, and were buried on Sunday in the German cemetery near Oak Park, nine or ten miles west of the city. Thousands viewed their bodies and the police had at times to make way for the funeral procession through the crowds. There was no disorder, but an old soldier demanded the privilege of carrying the U. S. flag at the head of the procession and defied the friends of the dead to tear it down. Fearing the effect of force they allowed him to proceed. Sanguinary and revengeful speeches were made at the cemetery, but the hopes of anarchy were buried with the four victims of its misguided rage.

A gathering at Cincinnati Thursday night, called for the purpose of expressing sympathy for the Chicago anarchists, was dispersed by the police, but no arrests were made.

Three thousand persons paraded at New York Thursday night to show their sympathy for the doomed anarchists. Black and red flags were carried, and the two American flags in the procession were furled and draped. The transparencies bore menacing legends, and the bands played funeral airs. The police precautions for the preservation of the peace were thorough and tactical, but not the slightest disturbance occurred.

Frustrated in holding a meeting in honor of their executed brothers in Chicago, the New York anarchists Saturday night retired uttering dire threats against the police. A meeting in which five coffins draped in mourning were to be the chief features, outside of the usual harangues, did not come off and the solemn reminders of death were piled in a side room of saloonkeeper Kanders' establishment, at Second Avenue and First Street.

The head of the London police having forbidden a socialist meeting in Trafalgar Square in sympathy with the Chicago anarchists, the lawless elements resolved to test the power of the authorities. The result was a severe struggle. The scene in Trafalgar square has not been equalled since 1866 when the people, asserting the right of public meeting, destroyed the railways around Hyde Park. Four thousand policemen took possession of the approaches to the square at an early hour. About noon various societies, socialist, radical, and Irish, approached the square from every direction. The paraders were headed by bands of music, and they carried banners and mottoes. The police attacked and dispersed each group as it arrived near the square. Fierce fights took place on the Strand, Northumberland Avenue, Whitehall, Pall Mall, and other adjacent streets. One of the societies succeeded in entering the square but was repulsed after a bloody fight. At 4:30 P. M the crowd in the vicinity of the square numbered 100 000, and the police were powerless to thoroughly disperse them. Cavalry and infantry were summoned to the assistance of the police, but no charge was made, as the people of their own accord began to disperse at dusk. About 200 citizens and forty policemen were injured. Fifty persons were arrested, among them being Socialist Burns.

COUNTRY.

Inspector Bonfield of this city, has distributed $500 among the families of the officers killed at the Haymarket riot. The donor would not divulge his identity.

A license of incorporation has been granted to the Chicago Times Publishing Company. The capital stock is $1,000,000, and the incorporators are James J. West, Clinton A. Snowden, and Frank E. Weigly.

At the election Tuesday General Foraker was re-elected Governor of Ohio by 30,000 plurality, and the Legislature is safely Republican. Ames (Rep.) was re-elected Governor of Massachusetts, by an increased majority. Colonel Fred Grant was defeated in New York, where the George vote shows a heavy falling off. Prohibition was beaten in Oregon; and Democratic gains are reported from Iowa, but the State is safe. The Democrats carried Virginia and Maryland, and are said to have majorities in the Legislature. Pennsylvania and Nebraska elected the Republican nominees. The Republicans of New Jersey secured a majority of the Legislature in both branches.

For fifteen hours, ending Friday morning, twenty-six alarms of fire were turned in at St. Louis, causing many people to believe that attempts were being made to burn the city. A number of alarms were also answered Friday. Captain Evans, of the Salvage Corps, reported to the Mayor that 80 per cent of recent fires were of an incendiary origin. The Fire Chief thinks the greater number of the blazes were set by small boys and tramps.

The next grand jury at Binghampton, N, Y., will be called upon to determine whether the eleven women who swore in their votes in the interest of the Prohibition party on Tuesday, at Kettleville, violated the law. Five men, three of whom are Democrats and two Republicans, have entered complaints against the females.

Friday afternoon the 400-foot draw span of the Santa Fe bridge across the Mississippi at Fort Madison, Iowa, was swung for the first time. It is said that through trains will be running from the Pacific coast to Chicago before New Year's day.

THE CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE,

The CYNOSURE represents the Christian movement against the Secret Lodge System; discusses fairly and fearlessly the various movements of the lodge as they appear to public view, and reveals the secret machinery of corruption in politics, courts, and social and religious circles.

There are in the United States
Some 200 different Lodges,
With 2,000 000 members,
Costing $20,000 000 yearly.

This mighty world power confronts the church and seeks to rule and ruin every Christian Reform.

No Christian Reform Movement of the day is so necessary, yet so unpopular and beset with difficulties, as that which would remove the dark pall of oaths, dark-lantern meetings, secret signs, mysterious and pagan worship about altars condemned by the Word of the Living God.

No other paper gives the best of its correspondence and editorial strength to this vitally important reform. The CYNOSURE should be your paper in addition to any other you may take.

Because it is the representative of the reform against the Lodge, with ablest arguments, biographical and historical sketches, letters from lecturers, seceders and sufferers from lodge persecution. The ablest writers on this subject from all denominations and all parts of the country contribute. Special departments for letters from our metropolitan centers, on the relation of secret orders to current events.

ALEXANDER HAMILTON.

Hamilton, the founder of empire and the friend of Washington, is justly celebrated as one of the greatest men of a great age. In statesmanship he has without detraction been compared to Pitt who was Prime Minister of England at twenty-four; and in the success of his endeavors to Napoleon who at forty-two had nearly subdued all Europe.

He was born in 1757 in the island of Nevis in the West Indies. He thus came into the world a British subject, his father a Scotch merchant, his mother a French Huguenot. The early death of his mother, and failure of his father in business put young Hamilton into a counting-house at twelve, where the precocity of his genius attracted the notice of relatives who sent him to Boston in his fifteenth year to be educated. It is interesting to know that among his warm friends was the excellent Dr. Knox, a Presbyterian clergyman of Nevis, who materially aided him in this introduction to his future home, and the effect of whose religious teachings was probably never lost upon Hamilton. In a year he was ready for college and wished to enter Princeton with the privilege of going through the course without waiting for the regular classes. This would not be permitted, and he found accommodations at King's (now Columbia) College. While a student, at the age of 17 he published several essays concerning the rights of the colonies, which were so remarkable for their vigor and maturity of style, as well as for soundness of argument, that they were attributed to Jay.

He entered the American army as captain of artillery while 18; and in 1777, while barely 20, Washington made him his aid with the rank of lieutenant colonel. Notwithstanding the disparity of twenty-five years in their ages, he continued to be the inseparable companion of Washington during the war, and was always consulted by him on the most important occasions. In this new and trying position he soon became the most valued and trusted of all the experienced officers about the commander-in chief, while his popular manners made him a general favorite. He was on terms of closest intimacy with Washington who used often to address him with the endearing title of "My boy." He saved the battle of Monmouth under Washington's directions, and in the assault that forced the capitulation of Cornwallis at Yorktown, he was the first man to enter the enemy's works at the head of his command. His conduct on every occasion of difficulty and danger, confirmed and fully established his high military reputation and earned for him from his comrades in arms the epithet of the "Little Lion." His boyish figure struck with astonishment those who had long heard of his exploits.

ALEXANDER HAMILTON.

He is described at this time as being a mere stripling, small, slender and almost delicate in frame, His personal appearance is described by those who knew him as being of a "small, lithe figure, instinct with life; erect and steady in gait; a military presence, without the intolerable accuracy of a martinet; and his general address graceful and nervous, indicating the beauty, energy and activity of his mind; a bright ruddy complexion, light colored hair, a mouth infinite in expression, its sweet smile being most observable; eyes lustrous with deep meaning and reflection, and the whole countenance decidedly Scottish in form and expression." His manner and conversation had an irresistible charm, an influence which his enemies had frequent occasion to regret. "He rises before us," writes another of his later life, "small in stature, but erect and graceful, and by the art of the chisel and the brush, we can see the firm, strong jaw, noble head, long, straight nose, and most effective of all the dark, deep-set eyes. We can easily imagine how he looked, with his eyes glowing and flashing as he became excited, and how his full, melodious voice rang out, compelling the attention of all who listened."

He left the army in 1782 at the age of twenty-five, having successfully managed such important interests as were never perhaps before committed to one so young. During the same year he was sent as delegate to Congress, but resigned after a short time to resume his law practice. He felt keenly during this time the inadequacy of the articles of confederation as the framework of a national government, and was a leader in the movement for the Constitutional convention of 1787, of which he was the most active and influential member next to Washington. The State of New York was by a large majority opposed to the federal movement, and Governor Clinton was at its head. Hamilton so far overcame them as to secure a representation, but the other two delegates were uncompromising States-rights men and his action was hampered by their presence. An opportunity came, however, for a great speech, in which he wisely decided to concentrate all his force and argument. Filled with a deep conviction of the importance of the crisis, and having complete mastery of his subject, he made a speech of five or six hours in length, which is described by Governeur Morris as the ablest and most impressive he ever heard. His greatest service, however, in behalf of the union and constitution of a federal government that should rest upon the authority, not of the States but of the people, were rendered before and after the convention of 1787 in securing the endorsement of New York, whose geographical position, dividing New England from the other States, was of great importance. The remarkable series of essays which have come down to us as the "Federalist" were chiefly from his pen. They marked an epoch in the development of free constitutional government and political thought. The New York convention, which finally ratified the Constitution, was also by large majority opposed to such action; but the arguments and eloquence of Hamilton overcame all and carried the day. This victory was one of Hamilton's most brilliant exploits.

When Washington was elected President all eyes turned to Hamilton as the man for the most difficult place in the Cabinet—the Secretary of the Treasury. The post was beset with difficulties that would have appalled the boldest, but Hamilton was convinced that he now could render his country his best service, and he did not hesitate. It was the great epoch of his life. He was only thirty-two years old, in the flower of his age. The country was on the verge of financial ruin, and schemes for repudiation were among the first obstacles Hamilton overcame. His measures for restoring the public credit, funding the national debt, assuming the war debt of the States, establishing a national bank, arranging a system of duties, and levying an internal revenue tax, met with the most stubborn resistance, but he carried most of them through successfully. The opposition was led by Jefferson, the Secretary of State, who returned from France to accept the place, full of the ideas of the fatal French Revolution then already begun, and he was a ready leader for the opposition to the firm establishment of a national government. In the winter of 1791–92 this opposition had formed itself into a party, but Jefferson hid his hand with the Masonic cunning of a Jacobin. His secret work very soon developed into the State-rights party, called "Republicans." He at length attempted to break down the public confidence in Hamilton by securing an order from Congress for an account of the operations of the Treasury; but suffered a most inglorious defeat. The trials of the administration with the infamous Genet, the embassador from the French republic, followed, in which Hamilton was Washington's wisest counsellor; while Jefferson's course was vacillating, treacherous and unpatriotic.

Hamilton resigned and returned to his law practice in 1795, next to Washington the most conspicuous man in the nation, without a question as to his integrity in the breast of his bitterest political enemy. In private life he was still the adviser of Washington, the leader of his party, and the mark for the poisoned arrows of his enemies. Washington's Farewell Address was so much the work of Hamilton's pen that there has been much controversy which of the two was the real author of the great paper. To Washington belongs the foundation and framework, the superstructure was in great part Hamilton's. Of Hamilton in private life at work for his living, Talleyrand, who knew him personally said, "I have beheld one of the wonders of the world. I have seen a man who has made the fortune of a nation laboring all night to support his family." Talleyrand in 1819 said he had known nearly all the marked men of his time, but he had never known one, on the whole, equal to Hamilton.

Guizot, who had read and reflected much upon the writings of Hamilton, said of him that he "must be classed among the men who have best known the vital principles and fundamental conditions of a government—one worthy of its mission and of its name."

President Van Buren speaks of "Hamilton's elevated character in private life: upon whose integrity and fidelity in his personal dealings and in the discharge of every private trust that was reposed in him no shadow rested, who was indifferent to the accumulation of wealth, who as a public man was so free from intrigues for personal advancement, and

THE SUPREMACY OF LAW.

BY H. H. HINMAN.

After the Supreme Court of the United States had affirmed the correctness of the courts of Illinois in trial of the anarchists, all hope of judicial vindication was dispelled. Executive clemency which, had it been asked for in a spirit of penitence, might have been possibly hoped for, was rendered most improbable by the evident purpose to repeat the original crime. Dynamite bombs in the prisoner's cell did not mean mere self-destruction. It meant revenge —the murder of the innocent—the undying hate of those who deliberately planned the overthrow of all law, the destruction of all authority and the death of all who stood in the way of their triumph in wickedness. It is a terrible thing to take the life of a fellow man. It is pleasant to exercise mercy. It requires not a little courage to vindicate the law, but it is a courage that must be exercised, if we would preserve the lives and safety of the people.

Within the last few years not only have a vast number of bloody crimes disgraced our land, but the fact that the guilty ones so often escape, and that the execution of the laws is so uncertain, not only tends to encourage crime, but in a vast and increasing number of cases leads to a criminal enforcement of justice. Inefficiency in our courts, corruption in our officials and tender-heartedness in our State executives where they ought to be stern, is made the occasion of a vast number of murders by lynch law, a class of crimes scarcely less dangerous to the peace and well-being of society than the deeds they were intended to prevent. The supremacy of righteous law is the safeguard of a free people.

While, therefore, we in the name of justice and of public safety demand that the law shall be sternly executed, we ought also to regard all combinations of men for whatever object or under whatsoever pretext, that are calculated to impair the efficiency of the laws, as an invasion of the province of government, and a menace to the rights of the people.

We see a marked illustration of this matter in the Knights of Labor and the practical workings of that system here in Louisiana. Whatever might be admissible among an educated class of laborers, the ordinary plantation laborer cannot for his own sake, nor for the sake of others, be safely trusted in the exercise of power in which he is made responsible to himself or to his lodge. In the conflict which is sure to arise between the capitalist and the ignorant and poor laborer, it is the latter who is certain to go to the wall. In the avoidance of the conflict is the true remedy.

Such a conflict has recently been precipitated with the most deplorable results. The colored laborers on the sugar plantations of Southern Louisiana have within a year past mostly organized as Knights of Labor. They were made to believe that they could control the labor market and dictate the price of labor. The crop this year was unusually large and the labor was pressing. The Knights made a demand for $1.25 to $2 50 per day which was refused. They struck in Terre Bonne Parish and other laborers were employed in their place. The new employes were white men. They were waylaid (presumably by discharged Knights) and four were shot. At once the authorities were appealed to, and the troops were called out to suppress an insurrection. Meantime a planter was shot by some one and the troops and sheriff's posse went to arrest the murderer. They found a company of Negro laborers, and because of a pretended or real fear that one of them was armed, the brave troops fired into them, killing four and wounding others. Meanwhile many sugar mills have stopped and multitudes of poor laborers are driven from their homes. Deplorable in many respects as is the condition of these Negro laborers, and vindictive and cruel as has often been the course pursued towards them, yet it remains true that but for the Knights of Labor these laborers would have had an exceptionally good year, and that their condition has been rendered far worse than it would be otherwise, if such an organization had not existed. During the war the Negro very wisely kept out of the conflict till his country called him to arms. He will show equal wisdom by keeping out of all combinations of men whose organizations are likely to be used to resist the supremacy of law.

New Orleans, La.

The pastor approached one young man, and urged him to come Monday night and seek the Lord, but he said he could not as he was to take another degree in some club or lodge. "Well," said the pastor, "come then Tuesday night." But this was impossible, as he was to take a degree in another concern that very night, and he is probably still "marching on" as he did not appear in church at all. This reminds me of one difference between now and fifty years ago. Then there were few associations outside of the church to attract attention. Now we have them by the score, taking men away from their wives and children as well as their religious duties. That they contribute to the multiplication of divorces, we have no doubt.—Rev. James Porter, D.D., in Zion's Herald.

A SPIRIT MEDIUM GIVES US AN ILLUSTRATION.

BY MRS. L. M. HOYT.

It is a question with some how this conflict with the "powers of darkness" will end, but to those who have faith in God, and are trusting him as their leader, there can be no doubt, for he has never "lost a battle." Some are saying, "I know not what to do, for those to whom we looked for counsel and advice have turned to the enemy's side, and are prophesying evil against us." But was not one of the twelve apostles, Judas, a devil? Did he not betray his Lord? Can we expect the church to be better and purer than when our blessed Jesus was here on earth?

It appears from the present "outlook" that, in the church of the United Brethren in Christ, a remnant of the tribe of Judas still remains. The "commission folly" has a Judas-look from first to last. Such false pretensions are daily brought to our notice, of the scheming, plotting, planning, wire-working!—and all for what? To open wide our doors to the monster of oath-bound secrecy. The plea is for "wealth and numbers." None say that it would be the means of saving one soul, or in any way advancing the spiritual interests in the church. Dare any say that getting members of the lodge into the church, adds one particle to her spiritual interests? I have traveled and observed widely, and I have never met one who advocated the lodge system, that gave any satisfactory evidence to my mind that they were really the children of God. They had a "form of godliness, but deny the power thereof;" Jesus says, "from such turn away."

I knew a noted spiritualist, said also to be a "free-lover," who organized a Sabbath-school. He had a "trance speaker," who often spoke for the instruction and edification of the school. He told the children to always believe what she told them, for when she was in a trance she always spoke the truth and nothing but the truth. One Sabbath she took up the lodge system, and gave it no quarters; told of its deception, its meanness; warned the young to beware of secret organizations; and, in fact, berated it in such a manner that the children looked upon it as a terrible system, indeed, and in their minds wondered why such a vile system was allowed to exist in a civilized land.

This brought the spiritualist into a sad dilemma, as he was a member of several different secret orders, and all knew it. He arose at the conclusion of the trance speech, and told the children that the medium was actuated by a lying spirit, and he was sorry to have to say to them that all she had said was untrue; not to believe a word of it. But some of them said to me afterwards, "I believe she told the truth, and I should have thought better of him if he had kept still."

Some of our church members and ministers, even bishops, too, have said that they were United Brethren and did not believe in secrecy, yet by vote and act they contradict their own statements. I fail to see how we can have any confidence in such men, who say one thing and do another. May God grant us a clear victory over the enemies of our beloved Zion. I believe he will.

MISSION FIELD THOUGHTS.

DEAR EDITOR:—Please allow me a few remarks as to a recent discussion in the Cynosure. Some years ago I received a letter from an old friend in California. I was hastening to hold an open air meeting among the natives in the bazaar and read the letter as I walked to the place. It was eight pages of foolscap, trying to prove, first, that the Christian Sabbath was a mistake; that we ought to go back to the Jewish time of reckoning and keep Saturday as a holy day. Next, the letter tried to prove that there is no hereafter for all sinners on earth; that after all the vile, devilish deeds which the base men of earth can commit have been done there is no retribution whatever.

I occasionally glanced up from the long letter to the masses of heathen about me. My heart sank as I saw that one who had been with me, a dear Christian comrade, and a really useful man in our campaigns against sin in the American army, was now turning his power of brain and heart to the discussion of those questions which "minister strife rather than godly edifying." I thought, What have these questions to do with pointing the masses about me from sin and superstition to the way of salvation in Christ?

As to the first question, the effort to get Christianity back into Judaism as regards the day of the week to be observed as Sabbath might as well be applied to getting us back into other Jewish dates and doings. It is about as sensible as a certain catch question which the Mohammedans try to use upon us in our bazaar preaching. They will come up with a meek, teachable look and ask, "Is Christ your teacher and example, and do you follow him in all things?" If the missionary is unwitting enough to say, "Yes," then the Moslem boldly asks, "Christ was circumcised,—why do you not follow his example in that?"

A number of Jewish ideas could just as well be fastened upon Christianity as the seventh day of the week. Romanism is a wonderful compound of Judaism and heathenism. We are taken into a grand spiritual dispensation; its days and signs are simple; and it is a great pity that confusing questions of this sort are brought before the people. We welcome foreign Christian papers to our foreign fields, and are glad to have such as will help us in our great work of evangelization among the English and the English-speaking natives of India, but just so far as such useless and misleading discussions are brought into the Christian papers of Europe and America, they limit their usefulness in these foreign mission fields. There are great, earnest, burning questions which must be urged; there are grand points of saving truth which must be continually put before the people. We can put all points of necessary truth before them without opening the columns of our papers for the direct teaching of error. An earnest evangelical minister will find his time so fully occupied in preaching God's law and Gospel that he will not find it useful to invite Jews and Universalists into his pulpit to sow their teachings. Our Christian papers should be as carefully guarded as our pulpits. Then God will bless them and they shall bring with rejoicing their sheaves to the garners of glory.

A MISSIONARY IN INDIA.

THANKSGIVING.

Oh, men! grown sick with toil and care,
Leave for awhile the crowded mart;
Oh, women! sinking with despair,
Weary of limb and faint of heart,
Forget your cares to-day, and come
As children back to childhood's home!

Follow again the winding rills;
Go to places where you went,
When climbing up the summer hills,
In their green lap you sat;
And softly leaned your head to rest
On Nature's calm and peaceful breast.

Walk through the sere and fading wood,
So lightly trodden by your feet
When all you knew of life was good,
And all your dream of life was sweet,
And let fond memory lead you back,
O'er youthful love's enchanted track.

Taste the ripe fruit of orchard boughs,
Drink from the mossy well once more:
Breathe fragrance from the crowded mows,
With fresh, sweet clover running o'er;
And count the treasuries at your feet,
Of silver rye and golden wheat.

Go sit beside the hearth again,
Whose circle once was glad and gay;
And if from out the precious chain
Some shining links have drooped away,
Then guard with tenderer heart and hand
The remnant of your household band.

Draw near the board with plenty spread,
And if in the accustomed place
You see the father's reverent head,
Or mother's patient, loving face,
Whate'er your life may have of ill,
Thank God that these are left you still.

Thank God for friends your life has known,
For every dear departed day,
The blessed past is safe alone—
God gives, but does not take away;
He only safely keeps above
For us the treasure that we love.

And sure I am that it is better to be sick, providing Christ comes to the bedside, and draws by the curtains and says, "Courage! I am thy salvation," than to be lusty and strong and never be visited by Christ.—Rutherford.

NO MORE PANTOMIME IN PROHIBITION.

The Boston Traveler giving an account of the Sons of Temperance at the time of the last session of the National Division says that in its forty-four years of existence it has taken in 2,250,000 people in America alone and now has 80,528 members. Allowing 50,000 to have died in those forty-four years (a rate of 7 a year per 1,000 on 160,000,) a little over 96 per cent of all who have joined the order have left it. Or during each year on an average, while 100 came in 96 went out.

Probably that is about the ordinary rates of the I. O. G. T. progress. Taking the history of that order in California from 1871 to 1881 when it was growing and very prosperous as compared with other States, it took in 68,334 members and let out 63,006, or 92½ went out for 100 who came in. Laterly it has lost all its new recruits and reduced its old membership beside to nearly one-half.

These two societies did nearly all the temperance work that was done from the year 1844 to 1874 and were by far the most energetic temperance societies up to that time. But they did not advance and keep up with the times nor meet the demands of progress. Like the old political parties of our country, they have had a glorious history; they wrought wonders and some miracles in their day.

But new, swift, well appointed, huge steamers have taken the place of the old sailing craft; the sewing machine has run out the tiresome thimble and hand stitcher; the steam harvester and thresher have superseded the scythe and sickle, and the work is better done and much more of it is accomplished.

So the W. C. T. U., the Y. W. C. T. U., the Prohibition club, the Gospel temperance meeting, the young men's clubs, the Band of Hope and the Demorest medal contests, the county and State conventions, and the new watchword of practical prohibition and woman's equality, have rendered the old scythes and sickles and hand rakes of temperance about like the obsolete grandpa lumber and furniture that is reverently stowed away in the garret.

The old ox-team and stage coach were of inestimable utility in their day, but it would be an idle waste of means and time to keep them up now, when so much better organizations are in useful operation and have absorbed all the best workers. The new systems, had they been tried forty years ago, would have worked much better than the old, but we did not know it. The writer for a long time believed with others that the awful failures were due to incompetency of leadership and it could be remedied. Now it appears beyond a doubt that the system was organically and fatally defective and the leadership incompetent as well; and now it is much more so.

The revenues of these old dying institutions, now expended to almost no purpose of the cause of temperance or prohibition, (utterly wasted in this State,) would amazingly help the work of the W. C. T. U., and the Prohibition party and their work among young and old. None of which it does now in any respect.

It may be said these institutions are schools, educators; they were so once and did a great work of education, being then the only temperance schools. The Band of Hope is to-day a better educator by far than they ever were, and it is entirely free from their objectionable features. It is educating both young and old too in the most effective manner. In these days we want ACTION among grown people after their schooling is over. All who desire the success of the home versus the dramshop, should plant themselves and the Lord's money they can spare in the societies that are in the field for the practical abolition of the great curse. The time for paper soldiers in this war has passed forever.—The Censor, Los Angeles, Cal.

ALEXANDER HAMILTON.

When New York ratified the Federal Constitution, the people of that State celebrated the event by a festival procession, in which was borne a flag with the portrait of Washington on one side and that of Hamilton on the other. The enthusiasm of the hour, which recognized these great men as foremost among the founders of the republic—as the men who knew how to build and save a State—has been justified by the political history of succeeding years, and especially by the fierce and bloody struggle of our own time. That we are to-day a united and powerful nation, and not the weak and hostile fragments of a once great republic, is owing to the triumph of those sentiments of nationality which Hamilton strove throughout his life to foster and strengthen.

To estimate aright Hamilton's greatness, we need to remember that while he was a many-sided man, and great in many different ways, as statesman, lawyer, financier, orator, writer and soldier, he was greatest in the successful solution of those difficult problems of civil government which most profoundly affect human welfare, but in respect to which men are most liable to err. While the science of political economy was in its infancy, he exhibited a mastery of its principles which placed him beside Adam Smith and Turgot. He saw, as with an unerring instinct, the kind of government best suited to the needs of a handful of people as they emerged from the war of Independence, and which would also prove adequate to the needs of the greatest of nations. Although he had never been in Europe, he was able to forecast the movements of European governments with a correctness that led Talleyrand to say of him, "He divined Europe."

In his lifetime, it was the fashion of his opponents, the State-rights men of that day, to call him a monarchist. His writings abundantly prove the falsity of this assertion. He was, above all things, a practical statesman, and never wasted an effort in attempts to establish a government unsuited to the genius of the people. But what he did believe in, and saw was essential to the very existence of the nation, was a strong central government, supreme in its own domain, springing from the people and acting directly upon them, and sufficiently expansive to meet the wants of a continental republic. To establish such a government, he exerted to the utmost all the powers of his richly-gifted nature. This was the great work of his life; and for this work he is entitled to rank, not merely among the greatest statesmen of his time, but among the great benefactors of the race.

No man ever labored more diligently to produce an enlightened public opinion. His tongue and pen were never idle. He had an abiding faith in the ability and disposition of the people to form correct judgments on public affairs when properly instructed. As a political controversialist, he had no equal. His bitterest enemy, Aaron Burr, said of him: "If you put yourself on paper with him, you are lost." Jefferson thought that Madison was the only person competent to measure swords with him. He was not a literary artist like Burke. His power as a writer consisted in the clearness of his statements and the strength of his arguments. He persuaded men, not by stirring their passions or charming their fancies, but by convincing their judgments.

No adequate report of Hamilton's speeches has been preserved, from which to judge of his powers as an orator; but from the testimony of the ablest of his contemporaries, and from the effect which his speeches produced, we know that he is entitled to rank among the great orators of the world. His greatest efforts as an orator were put forth in the Constitutional Convention at Poughkeepsie. When that convention of sixty-five members assembled, forty-six were opposed to the adoption of the constitution, and only nineteen were in favor of it. The opposition to it was headed by Governor Clinton, one of the most astute and influential politicians of his time. Some of the ablest debaters in the State were arrayed on the same side, and at their head was Melancthon Smith, a most acute dialectitian. Day after day the great debate went on, the speeches of Hamilton filling men with wonder at their power, and melting them to tears with their pathos; but on the test votes the majority against the federalists was always two to one. Finally, Melancthon Smith, overpowered by the arguments of Hamilton, gave up his opposition and one after another of his followers joined the federalists, till on the final vote there was a majority of three in favor of the constitution. We know of no triumph of oratory in modern times surpassing this.—Henry Cabot Lodge.

WYCLIFFE AS A SOCIAL REFORMER.

Prof. Minto's story in the English Illustrated Magazine, "The Mediation of Ralph Hardelot," introduces its readers to some of the economical and social questions that pressed upon the English people five centuries ago. The ideas of Wycliffe are presented in the following extract:

"A more peaceful scene could not have been conceived. It was a vision of happy and prosperous industry—nature smiling on the labors of man and backing up his efforts with genial aid—Production and Exchange vocal in the beat of the flail and the rumble of the wagon, all sounding musical in the soft, warm air. And yet that mysterious, impalpable atmosphere, the common thought of man, was charged with dangerous electricity. A mighty storm was gathering that would shake every timber in the framework of society. The agents of revolution were abroad.

"Among these agents must be reckoned the disciples of Wycliffe, of whom Ralph Hardelot was one of the most ardent and enterprising. Not that Wycliffe was a revolutionary in the sense that he counselled the poor to rise in armed rebellion against the rich. He had no quarrel with the feudal system except that lords and knights did not live up to the strict conception of their duty in the commonwealth, which was to prevent wrong-doing and protect laboring men in the exercise of their industry, guarding them against fraud and robbery, against the subtleties of knaves and the oppression of strong-handed enemies, foreign and domestic. His aims were not directly political. It was a religious reformation that he labored after, with an ultimate view to the banishment of dissension and disorder and corruption from the realm, and the establishment of a reign of universal peace and charity, contented labor of each in his appointed station, and brotherly love among all. As a means to this great end he desired first of all the purification of the church and the religious orders by a return to the simplicity of apostolic doctrine, and the purity and poverty of apostolic life as set forth in the New Testament.

"Such was Wycliffe's scheme for the purification of the church, and, though it seemed to affect the church alone, it is not difficult to see how it brought him at once into contact and conflict with the political system. It is possible that it was the political problem of the relation of the kingdom to the papacy, on which he was consulted as a learned doctor, that started Wycliffe on his career as a reformer. But be this as it may, his theories, when fully developed and pushed ardently into practice, had much more wide-reaching political consequences. All the servants of Christ, he held, all ministers of religion, all teachers and exemplars of the teaching of Holy Writ, should subsist on voluntary alms; worldly possessions stifled and choked their spiritual usefulness. Now in his time a fourth, or even a third, of all the land of England was held by the church and religious orders. What was to be done with it if its present holders were dispossessed? Wycliffe proved by elaborate argument that secular authority not only might lawfully take possession of all this wealth, but was bound in duty so to do, men of religion holding it contrary to the rule of Christ. But for whose use should it be appropriated? On this point also Wycliffe's teaching was clear and emphatic. All the worldly wealth of the church and the orders, beyond what sufficed for a simple maintenance, belonged of right to the poor; the men of religion were but the proctors of the poor in their tenure of it, and were acting as fraudulent trustees when they spent it on sumptuous buildings, rich fare, large retinues, or coarse sensuality, while the poor wandered houseless, ate and slept with the swine, tottered about with naked sides and shaking lips and hands. He specified two uses to which the wealth of 'worldly clerks and feigned religious' might be turned. Partly it should be given to secular lords, who should in return give to the poor protection and equitable government. And partly should it be seized to meet the expenses of just and necessary wars. Wycliffe did not hesitate to urge that for this national purpose shrines should be stripped, and the waste treasure hung on stocks and stones used for the defence of the realm.

"It was this last doctrine that brought Wycliffe and the poor priests, whom he sent forth as models of a true Christian priesthood, into vital contact with the practical politics of a time when all classes of the laity were groaning under the burden of unprecedentedly heavy taxation. Especially the poorest, who had hitherto escaped direct taxation, were likely to receive this new gospel with gladness. Wycliffe's heresies on excommunication and transubstantiation and other points of church doctrine might interest theologians only; here was a doctrine that the poorest understanding could grasp—a basis from which his disciples could act with powerful effect on the masses of the people.

"It must not be supposed that all the agitators of the time, whose teaching corresponded more or less with Wycliffe's, were direct disciples of his. The heresy was in the air; what he chiefly did was to furnish it with a reasoned foundation in Scripture and the dicta of the fathers and doctors of the church."

KNIGHTS OF THE GOLDEN EAGLE.

About once every three months we receive from Jay Dee Barnes, of Philadelphia, a half column of matter intending to boost a secret society called Knights of the Golden Eagle, of which he seems to be "boss." We might say for Jay Dee and the Knights of the Golden Eagle that while we belong to two or three societies we are not so much stuck on them as to do much free advertising in favor of new ones. The largest number of secret societies are organized to give a few fellows a good easy place with little work and big pay. We do not have the same idea of secret societies that brother Crawford has,who regards them as the very incarnation of evil, for we think much of their work is, like dancing, more foolish than sinful. For example the great high-sounding titles bestowed on the officers of some societies, and the many deaf and dumb signs used in the lodge room would better become children than full-grown men. The man known on the street as old "Tim" Flinigan must be addressed in the secret society room as Most Noble and August Potentate, or by some equally bombastic and ridiculous title. When we join another secret society, we want it to be one where the presiding officer is called simply President or Chairman, instead of Your Exalted Highness, and where the Secretary must not labor under the title Most Notable and Illustrious Scribe. Secret societies have done good, no doubt, but they are becoming so numerous that they threaten to become a nuisance. So, Mr. Jay Dee Barnes, we don't want to become a Knight of the Golden Eagle, and we wouldn't advise any of our readers to join nor will we give you any more free puffs.—Western Press.

OUR BOSTON LETTER.

AN EMINENT BOSTON CLERGYMAN EXPLODES A VERBAL ANARCHIST BOMB.

The topic generally discussed in Boston pulpits, last Sunday, was anarchy, and, as everybody expected, the action of the courts in condemning the Chicago anarchists, and the ultimate fate of four of them, was commended as being just. But there was one exception. There was one doctor of divinity who, on that day, greatly extended his already widely spread reputation in standing out alone as a sympathizer with the anarchical faction. Whilst such men as Drs. James Freeman Clarke, Bartol, and Davis were condemning the unfortunate bomb-throwers and indorsing the faithfulness of the courts in meting out well-deserved punishment; while these eminent clergymen were doing just what they probably thought every other preacher discussing the subject was doing, Rev. Dr. A. A. Miner, the great whiskey antagonist, was doing just the opposite.

The notice which had been given in the papers that Dr. Miner would speak on anarchism, drew a large house. Had the question been put to the audience as to what his opinions would be concerning the anarchists, no doubt, the unanimous reply would have been—denunciatory. But when he announced that the fundamental ideas of Albert Parsons were the same as his own, that elite gathering received a shock from which it will not soon recover. It may forget the shock, but not the speaker, nor his unexpected utterances. Before the discourse ended many made a hasty retreat.

In the course of his remarks the doctor asserted that Paul was an anarchist, and that he preached anarchy when in Ephesus. Anyone who attempted to change the existing condition of things would be likened to the men recently executed. For a moment the speaker imagined himself and hearers in Galilee as the enemies of Christ, the Pharisees and officers of Judaism. Christ comes along and denounces them as they deserve. They think their government to be complete when this disturber of the peace, the Christ, comes and denounces them, and turns things upside down, shows them their hypocrisy, for which they put him to death. Going further, the speaker emphatically declared that the simple truth, the simple words of a reformer will never break up a community that is thoroughly organized; error alone will accomplish it. The errors of the world causes anarchy—it is its essence. It is easy to make parallel the cases of Christ and those executed men in breaking down things established. The anarchists, he also declared, in this country met with prohibition of their right to free speech. In their passion, is it a wonder they threw bombs? Comparing this with a country where men cannot speak that which is true without meeting the established order of things, the speaker said that the trouble is we have anarchy in our laws.

I would like to add, just here, that the city ordinance of Boston in prohibiting free Gospel speech on the Common is nothing less than anarchy against constitutional right, and fully confirms the charge of Mr. Miner that we have anarchy in our laws.

That Mr. Miner's remarks will be criticized by his brother ministers and others cannot be doubted. Right or wrong, however, he has certainly gathered himself up out of the rut of catering to the popular opinion of the masses, who depend altogether on newspaper versions of the Chicago trouble and the doctrine of the anarchists. Dr. Miner has opened a new page on which the people must read, blended, yes, interwoven with error and passion, truths—facts which it must acknowledge—anarchy in the laws of this nation, which must be condemned and extirpated, for it is as dangerous to the constitution, the rights of the people, as the Parsons's anarchism may be to our laws. D. P. MATHEWS.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

The talk of the Capital is the conversation between Mr. Lamar, Secretary of the Interior, and Mr. Sparks, Commissioner of the General Land Office, which has culminated in a caustic letter from the Cabinet Minister to his subordinate, in which it is stated, after citing the differences of their opinions on legal questions involved in certain railroad land grants, that one or the other of the two officials concerned must forthwith resign his position. Public opinion appears to sustain the action of Secretary Lamar, because according to the decisions of the United States Supreme Court, his construction of the land laws is clearly right, and the Commissioner's radically wrong. Whenever Lamar would reverse Sparks, which was a common occurrence, the latter would file a long protest, reviewing the case and attempting to convince the Secretary of his error. So it finally became simply a question of official subordination. It is generally believed that Mr. Lamar's letter was inspired from the White House—the administration being anxious to unload Sparks on account of his unpopular Western land policy. It is evident that the Land Commissioner will have to go, and that quickly. He is held in such aversion by many Congressmen that they will not enter his office unless they know he is absent. Assistant Commissioner Stockslager and Geo. M. Julian, Surveyor General of New Mexico, both Indiana Democrats, are spoken of as successor of Sparks.

It is well understood that Postmaster General Vilas is to be the new Secretary of the Interior, and that Don M. Dickinson, of Michigan, will fill the other vacancy. It would appear to be the President's purpose to give the West two Cabinet members with the view of strengthening his party, where it is known to be weakest. It is now conceded by all that the New York election means Mr. Cleveland's certain renomination by the Democrats, while the Republicans may name any one of half a dozen candidates– the signs of the times not pointing to any particular man; however, Mr. Blaine's friends still claim that he is the Republican favorite.

We are not yet through with our Centennials, though there have been a number within the past dozen years. The next one will be observed in New York City, April 30, 1889, in commemoration of the Centennial of the inauguration of Gen. Washington as President of the United States. Centennials from their frequency are losing much of popular enthusiam and attractiveness, still I think that at New York there should be a celebration worthy alike of the noble founders of the greatest of Republics, and of the progress and patriotism of the national character. The illustrious Washington will forever loom up as one of the grandest and most colossal figures of history—the pride of his own countrymen, and the central object of the world's admiration and veneration—his fame growing brighter with the fleeting years.

Senator Cockrell's committee to investigate the methods of conducting the business of the Federal Departments, will make a supplemental report, favoring the erection of additional Government buildings; at present the clerks are crowded together in such a manner as to seriously impair their efficiency. The Government is now compelled to pay quite a large rental, and it would prove a paying investment if the recommendation of the committee should be approved. *

REFORM NEWS.

FROM THE GENERAL AGENT.

THE OHIO STATE MEETING.

NEW CONCORD, O., Nov. 18, 1887.

Years have elapsed since I visited New Concord, Ohio, the first time. Faces have changed and so, slightly, is the town itself; but reform principles seem to have grown and strengthened. Unlike many other villages the saloon and lodge destroyers have no "local habitation," and but very few supporters in the community; while Prohibitionists and open advocates of "charity, brotherly love and truth" are numerous and outspoken. The seed sown has grown, and the places of veterans are already occupied in part by those upon whom the mantles of the departed have fallen. Dr. McClurkin and his estimable family are held in grateful remembrance for their good works, and followed by the prayers and benizons of sympathizing hearts to their field of labor in Wahoo, Kans.; while Bro. Faris, walking in the footsteps of his predecessors, is caring for the sheep and lambs of the Covenanter fold. Dr. Paul, whose presence is suggestive of stability, independence and stern integrity, has left the supervision of Muskingum College to others, but retains his hold upon the confidence and affections of the people. His address of welcome to the Ohio State convention, to the town and college chapel some years ago, was a gem and model in its line which I well remember, and the happy response by Dr. Wishart was creditable to cause and occasion.

A late train prevented my attendance on the opening exercises of this annual session of the Ohio State Christian Association, but I am told the address of welcome and response were fitting to the occasion. The circle of eminent men was fairly represented by Dr. Spencer, Dr. Lytle, Dr. Paul, Pres. Irons, Revs. Coleman, Smith, Wylie, Faris, Cannon, S. A George, Thompson, Profs. Gray, Paden, and other godly men and women. The local attendance was good and increased steadily from the beginning. Every attention was paid to the comfort of delegates from abroad, and the entire expenses of the convention easily raised, with a margin sufficient to pay expenses of Dr. Spencer to the Prohibition conference in Chicago on the 30th inst. The committee chosen to attend the conference were: Pres. F. M. Spencer, D.D., Rev. J. P. Lytle, D.D., Rev. E. Thompson, Rev. J. M. Faris and Prof. T. H. Paden.

Rev. Coleman's address was warmly and worthily endorsed by a vote requesting a copy for publication. Pres. C. A. Blanchard's two addresses were among the happiest and most effective of his labors, and W. B. Stoddard preached sound doctrine joined with many practical suggestions; while to myself was awarded a patient and attentive hearing. On the whole the meeting was a success, and all the friends present felt that much good had been accomplished. Secretary S. A. George will doubtless give a detailed report including resolutions and other official action of the body, looking to plans and work for the coming year. J. P. STODDARD.

A GRAND SERIES OF MEETINGS IN IOWA.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—After the annual meeting at College Springs, Rev. B. W. Coe, the seceded Mason, who came from northeastern away across to southwestern Iowa to bear his testimony against the lodge system, came with me to Henry county, and we began reform work by lecturing at Wayne. It was a rainy night and the congregation was not large,but the meeting was a good one. Some thought they had never heard the invalidity of the Masonic covenant so clearly and forcibly shown before.

When the fact that the covenants of Masonry are not legally or morally binding,and that it is not dishonorable to wholly repudiate them, is clearly and generally shown, the bottom will fall out of Masonry and the power of the craft to "bull-doze" those whose consciences revolt against the wickedness of the lodge will be gone.

On the Sabbath Bro. Coe preached at Wayne and I went with Bro. Fry, the pastor, and preached at a country place six or eight miles from Washington. On Monday morning we went to Ainsworth to arrange for a lecture there. We saw some of the elders of the United Presbyterian church and by their advice secured a place and fixed upon a time. We then went to Winfield where we had arranged the Saturday before and Bro. Coe and myself lectured for two evenings. The attendance of business men and Masons was quite general. The pastor of the M. E. church treated us very courteously and generously offered to aid us in giving notice of the lectures.

From Winfield we went to Wyman and lectured in the Covenanter church. There was a large attendance and an interesting meeting. The Covenanters of Wyman and Rev. Mr. Black, their pastor,held a high place in my esteem before this meeting, which served to intensify my appreciation of their nobility of character.

Our next meeting was in the Evangelical Swedish Lutheran church of the Augustana Synod, Rev. Mr. Franzen, pastor. This meeting was well attended. We gave them Freemasonry contrasted with the Kofong lodge, the leading secret society of the "Dark Continent."

Our next meeting was at Ainsworth. Here the lodge was well represented in the audience; and it pleased the Lord to gird both Bro. Coe and myself for the battle. The fruit of this meeting, I doubt not, will abide. The pastor of the United Brethren church was most hearty in his congratulations and thanks at the conclusion of the meeting.

From Ainsworth we came to Salem. Thomas Cooper took us over twenty miles in his carriage across the country, carried us around while we were there,and brought us back when our work was done

Bro. Coe preached at Salem and I at Chestnut Hill on the Sabbath. On Monday night we lectured at Cedar Run. The attendance was good. The following night we lectured at Salem. Both of these lectures were in the meeting houses of the Society of Friends. The next day we returned to Wayne. The day following we went to Morning Sun and called upon Rev. Mr. Trumbull, the corresponding secretary of the Iowa Association. We then went to Linton, three miles distant, and visited Rev. Mr. Robb.

The next morning Bro.Coe took his departure and I, my soul greatly refreshed by my interviews with brethren Trumbull and Robb, went forth to my labor as State agent. While at Salem, friend Gibson, Miles, Pidgeon, Foss and others subscribed and donated to the funds of the Association.

Dear friends, will you not pray and work with Christ to turn men away from the darkness of the lodge to the light of the Gospel. The lodge must not be permitted to dominate and corrupt the church. The real equality of American citizens before the law, which is so seriously menaced by the lodge system, must be maintained. Let all who are for Christ against the idolatry and infidelity of secretism come to his help. We need your prayers, your co-operation, and your financial aid in carrying forward this great work. The church will be corrupted and liberty will give place to anarchy or despotism unless we succeed. We therefore call on every lover of Christ and of his country to aid in carrying forward this reform. C. F. Hawley.

A WEEK IN THE CRESCENT CITY.

THE GREAT CHARITY HOSPITAL AND LOTTERY—THE COLORED STATE FAIR.

New Orleans, La., Nov. 12, 1887.

Dear Cynosure:—I returned to New Orleans on Monday the 8th. On Tuesday I visited several ministers and the Great Charity Hospital of this city. This is one of the largest institutions of the kind in the country. It receives among other sources of income, $40,000 from the Louisiana State Lottery. It was one of the reasons given for chartering this grand scheme of robbery, that thereby this hospital could be sustained. Louisiana not only places herself in opposition to the moral sense and legal enactments of every other State in the Union, but helps to demoralize their citizens and cheat them out of their earnings. Next to the lodges and the liquor traffic, there is not a more demoralizing influence or grosser system of iniquity than this lottery business. Efforts have been made from time to time to prevent the United States mails from being used for lottery purposes, but the forces here have proved too strong. Notwithstanding the badness of their cause, Gens. Beauregard and Early were regarded as brave and gallant commanders. Their fame, such as it was, has been badly smirched by their connection with this abominable business. It would be better that the walls of this great building should crumble into ruins, than that this iniquity should go on under the patronage of the State. It would be a great mistake to suppose that the business men of this city do not know that this lottery system is not only morally corrupt, but a great financial drain. A leading manufacturer and business man in this city told me that he regarded it as one of the greatest evils with which the people of the State are afflicted.

The Hospital in itself, of course, is a most beneficent institution. I was greatly pleased with the admirable order and neatness, as well as the great number of beds for patients. I witnessed while there an admirable surgical operation—the operation for cataract. A man totally blind—one eye being destroyed, and the lens of the other perfectly opaque. The eye was opened and the lens taken out. As the patient lay on the table, he was asked if he could see certain things, and described them accurately.

Next day I went to the Colored State Fair, now being held at the old Spanish Fort. Of the fair I will speak further on. I was accompanied by my friend, Mr. F. J. Davidson, and introduced to a large number of ministers from different parts of the State. Most of them were Freemasons, but some were strongly opposed to the lodge.

Among others I met a leading colored physician of this city. He told me that he was paying dues in twenty-two secret orders, and it cost him for dues alone $50 per month. I asked him if it paid. He said it paid him; for he was the physician for all these societies, and got their patronage. I asked if he thought it an advantage to the members generally. He said, "No; it was a great extravagance and loss." He said he was a Christian, and I asked if he thought the societies promotive of Christianity. He said No; that for a long time he had known that their influence was against the welfare of the churches. He then went on to say so much against them that I felt I was altogether left behind in my opposition.

On Wednesday night I spoke in St. Mark's Baptist church, Rev. H. Davis, pastor. This is the church of which Bro. Davidson is a member, and his influence has been to lead to a better understanding of the secrecy question. The church has a debt resting on them, and are making great efforts to get it removed.

On Thursday morning I spoke, by invitation of Pres. Hitchcock, to the some 350 students of Straight University. There was excellent attention, and I had the approval of some if not all of the professors. On Thursday night I lectured on the lodge system in Rev. H. C. Green's church. The congregation was not large, but attentive and sympathetic.

On Friday I went again to the State Fair. It was "Education Day," and the schools would make their display. Spanish Fort, where the fair is held, is a popular resort on Lake Ponchartrain, seven miles from the city. It has a rival about two miles away at West End, a newer and somewhat more elegantly-kept resort. Each has a steam railway running out from the city, and both are much patronized. At Spanish Fort there is a large exposition building, an opera house, a large hotel, and many other structures, which surround the really nice, but somewhat dilapidated grounds. From the top of the high tower there was a magnificent view of the lake with its shipping, and the city in the distance.

The day was perfect and there was a far larger attendance than any previous time. The schools were there in force. The fair on the whole has been but a moderate success. Both the place and time were most unfortunate: the place because it is inaccessible by roads, and the time because of the great pressure to secure the cotton and sugar on the plantations. The schools made a fine show; that of machinery and agricultural implements was good; but in stock and farm products there was a lamentable failure. In these the quality exhibited was good, but the quantity very meager. I saw some of the longest sugar cane I had ever seen. The colored universities all had displays, except Leland, and their performances in the opera house were most creditable. All the leading educators were there, and Ex-Gov. Pinchback was a conspicuous figure. It is hardly probable that the fair will pay expenses. Had it been in February it might have been a much greater success. I go out to Terre Bonne to spend the Sabbath. H. H. Hinman.

SHALL SOUTHWESTERN MISSOURI BE EMANCIPATED?

Carthage, Mo., Nov. 15, 1887.

Editor Cynosure:—A few words may be of interest to your many readers. The Missouri campaign is well under way. First came the Princeton meeting, which we trust will bear much fruit many days hence. The meetings at Dadeville were enthusiastic and a strong delegation accompanied us to Greenfield. The stronghold of Masonry is in southwest Missouri. Mr. Wood Kirby, an old soldier and dispatch-bearer for General Lyon and Fremont, a brave man who had smelled powder for free speech in years agone, piloted our craft; and A. C. Patterson, J. W. Thompson, Canady, Contrell, and other staunch friends stayed through the meetings. Seldom has that old court-house had such enthusiastic audiences, as truths, strange and startling, were thundered from behind that bar. Much interest was aroused and the cause of liberty given a new impetus.

At Carthage large and intelligent audiences gathered in the Opera Hall and listened eagerly, and many for the first time, to the discussion of oath-bound systems of despotism and infidelity. Many expressed hearty sympathy for the work, and with such men as Rev. J. K. Glassford, Bro. Benjamin, and scores of free men and women to back it up with their prayers and influence, it is only the beginning of better days. Bro. Glassford had done a grand work in preparing the way.

After Bro. Stoddard left I went west from Carthage and found Bro. Wilbur F. Haughawout, Rev. James Weaver, Bro. Milton and other warm friends, and have brought the cause before four different audiences in as many places, holding last night to a good audience in Oronogo. There have been good audiences, good order and good attention all around.

Last night the craft were out in full force. One poor fellow lost his jewel, much to the discomfiture of the fraternity, and the amusement and edification of the audience. This morning the conductor on the Frisco train gave Bro. Haughawout a sound cursing and abusing for reading the letters on his Knight Templar's charm. He was very profane and abusive and even vulgar in his language, entirely forgetting his duties and deportment as a gentleman and servant of the public. He was very prodigal of his threats against me, though I said not a word till I left his train at Carthage, and then I told him how he had transcended his office as conductor, and that he was only a living exponent of his miserable system.

I have sold a dozen lodge expositions in and around Oronogo, and the craft are stirred at the wholesale exposition of their Christless religion and anti-republican organization. We look for a strong meeting to-night. May God give us a glorious victory, and may the day not be far distant when free speech will be all that is meant by that word. Will the friends everywhere pray for southwestern Missouri and for its emancipation from lodgism. We are listing the names of many free men who receive the truth gladly. But more anon. M. N. Butler.

Correspondence.

AMONG THE NEW YORK COLLEGES.

Rochester, N. Y., Nov. 17, 1887.

Editor Christian Cynosure:—Last Thursday I visited Clinton, a village of 2,200. Last summer they celebrated the centennial of its settlement. President Cleveland and his wife were present. He lived here years ago. His sister, Miss Rose, is a graduate of Holton Female Seminary. This village has three such institutions: the Huntington, Hawley and Holton Seminaries. The latter is the largest. Hamilton College is located here. It was founded in 1812. Rev. Henry Darling, D. D., is president, and there are thirteen professors in the faculty. Prof. Peters is perhaps the greatest astronomer in America. This college is unique in that it is purely classical. They have no preparatory department, and one object is kept steadily in view—to give the students a thorough classical training. Last year they had 185 students. Some of the brightest lights in the Presbyterian church have gone out of this institution. Herrick Johnson, Robinson, the Orientalist, Joel Parker, Albert Barnes, A. T. Pierson, Theodore W. Dwight of the Columbia College Law School, Chas. W. Warner, editor of Harper's, Senator Joseph R. Hawley, and Prof. Norton of Cincinnati University, a first honor man in this college and a German University, are among the alumni. The have a beautiful campus of thirty acres, a number of buildings, a large library, aparatus, observatory, etc. Their available money-endowment amounts to $300,000. About $1,000,000 has been donated at different times, but not all is of present value.

The president very kindly invited me to address the students on Friday at 12 M. Out of 140 students present this week, over 100 were present. Dr. Darling invited me to stay and preach in the college the next Sabbath, but a previous appointment prevented my accepting. The door is left open for the future.

I next stopped at Syracuse, a city of about 80,000, and soon completed arrangements for addressing the students of Syracuse University on the morning of the 22d inst. The editor of the Syracuse Journal gave place for a column article on our reform; and he wrote a flattering editorial on my work last week and this. I also wrote an article for the Standard, another daily, which the editor took under review. Both editors were quite shy at first. They thought I represented a political party bearing the name of National Reform, which held a convention in Syracuse not long since, to which but one man came. But when the matter was explained to them they were very cordial.

Sabbath evening I preached in the United Presbyterian church of Sterling Valley, Rev. A. W. Lytle, pastor. This is a congregation of 197. The night was dark, but the house was well filled. Monday morning I took the train for Rochester, where I called on the editor of the Democrat and Chronicle, the leading Republican paper. He very kindly agreed to print an article for us. It appeared Tuesday morning. On Monday evening I lectured in the United Presbyterian church of Cuylerville, Rev. John Rippey, D. D., pastor. The rain and thick darkness, a law suit in town, and a concert in the Genesee Normal School, three miles away, conspired to make our audience small. I was interested in the salt well in the village, which yields thirty barrels a day. The great shaft at Pifford, three miles away, is the wonder of the country. It is sixteen by twenty-four feet, and eleven hundred feet deep. At this depth there is a vein of pure salt one hundred feet deep and underlying the whole country. The salt supply here is practically inexhaustible. The shaft and works cost $3,600,000. The railroad cannot supply them with cars enough to carry away the salt. J. M. Foster.

GOOD WORDS FOR THE EDITOR WHILE HE IS AWAY.

During my recent tour of Wisconsin I found some radical friends of reform. An Apostle says, "Hath not God chosen the poor of this world?" etc. Captain Wm. Wilson of Menomonee is an exception to this rule. I spent two nights in his palatial home on the high bank of the Red Cedar, overlooking his great lumber mills, whose constant hum is the last sound you hear at night and the first to awaken you in the morning. He has been one of the strongest financial supporters of the anti-secret cause in the State, and his pastor, Bro. W. W. Ames, sent the first dollar to Dr. Blanchard when he proposed to start the Cynosure, an honor worthy to be inscribed on Bro. Ames's tombstone when he dies. Captain Wilson venerates Dr. Blanchard, as a leader in reform, more than any living man. He declares that he puts more radical, undiluted truth into the Cynosure editorials than he finds any where outside of the Bible. A. S. Hammond of Eau Claire, a successful lumberman, entertains the same high opinion of Dr. Blanchard, though he never saw him. He has been reading the Cynosure for years, and says its editorials strike bedrock with a clearer ring than any paper he has found.

Robert Pinkerton, a successful farmer near Waupacca, feels that the Cynosure is the only reform paper that cuts down to the root of the cancer of secretism, which, more than any other evil, is endangering the body politic. He thinks our national reform movement does not lay the axe hard enough to the root of this evil of secret societies. I do not know the practice of our lecturers in the East, but it is my habit at most places to warn the people against this danger as well as others. It is my conviction that the movement can never be successful if this important truth is left out. As Bro. T. P. Robb of Sharon, Iowa, once said, "May God deliver us from a Religious Amendment administered by Freemasons," or any who have sworn supreme allegiance to another authority than King Jesus.

For this reason our movement must recognize the National Christian Association as an indispensible ally. And I am glad to know that it is so regarded, especially by friends in the West. And I am glad to find so many who appreciate the faithful efforts of Dr. Blanchard and his co-workers in holding the anti-secret movement to radical lines.

During the coldest days of '84, I was at Olathe, Kansas, and called on Mrs. John P. St. John. She was seated by the base-burner with a pile of papers by her side, but I noticed the Cynosure in her lap, and remarked, "I see you read the Cynosure."

"Oh, yes," she replied, "I do love to read Dr. Blanchard's editorials." May he live yet many years to wield that incisive, fluent pen, and to hold us steady to the line of radical reform.

MARKS OF THE TRUE CHURCH.

EDITOR CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE:—Rev. A. T. Pierson, D. D., delivered an address before the Convention of Christian Workers in New York city last September on "The Ideal Church." Five distinguishing marks were given:

1. She is evangelical. The oracles of God have been committed to her. The truth is to be faithfully kept, vindicated, promulgated and applied. The church is the pillar and ground of truth.

2. She is evangelistic. To her the command has been given, "Go ye into all the world and preach the Gospel to every creature." As Dr. Duff used to say, "the church must be evangelical, that she may be evangelistical." "God be merciful unto us and bless us, and cause his face to shine upon us, that thy way may be known upon earth, thy saving health among all nations." Home and foreign missions are in a measure realizing the fulfillment of this prayer.

3. She is educative. A part of her commission is, "Teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded." The church is the divinely appointed agent of reformation. She stands upon the broad platform of the first and second reformations. She holds up, not the elastic cord of human expediency, but the golden mete wand of divine revelation. She speaks the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth. She shuns not to declare the whole counsel of God, whether men will hear or forbear.

4. She will not tolerate caste. The modern church is made up of cliques. Between them there is a great gulf fixed. They are as far apart as the upper and lower caste in India. This ought not so to be. Until it is cast out the Holy Spirit cannot do many mighty works of grace within her. "Behold how good and how pleasant it is for brethren to dwell together in unity."

5. She is free. The masses will not enter a church where the pews are rented and held by the members. Dr. Pierson had a very pleasant congregation in Detroit. Their church was all they could wish; but the rented pews kept out the non-church goers. God came down in mercy and burned their church. While rebuilding they worshiped in the Opera House. From the first it was filled to overflowing. When they went back to the new church the pews were rented and the outsiders would not follow them. In his present charge, the Bethany Church of Philadelphia, the seats are free and they uniformly have a large audience. The Gospel must be free.

PITH AND POINT.

SECRETISM AND ANARCHY.

One of the fundamental evils I see in secretism is its temptation to crime. Shield unsanctified human nature from the light, and what evil will it not perpetrate? In the darkness men can (and do) have fellowship with the devil; but only in the light can we have fellowship with God. "If we walk in the light as he is in the light," we have fellowship with the Father and Son and his people (1 John 1: 3-7). If our country is to be saved from anarchy (which, I think, is Masonry gone to seed—"murder and treason not excepted"), the true and strong light of heaven must be turned in upon the dark conclaves of evil.—D. C. MARTIN, Princeton, Ind.

A GOOD PLACE FOR HARD HITTING.

I am an out-and out opponent of all these unholy leagues, and in this honey-combed country of secretism one can put in some tremendous hits Already in our presbytery I have some enemies, but I am endeavoring to deserve Luther's encomium, "He never feared the face of man." If I can help you any I shall be glad.—W. J. A., Lehigh, Ind. Ter.

COULD NOT SERVE TWO MASTERS.

I was an Odd-fellow for years, but found I could not serve two masters. Praise the Lord, my motto now is, "Jesus only." I am very much pleased with the paper, and wish it could be placed in every Christian family. I have given special advice to my family to take care of every paper, and when we have read it to send it to some one. God bless you. Yours thankfully.—S. R. K., Fort Smith, Ark.

BIBLE LESSON.

STUDIES IN THE NEW TESTAMENT.

LESSON X.—Dec. 4.—Parable of the Sower.—Matt. 13: 1-9.

GOLDEN TEXT.—The seed is the Word of God.—Luke 7:11.

[Open the Bible and read the lesson.]

From Peloubet's Notes.

WHY JESUS TAUGHT BY PARABLES. The reason is given in verses 11-15, following this lesson. His object was so to veil the truth that it might be received by those who, if they saw, would not perceive, and, if they heard, would not understand, lest they should be converted; i. e., who were determined not to receive the truth, since its acceptance would have required repentance and a change of life.—Abbott. Did he speak in parables because he did not wish them to know and to enjoy? Everything the reverse. But he was aware that, in consequence of the inveteracy of their prepossessions, they could not, in the first instance, see "the secret of the kingdom" wi hout being repelled in spirit, and confirmed in their dissent and dislike. He wished, therefore, that they should not "see." But, at the same time, he graciously wished that they should "look," and keep "looking," so that they might, if possible, get such a glimpse of the inner glory as might fascinate their interest and attention, and by and by disarm their prejudices, so that they might with safety be permitted to "see."—Morison.

"Behold a sower went forth to sow." The expression implies that the sower, in the days of our Saviour, lived in a hamlet, or village, as all these farmers now do, to guard against robbers. They go forth into the open country, where the path passes through the cultivated land, where there are no fences, where thorns grow in clumps all around, where the rocks peep out in places through the scanty soil and hard by are patches extremely fertile.—Thomson, Land and Book, 1: 116

The Sower designates: 1. Jesus Christ, who came forth from the Father and heaven to sow the good seed in this evil world. 2. The Apostles who, taught by Jesus, and under the influence of the Spirit, scattered over the then known world the truths of the kingdom of God. 3. All who go forth to preach or teach, in public or in private, the truths of the Word of God.

The Good Seed is the Word of God (Luke 8: 11), the spiritual truths which God has revealed to men in various ways, but especially by his Son Jesus Christ.—P. It includes all spiritual truth concerning the kingdom of heaven, whether spoken, as by Christ and his Apostles, or written, as in the New Testament, and in books of interpretation and of spiritual applicatian. All spiritual life depens on a Divine Seed sown in the heart by the Divine Sower. The life of the Seed depends on, first, receiving it; second, rooting it; third, cultivating it.—Abbott.

1. The wayside hearer hears the Word, but does not understand it, on account of thoughtless, spiritual stupidity, arising not so much from want of intellectual capacity, as from preoccupation of mind. Their mind is like a road, beaten hard by the constant passage through it of "the wishes of the flesh, and current thoughts" concerning common earthly things. —A. B. Bruce, D. D. The way is the heart, beaten and dried by the passage of evil thoughts.—H. de S. Victore. Sin has so hardened the heart, worldliness has so deadened the feelings, sinful pleasures and desires have so dulled the conscience, that God's truth makes no impression, more than a passing dream, or a pleasant song, to be heard and forgotten.—P. 2 The fowls typify Satan, "the wicked one," and all his various agencies. In the application Christ imputes these wandering thoughts, which do the work of truth robbers, to the evil one whose agents and instruments they are.—Abbott. 3. The method. It is done in a moment,—by a smile at the end of the sermon; by a silly criticism at the church door; by foolish gossip on the way home. These are "the fowls of the air" whom the evil one uses in this task.—Farrar. The wicked one—afraid of losing a victim by his "believing to salvation" (Luke 8: 12)—finds some frivolous subject by whose greater attractions to draw off the attention, and straightway it is gone Of how many hearers of the Word is this the graphic but painful history!—J. F. and B. Wherever there is a preacher in the pulpit, there is a devil among the pews, busy watching the words that fall from the speaker's lips, to catch them away.—Guthrie. 4. Note that the wicked one cannot take away the good seed unless we let him. He can not destroy the seed if the soil is good. This is one of the punishments of worldliness, that the seed does not find a good soil to grow in, and the good which God would do to us fails.

Pharaoh and Festus are Scripture examples of wayside hearers.—Stock. So is the man that interrupted Jesus while he was preaching, to ask him to interfere, and compel his brother to divide the inheritance with him (Luke 12: 13).

1. The stony-ground hearers are those whose emotions are touched, but whose will and character are unchanged. They are moved by the winds of popular excitement or enthusiasm, but there is no new life —P. The characteristic of this class is emotional excitability, inconsiderate impulsiveness Their fault is want of deliberation, not the mere fact of receiving the Word with joy. For joy is a characteristic of deep as well as of shallow natures. Absence of joy in religious life is a sign, not of depth, but of dullness. Joy without thought is the definition of the stony ground hearer.—A. B. Bruce 2. Their experience. Persons whose feelings are thus easily moved, —whose religion consists largely in sympathy and romantic dreams concerning the kingdom of God,—if their deeper nature is not touched, will soon fall back into their old ways. Temptations assault, persecutions arise, expectations of joy or worldly advantage fade away, and their religion, having no foundation in the reason, the conscience, the will, the character, will soon vanish, "like the baseless fabric of a dream."—P. A sneer from some leading spirit in a literary society, or a laugh raised by a gay circle of pleasure seekers in a fashionable drawing room, or the rude jests of scoffing artisans in a workshop, may do as much as the fagot and the stake to make a fair, but false disciple deny his Lord.—Arnot

King Saul, Herod Antipas, and the Galatians (Gal. 5: 7) proved themselves stony ground hearers.—Stock So was that proposed disciple, to whom Jesus replied, "Foxes have holes," etc. (see Les. 2). Felix combined the features of this and the previous class.

The thorns are first, "the cares of this world," anxious, unrelaxing attention to the business of this present life; second, "the deceitfulness of riches,"—of those riches which are the fruit of this worldly "care;" third, "the pleasures of this life,"—the enjoyments, in themselves, it may be, innocent, in which worldly prosperity enables one to indulge These "choke" or "smother" the Word; drawing off so much of one's attention, absorbing so much of one's interest, and using up so much of one's time, that only the dregs of these remain for spiritual things, and a fagged, hurried, and heartless formalism is at length all the religion of such persons.—J. F. and B. It may be asked, Who, then, has a chance of bringing forth fruit unto perfection, for what character is free from thorns? But the question is not, who is free from evil desires and temptations, but what attitude you assume toward these. The thorny ground hearer never makes up his mind to be resolutely against evil. The true hearer seeks first the kingdom of God and brings forth fruit to perfection.—Bruce.

Balaam, Judas, and Ananias were thorny ground hearers. Lot and Martha were in danger of belonging to this class Simon Magus and Demas combined the features of these thorny and the stony-ground hearers. Of the thorny-ground hearer, the man of divided mind and double heart, we have an example in him who came to Jesus and said, "Lord, I will follow thee, but first let me go and bid them farewell which are at home at my house" (Luke 9: 61, 62). The example is all the more instructive that the man's temptation arose, not from lust after forbidden pleasure, but from inordinate affection for things lawful. John Mark was one who looked back (Acts 15. 38), and, therefore, was rejected by Paul, but he appears afterwards to have regained Paul's confidence, a fact which reminds us that a thorny-ground hearer is under no fatal necessity of continuing such.—Bruce.

From all these we learn that the true hearer receives the Word in an honest and good heart, understands it (personally applies it), and keeps it, and brings forth fruit with patience, giving it careful nurture, and continuing through all hindrances to the end. Such hearers desire to know and obey the truth; they act upon it as far as they know it; their conscience is guided by it; their character is formed by it; their affections choose it. —P. The "thirty-fold" is designed to express the lowest degree of fruitfulness; the "hundred fold," the highest; and the "sixty-fold" the intermediate degree of fruitfulness. As a "hundred fold", though not unexampled (Gen. 26: 12), is a rare return in the natural husbandry, so the highest degrees of spiritual fruitfulness are too seldom witnessed.—J. F. and B.

REFORM WORK IN SOUTHWESTERN MISSOURI.

DADEVILLE, Mo., Nov. 8, 1887.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—Another joust with the enemy. Upon the 13th of October I received intelligence from Bro. Butler that it was desirable that a district meeting, relative to the great work had in view by the N. C. A., be held somewhere in southwestern Missouri. Within about twenty-four hours a few of us found ourselves collected together to consider what was best to be done. We soon concluded that Greenfield, Dade county, was the place, and November 1st, the time for said meeting; and the next mail had a return letter to that effect. Accordingly, about 8 o'clock P. M. of the 29th, just two weeks from the time our dispatch had started, who but M. N. Butler raps at the door of good Bro. Cannady, of our village. It is superfluous to say that we were glad, nay, we rejoiced. Greenfield, however, is twelve miles away, and the 1st of November near at hand; so next evening (Sabbath) Bro. Butler gives the inhabitants of our neighborhood a very clear and telling Bible reading, touching the great subject of secrecy and darkness as evolved from that blessed volume. Next evening at the same place, to a crowded audience, he gave a clear, forcible and weighty lecture on the religion of Freemasonry, contrasting, as he passed along, the teachings of their very highest authorities on this subject with those of the Bible. It simply demolished everything that came in its way. Just as the lecturer was about opening, lo! a venerable form, evidently somewhat affected by age and toil, was observed passing up the right aisle toward the speaker, who proved to be no other than the General Agent of the N. C. A, J. P. Stoddard of Chicago. We took breath and rejoiced again.

Next morning the time for the siege had arrived. Greenfield, the stronghold of sworn secrecy for all southwestern Missouri, was to be marched upon. Oh, for wisdom, as well as grace! After a council we divide, Bro. Stoddard visiting the college, Bro. Butler scattering his literature over the place, while the writer takes in the high school in all its grades, leaving the balance of our forces to act as wisdom and circumstances might dictate.

At 7 o'clock P. M., with anxious and praying hearts, we repair to the court house, the place appointed for the coming conflict. The first evening no formal organization is attempted. The audience, however, is larger than expected, and, after devotional exercises, was entertained by brethren Stoddard and Butler in general remarks, relative to the nature, work, and evident design of Freemasonry and kindred orders. Before adjourning it was determined to meet the next day at 9 o'clock A. M., and at 2 and 7 P. M.

Next morning the convention proceeded to formally organize, Bro. T. A. Cook of Bates county being voted to the chair, and J. W. Thompson of Dade, to perform the duties of secretary. The convention was then entertained by brethren Stoddard and Butler. During this session the entire body was made to almost leap for joy, on beholding the manly form and pleasant countenance of Elder Wm. M. Love of Osceola. At the first suitable moment he was formally introduced to the convention, and in return made a few remarks touching the great work on hand, the promotion of which we had convened to consider. In the afternoon the convention was entertained by a lecture from Bro. Stoddard on the "Covenant of Freemasonry." I am satisfied that it was a telling blow against the lodge. The report of the committee on resolutions was also adopted. At 7 o'clock P. M. a well-received lecture was given by Bro. Love, after which brethren Stoddard and Butler talked to the people.

Next day, the most important feature of our meeting, evidently, was some short hand-to-hand skirmishing between two of our noble standard bearers (Love having left) and prominent citizens of the place, viz: ministers of the Gospel, editors of our local papers, principal of our college, and, doubtless, gentlemen of the legal fraternity, as well. In some instances the champions of the works of darkness were so affected that I could think of nothing more appropriate to represent them than the writhing and squirming of a poor, flayed reptile in a bed of hot sand. The last evening and session of our meeting was addressed by Bro. Butler. He brought all to their feet.

Thus it was, I will abruptly say, that the district meeting opposed to organized secrecy, in southwestern Missouri, closed its recent session. I am fully persuaded that in more than one respect great good will be the result. The convention, with its entire work throughout, was introduced and conducted so completely in the true spirit of humanity and love, that all opposition from the common and unpoisoned minds fled apace. Bro, Butler aided much by his national airs and patriotic songs, in connection with Bro. Stoddard's "supposable case," which consisted in portraying in most vivid colors, to his hearers, a character that in all its characteristics fitted the arch traitor of the late Rebellion; and a voice from the audience exclaimed aloud, "That fits Jeff. Davis." The feelings of the audience by this time, in view of what they had heard from first to last during the entire convention, could be restrained no longer, but found vent in hearty and loud expressions of approbation. We must exclaim, "Praise God from whom all blessings flow."

The convention being over, Bro. Stoddard treated us to another lecture at Dadeville, where Bro. Butler had set the ball rolling the Sabbath evening previous. Saturday morning having now come, our two wheel horses of moral reform are placed in a comfortable carriage for Carthage, Jasper county, a city of ten thousand inhabitants, to farther prosecute the the great and glorious work in which they are engaged. It is superfluous to say that our prayers went with them. Yours for the war,

J. W. THOMPSON.

TEMPERANCE.

Labor has been improved 100 per cent in the counties of Georgia where prohibition has been adopted. The business men are fast becoming prohibitionists as a matter of business, and now wonder they could not see before that the money spent in saloons belongs to those doing a legitimate business and giving value received in return for the cash. Men are now saving money and looking forward hopefully to the time when they shall own houses and lands for themselves. Speed the day.

An ocean of beer flows from the three fountains of England, Germany and America. England sends forth a stream of 990,000,000 gallons, Germany 900,000,000, and the United States 700,000,000 gallons. The Atlantic and Pacific are never drained, but this ocean of 2,500,000,000 gallons of beer is annually drained into human stomachs, crazing the brains, corrupting the hearts and damning the souls of millions, all by the consent and under the seal of endorsement of the governments.

If the Prohibition party should nominate for the Presidency, Gen. Clinton B. Fisk, their nomination would receive hearty ratification by every member of the National Reform Association. Here is Mr. Fisk's profession of faith, published when he was a candidate for governor of New Jersey: "The Prohibition party of the State of New Jersey in Convention assembled, acknowledges Almighty God as the rightful Sovereign of all men, from whom the just powers of government are derived, and to whose laws human enactments should conform as an absolute condition of peace, prosperity and happiness."

The N. Y. Christian Advocate speaks thus pungently of "the insolence of the liquor traffic:" While demanding protection from the law, it is perpetually evading and breaking the law. It ships goods abroad to avoid the payment of taxation, and sells secretly to evade license fees and police inspection. It bands itself together to dispute the execution and constitutionality of offensive legislation, and shirks its share of the burdens which fall on legitimate traffic. More than great corporations, even, does it scrutinize candidates and employ legislative attorneys. No evidence can convince its agents of the social evils of which it is the parent, or raise them to the comprehension of what society would be were the traffic stamped out. It is manifest that society endures more from the liquor domination than from any other tyranny.

Twelve hundred million cigarettes were used by the young men of this country last year. Yet so positive and apparent is their evil effect that no cigarette smoker would be admitted to a government military or naval school. Boys can be kept from this baleful habit if parents will only so determine, but the truth is there are too many of them like the silly mother who said to me that she did not approve of dancing, but let her daughter attend dances because it was the fashion with her set. The fashionable way of going to the devil might be checked if parents could realize what it meant at last. Many who think the devil a very amiable gentleman, would instantly stampede, like the congregation of that Italian priest, the other day, when they saw beside the preacher in the pulpit a hideous, realistic impersonation of his Infernality. With blackened face, and menacing horns, and a frightful tail firing firecrackers, it was too realistic and the congregation bolted, much to the consternation of the dramatic priest. But the moral is there.

A THOUSAND "CYNOSURES" FOR THE SOUTH

It is but seven years since our reform began to take root in the South. The first efforts sprang from a movement to divorce missions from the secret lodge, which was aided by the Cynosure, but in which the N. C. A., as a body, at first took no special part. Bro. H. H. Hinman spent about a year in this work and was supported by special contributions for the purpose, when his salary was assured by the Association, and Rev. P. S. Feemster engaged for a time to assist him. A demand for the circulation of the Cynosure arose in connection with these efforts, and was fostered and encouraged greatly by Dr. J. E. Roy, then Southern secretary of the American Missionary Association.

Since June 1, 1885, up to the present time a little over $900 have been contributed to send copies of the Cynosure to colored pastors in the South, or an average of less than $450 per annum. The results of this circulation of the paper have been wonderful.

They are—

1. Reports from pastors in all parts of the South, thankfully acknowledging the aid thus given them to overcome the pestilent lodge influence in their churches.

2. The formation of the Good-Will Association of some twenty-five Baptist churches in and about Mobile which forbids secret societies.

3. The sustaining of Rev. R. N. Countee in his seceding from the lodge, and maintaining his paper and church until many Baptist churches and pastors of Tennessee and Arkansas are standing by him.

4. The action of the St. Marion Baptist Association of Arkansas to expel the lodge from their churches.

5. Similar action of the State Baptist Convention of Louisiana, comprising all the churches of that denomination in the State.

6. The condition of the Texas Baptist Convention which is nearly ready for the same action.

7. The founding of schools for the higher education of the colored children in New Iberia, La., and Memphis, Tenn., on the distinctive principle of opposition to secretism.

THIS GRAND WORK

has been accomplished not without the aid of brethren Hinman, Feemster, Woodsmall and others; but while the living agent or the paper could neither alone have achieved so magnificent results, the circulation of the Cynosure has been the great agency, and at the same time the least expensive. It has often been the pioneer, reaching sections where no agent has penetrated, and after his departure keeping alive the fire of reform.

In view of these facts we conceive it to be a duty to call upon the friends of this cause everywhere for means to send A THOUSAND COPIES of the Cynosure for a year to as many pastors in the South, especially the colored Baptists, that the good work now well begun among them may reach to every one of the 800,000 colored members of their churches. The Congregational churches supported by the A. M. A. are already taking the ground of separation from the lodge, under advice from the secretaries of their Association. With these churches saved to Christ from the lodge curse, and the Baptists brought up to the same line, what may not our faith ask for in this respect for the Negro race? An earnest, faithful pushing of our work may, in a few years, redeem them wholly. What more noble object now invites our aid; and to attain it what means more economical, more sure and more convenient can possibly exist than scattering a thousand copies of the Cynosure? If $900 spent in this way can show such results, $1,500 would double them. Let, therefore, every friend of the reform make an effort to contribute to this fund and share in the blessing and triumph which must follow.

A number have already been asked to each make one of a hundred to complete this fund before January, 1888. The reasons for this investment are so convincing that not one has refused. Why should not these hundred shares be immediately taken? If one person cannot assume so much alone, let clubs of two, three, five, or ten make them up. The N. C. A. Board has given its hearty endorsement of the plan; and the friends of reform and of the Negro race, now toiling under this second bondage, have only to know of it, to send back an echo, saying, THE WORK SHALL BE DONE.

THE FUND FOR THE COLORED PASTORS

has better reasons to recommend it than any project now before the supporters of the reform. Since the National Association was organized it has not been able to show in any other department of its work so great results from so small expenditure. We rejoice that friends understanding this fact, are responding nobly. The Treasurer reports this week that nine shares of $15 each have been taken, and part of another—$145 in all—nearly one tenth of the whole amount proposed to be raised by January 1st. This is grand. Let each week now show an increase in something like a geometrical ratio, and a great work will be done.

FOREIGN FUND.

Two weeks ago the Treasurer's books showed $21. One brother sends $50 in response to the appeals from India, East and West Africa and the West Indies. The fund amounts now to $72. Our publisher can now fill a long waiting order from India for 145 books and pamphlets, amounting to about $15, and 16 000 pages of tracts worth $12 A call from Bro. Shemeld from the Zulu country at Estcourt, Natal, will also be filled.

EDITORIAL CORRESPONDENCE.

POLITICS AND PROHIBITION.

In 1884 St. John had 25 000 votes in New York. Next year New York gave to Prohibition some 31,000; and last year over 36 000. In the election just past FORTY ONE THOUSAND voted Prohibition. This year, too, Henry George men gave 72 000 votes; and a multitude of prohibition Republicans, thinking their chance had come to whip their old enemies, the Democrats, and get their offices, voted "just once more" with the Republicans. But though the Labor party drew largely from them, yet the Democrats have beaten the Republicans 17,000 in the present election. Why should Republicans "throw away their votes?" The men of principle are leaving them. They cannot elect their candidate next year if they lose either the liquor vote or the temperance vote; and they cannot have both. It was always difficult to carry water on both shoulders. It is impossible for the Republicans to reach the White House carrying water on one shoulder and whisky on the other.

THE GOOD TEMPLARS

drag on after the Mason lodges. Only one in five Masons, to average, attend lodge meetings! The non-attendants pay the "dues," and the rowdy one-fifth, who attend the meetings, eat and drink them! General Neal Dow told me he still paid his dues to the Good Templars, though he left their meetings ten or twelve years ago. Suppose churches were supported by men who seldom or never attend religious meetings, and the meetings kept up by those who don't pay, what sort of churches would they be? Miss Willard lately wrote to General Dow advising him to join the "Knights of Labor!" We must ask local Women's Christian Temperance Unions to remonstrate with that dear woman.

Like the Masons, too, the temperance lodges are "good for funerals." They have had memorial meetings of John B. Finch. But they are going in for a regular memorial day for him, as the "Grand Army," organized after the fighting was done, keep a memorial day for—POLITICS!

CANDIDATES FOR 1888.

Grover Cleveland, of course, for the Democrats. They have not another his equal; and the party is not strong enough to elect another "Jimmy" Polk. Blaine is shelved; though he will run if his legs hold out. De Pew is talked of locally. None speak of Robert Lincoln here. He may run for all that, and may win, if whisky and water mix well. But the Democrats have the advantage of professing liquor in the North, and protecting what they profess. In the South they profess temperance,—for the Negroes! Would God the American churches would arise from their lees, and not repeat their pro-slavery folly, which sunk the ministry one-half.

CONJURING WITH THE SICK.

The poor anarchists are now beyond our reach; but, as Demosthenes said to the Greeks, "If Phillip be dead you will make another Phillip." So with us. The so-called "religious papers" dare not and do not utter their own convictions; and the spawn of Masson lodges are manufacturing anarchists so fast that unless God interferes, there will soon be so many there will not be ropes enough to hang them.

I have been by Old Orchard in Maine, and conversed with many on "faith healing," or, as they elect to call it, "Divine healing," and I am satisfied that Satan is endeavoring to turn the revival of rational and Scriptural prayer for recovery of the sick, into conjuring with them. How little is read, written and said of that of which the Bible is so full, "conjuring," "enchantments," "divination," and "dealing with familiar spirits." A tonguey minister, who has repeatedly fallen by liquor, as Gough did, but without his terrible excuse for it, or his deep, honest piety when he recovered, is one of the foremost healers I have seen in my journey. Instead of "anointing him" (the sick man) with oil as a rational remedy then universally used, and as Isaiah used the fig-plaster for King Hezekiah's abscess, they use the oil as a Romish priest uses it in "Extreme Unction." But let us not be cheated out of praying and believing for the recovery of the sick.

Nov. 14.—I spoke here yesterday (Sabbath) three times: in the morning love-feast, afternoon mass W. C. T. U. meeting in the M. E. church, and preached at night in the Free Methodist church, direct against the lodge. I think I shall review Dr. Leach's temperance mass meeting speech in the Saratoga Eagle. I meet many who have read the Cynosure, and all who have read approve.

POLITICS.

The Henry George party took two-thirds or three-fourths of its 72 000 votes in the State from the Democrats. When this Labor party resolved to go in, the Republicans hoped to win against their old enemy, the Democratic party. Their failure by 17,000 votes in the State puts them in a hopeless minority for next year.

The Democrats are doubtless to have the great administration the four years from 1888. But when, next June, the platforms are made up, neither old party will dare defy the distillery-brewery-saloon party; and Southern prohibition Democrats and Northern prohibition Republicans will > "Leave the poor, old stranded wreck

> And pull for the shore;"

and a reform party will rise from the sea where they sink, as the Republican party rose from the sinking Whig and Democratic parties in 1856, after sixteen years struggle. Our salvation depends on our teaching the masses the dark and damning nature of the lodge, so that the reform party of 1892 will not bow the knee to Baal or kiss his image. God must help us or we fail. The skies are full of bright omens. My review of Dr. Leach's sermon or speech here yesterday, though brilliant and thoroughly eloquent, yet lowered his Republican flag, which he flaunted so savagely against the Prohibition party two years ago, at least half-mast; and good, sensible, pious and capable Mother Pond, President of the W. C. T. U., called on me to speak in that great church after Dr. Leach had done. His speech trembled throughout, like the weather vane before it begins to turn.

THE SALVATION ARMY.

Nov. 15.—I went to the town hall last night, for the first time, to hear two Salvation Army speakers: a woman of 38 or 40, and a young, slim man, with full mustache, trim blue coat and brass buttons, buttoned close to the throat, with a bright badge like a policeman's on his left breast. Of course, I went prejudiced against them, and I am still opposed to mingling military titles with the religion of Christ, whose servants did "not fight." And I was specially displeased to hear the man call the woman "Captain," from the Latin caput (head); for the man is "the head of the woman," even though the woman furnishes the brains for it. But, I must say, I never in my life saw a meeting better handled, or heard better speaking; more solid, Scriptural and evangelical. The hall was crowded with a fair proportion of roughs, but the order was perfect. Once, only, a little stir was made by grown boys in the back of the hall; but the young man showed that he was captain by quelling it at once, wisely and well.

My heart was pained for the woman; she looked weary and worn. She wore an army coat with a cap, not in bad taste; and when she laid it aside she revealed a plain, rich dress in the style of a wealthy London Quakeress, and though without ruffles or the dromedary hump on her lower spine, an ornamental band peeped from behind the collar of her dress, and showed with excellent effect, as did the gold bracelets which the servant of Abraham put on the neck of Rebecca. Both had tambourines. Hers was elegant, and she played on it with a smooth, white hand, an artistic play of long, taper fingers; and sang with a sweet, loud voice, like the call of a mother to a sick child, or a wayward one. The two seemed animated by one spirit, and though the young man's tones were, at first, harsh as those of a converted dude, their deep, honest fervor, and sound, Christian good sense, gained on me all the while, and the crowd involuntarily beat time to their singing with their feet. But though the woman was fair and decently formed and proportioned, her nervous system was over-strained; and though she plead with sinners to come to Christ earnestly and well, one was reminded, by her pre-occupied looks and tones, of Pope's couplet:

> Rests and expatiates in a life to come."

When she briefly said of her experience, "Five years ago I was brought to the feet of Jesus, and was seized with a desire to some good," it actually seemed as if she was apologizing to us for being found in the unwomanly methods of the Salvation Army in which she joined, with drum, trumpet and tambourine, to draw and save the lowest and the lost. But for the accursed night lodges, there would be men enough in the churches to go to the highways and hedges and compel the roughs to come in, while she and her sisters might sing to them and point them to Christ. J. B.

—A word from Bro. Charles Merrick of Syracuse, New York, wants a State convention in that city this fall.

—Bro. C. F. Hawley during the month ending Nov. 15th collected $79 57 at the meetings held at College Springs, Wayne, Winfield, Wyman, Salem, Linton, Washington and other points. He gave seventeen lectures and was accompanied, for some ten days, by Bro. B. W. Coe of West Union, a seceded Mason, whose assistance in the meetings was material.

—Rev. I. L. Buchwalter, a venerable and faithful member of the United Brethren church, whom many of our readers will remember in conventions of years ago, has been for years an invalid at his home in Lisbon, Iowa. A letter of Christian cheer and consolation to him from Bro. J. Hoke of Chambersburg, Pa., is printed in the Highway of Holiness. Bro. Hoke in a very clear and expressive manner sets forth the reasons why such afflictions should be borne with meek patience and submission to the infinite and loving purpose of God.

—A letter from Bro. J. F. Galloway of Okahumpka, Florida, tells of some of the difficulties under which he labors. He preaches twice a month, walking seven or eight miles to the appointment, and doing his work with no earthly reward. The Lord has owned his work in one place with a number of conversions, but Satan opposes by stirring up Masonic opposition and the prejudice against one who will preach to Negroes. There is much ignorance in religious things all about him, the Sabbath is disregarded, and chiefly on this account, the fourth commandment being perhaps as much unknown as disobeyed. The health of himself and family is better than for some time. Bro. Galloway asks to be remembered in the prayers of our readers for a blessing on his labors among the needy people.

whose thoughts and acts in that character were so constantly directed to great questions and great interests."

The distinguished Judge Ambrose Spencer, a political enemy, left this judgment: "Alexander Hamilton was the greatest man this country ever produced. I knew him well. . . . It was he more than any other man who thought out the Constitution of the United States and the details of the government of the Union; and, out of the chaos that existed after the Revolution, raised a fabric, every part of which is instinct with his thought. . . . He more than any other man did the thinking of his time."

John Marshall ranked Hamilton next to Washington, and with the judgment of their great Chief Justice Americans are wont to be content.

But the character of this great man is not without blemish. He was weak enough to be enticed from his conjugal fidelity for a time by an artful adventuress named Maria Reynolds. But he confessed his sin, and we do not find that the affection of his devoted wife wavered during the trial. He married Elizabeth, the daughter of General Schuyler, in 1780. Eight children were given them, and the home was a happy one. The oldest son fell in a duel a few years before and in the same place where the father was murdered by Burr in the name of honor.

The character of these two men was in sharpest contrast, and with their unfortunate relations is enough for a lengthy chapter. Hamilton first met Burr at the battle of Harlem Plains in 1776. At this meeting "angry words passed between them." What was the cause is not known. It is probable that a mutual dislike was irresistible. They had little in common together. "Burr was fearless, adventurous, insubordinate, subtle, and crafty. Hamilton was resolute, ambitious, brave, frank and candid." Burr had been on Washington's staff, but only for a few weeks. He saw nothing to admire in Washington, and nothing of advantage to hope for to himself. Washington, too, had for some good reason a strong dislike to Burr. That dislike in after years ripened into serious distrust and repulsion. Burr was an avowed and boastful libertine, and finally sank into universal ignominy as an assassin and a traitor. He was to the end of life a Freemason, and his treasonable correspondence late in life was carried on in the Royal Arch cypher.

Hamilton on the contrary seems throughout his career to have been of a reformer spirit. He urged the enlisting of Negro troops in the American army and argued the subject in a long letter to the President of Congress dated March 14, 1779. With regard to slavery, Hamilton from his youth had been opposed to it. With Lafayette and Jay he belonged in 1783 to a manumission society. Embracing all men, black and white, in his comprehensive and genuine humanity, he desired to see them all happy and free. He early saw the dangerous tendency of the French Revolution characterized by atheism and made powerful by secret cabals. He opposed its powerful influence in this country, and one of his biographers well says he was its greatest victim. Contrasting it with our own revolution he said, "The one is liberty, the other licentiousness."

On his first appearing in Congress Hamilton advocated open sessions and that debates be made public. Doubtless Washington's advice strengthened his convictions. When at 20 he entered the family of the great commander the latter had for some ten years ceased active membership in the Masonic lodge. In the history of the Columbian Order, a secret political society, now well known by the name of "Tammany," it is narrated that in 1798, "President Washington's denunciation of secret societies in general had almost killed it." Burr was said to be an active member and used it for his own purposes as he did Masonry. He was leader of the Democratic party at that time, and wielded the influence of that order so ably that the Federalists in 1800 were overcome in New York and Thomas Jefferson was made President and himself Vice President of the United States. "From the organization of the society," goes on the history, "Alexander Hamilton was its most determined opponent, and when President Washington's Farewell Address appeared he was the first to apply the reproof against secret societies contained in it to the Tammany oaganization."

This clearly fixes the position of these two men, as opponents in religion, in politics, and in relation to the lodge. Hamilton's influence prevented Burr from being elected governor of New York and President of the United States, and the malignant rage of the defeated Mason determined that so powerful enemy must be removed, if need be, by assassination. Already, years before, Hamilton's pamphlets had aroused the greatest animosity of political enemies, a club of gentlemen in New York met one evening; and, after discussing his letters, were raised to so fierce a pitch of anger that they agreed to the infamous proposition to get rid of their foe by challenging him one after another until some one should have the fortune to destroy him. With the same purpose Burr found his opportunity and sent a challedge to mortal combat. Hamilton knew his enemy, yet made every honorable effort at explanation. But the sleuth-hound of the lodge would not be turned from his track; and the custom of the day was against him.

Often in the course of his splendid career he had dared to stand alone, to brave the malice of enemies and the senseless clamor of mobs. He had done well to have preferred his duty to God, his family and his country than to yield to the mere pressure of public opinion. But a soldier's courage, like a woman's virtue, may not endure the suspicion of a stain. Hamilton had human imperfections; his pride was sensitive. He feared that his refusal to fight would diminish his influence and future usefulness. He yielded to these sentiments; made every preparation and left a statement of his motives, which clearly shows he had no murderous intentions; that he risked his life in deference to a prejudice he despised; and that he was resolved to spare his remorseless enemy who was hunting him to the death. The result is well known. On the 11th of July, 1804, Hamilton fell.

Of Hamilton's death-bed, his biographer Morse writes as follows: "His wife and children were beside his couch. Again and again he sought consolation both for his wife and himself in their religious belief. He was a sincere and earnest Christian. He had lately said of Christianity in his firm, positive way, 'I have studied it, and I can prove its truth as clearly as any proposition ever submitted to the mind of man.' His thoughts and interests, amid all the exciting whirl of public and private affairs, had been often and fervently turned in this direction of late years. He now requested to have the communion administered to him. There was some difficulty apparently by reason of his never yet having been formally admitted to the church; but this obstacle was finally overcome, and greatly to his comfort he received the sacrament." He died after thirty hours of suffering, and was buried amid universal lamentation. Burr ceased to be a political leader and his name was held in horror by his countrymen. A coroner's jury returned a verdict of murder, and the Vice President of the United States was compelled to fly and conceal himself.

RELIGIOUS NEWS.

THE ELGIN SABBATH CONVENTION.

REPORT CONTINUED FROM LAST WEEK.

The discussions of Wednesday morning, Nov. 9th, were of the most practical nature. The street car and Sunday travel question being settled in favor of their discontinuance, the milk business had its turn. Rev. Mr. Robinson presented the case of the farmer as it was usually argued out in defense of the running of the creameries, cheese factories and condensing factories on the Sabbath. That argument took this form: The cows must be milked, for it is according to the nature God has given them. It is not according to Christ's example, who said, "Gather up the fragments that nothing be lost," that this milk be wasted, thrown away. To take care of it at home will keep wife and men busy so they can't go to church. At the factory two or three men can care for it and save the labor of hundreds. So these establishments run in order to save the work of many people. The milk must be shipped to the city also for the children. There is no place in the world to discuss this subject like Elgin, which is the headquarters of the milk and butter business for the country.

Ready replies were made to every objection for Sabbath rest for the milkmen. Prof. H. A. Fischer said as a boy his father's farm sent the milk of twenty cows to Chicago daily, but on Sabbath there was no train and they had no difficulty in providing for the surplus at home without much loss. Dr. C. E. Mandeville said not a drop of the milk shipped to the city Sunday was sold that day. Families could get on Saturday enough for two days and everybody had a refrigerator where it could be kept. He knew of a godly farmer who found it a good profit to fatten pigs with Sunday milk. Mr. Swartz said there were always poor people who would be glad to take away surplus Sunday milk, and a blessing would go with the gift. Mr. George P. Lord of Elgin, one of the most prominent business men of the city, and well known throughout the State, said he kept 100 cows, and knew the problem capable of an easy solution. Every farmer can keep his milk, for all cool it. His men have the whole supply put away by 7 or 7:30 o'clock Sunday morning. The housewife has no more care of it that day than any other, and all can go to church. The only question is one of profit. A little more is made from the product by running the factory. The establishment of which he was president never run on the Sabbath. Others spoke, but with no essential difference of opinion.

On the Sunday paper question Rev. W. H. Holmes said he was in a quandary. He understood the work on the Sunday paper was done Saturday, but the Monday morning paper was got out on the Sabbath. Dr. Staunton had been on the staff of a city daily and thought it nearly impossible to issue the Monday paper without working some of the hours of Sunday. The compositors must be on before midnight. Rev. Mr. Harbaugh had been a practical printer, and knew that most of the work could be done outside of those hours. Prof. Whitney of Beloit spoke ably against the Sunday paper as most mischievous and demoralizing because of its very existence, without regard to the time it was printed. It was made to be sold on the Sabbath and those who sold and those who bought and read were alike deprived of the proper use of the day. Rev. A. J. Chittenden of Wheaton said we assume things that are not true, that it is a necessity that we have just so many papers. We have acquired an abnormal appetite for news. We do not need all these papers. We preach that men should be virtuous, but there is no virtue till it is tested, and here we can bring the test of self-denial. Rev. Mr. Stover, of Belvidere, was lately from the East. The question of Sabbath desecration is also a practical one there. The large influx of foreigners, the Sunday excursions and picnics were a fearful source of demoralization. Rev. Mr. Stewart said the excuse for the Sunday paper was competition. If it did not pay it would stop soon enough. We should organize and give our patronage only to those institutions that keep the Sabbath and there would then be a different kind of competition.

Rev. William Craven of Grace M. E. church, Elgin, presided in the afternoon after a half hour prayer-meeting led by Rev. Mr. Smith of St. Charles. Dr. C. E Mandeville of Chicago gave a most excellent address upon the topic, "Some Dangers Respecting Sabbath Observance." He appeared as the representative of the Rock River M. E. conference. He believed we are on the eve of the greatest moral battle ever fought in this country. The enemy is massing. There is in this country an organization known as the Personal Liberty party, which aims to destroy the Sabbath; why it is so called he could not say. Surely if there is a country on the face of the earth where personal liberty is enjoyed it is here, and yet the cry is, "We want personal liberty." What is meant is personal license, by which all restraint on the liquor traffic, gambling and such evils shall be moved. Every form of vice is represented in this battle; we must defend the Sabbath or sink. It is well to come together and consider how have we reached this lamentable moral condition.

The history of Nehemiah is worth a study. His treatment of the Sabbath question is a model for all governments and all time. How did the Sabbath desecration so characteristic of the present day come about?

1. We have wiped out the distinction between the believer and the non-believer. A few years ago we sent word to the oppressed nations of Europe to come to America, the land of plenty. The invitation to all the world to come here has been too well understood. The foreigner has come with his ignorance, his ideas of oppression, even his crimes, and we have not done our duty by him in instructing him in our newer civilization. We let them alone; let them have their own way. Very little effort was made to elevate them or to instruct them. They knew nothing of our Christian Sabbath, and it is the most natural thing in the world that they should follow the ways of their native land, and we allowed them to do so unmolested. Is it any wonder that the laws of our country are trampled under foot? We have become so used to seeing this desecration of the Sabbath; have become so familiar with it that we now see and allow to pass unheeded what would have instilled horror in the heart of the Christian some years ago. We as a people have become demoralized with the familiarity of foreign customs. Pope's famous couplet describes too accurately our present moral condition. As Nehemiah found on his return from Shushan that the Jews had become a part of the heathen with whom they lived, so are we. And I tell you, my friends, we will never get ahead in this matter until the Christian church separates from this class. There are people who seem ashamed of their old Puritanic blood; may God help them. There has been an alliance formed between the church and the world. Let us not deny it. Influential men fasten themselves upon the church: a sort of political Christians. Too many men are in the church for self-profit. We pastors are to blame for allowing them to rule. We should remember the example of Nehemiah when he found the wealthy Tobiah, the Ammonite, in the very temple; how he drove this influential heathen out and pitched out his stuff after him. So long as the rich member rides to the park in his carriage you have no right to object to the poor member going to the park in a street car. The church of God must be purified, even if it strips it of its wealth. God has enough and to spare.

The subject has two sides. We must not look alone at the religious side. The interests of the church and state are united. They must stand or fall together. They must not be antagonistic. We can never have a Christian nation until the laws of man and the laws of God are in accord. Till our laws harmonize with the Decalogue we shall not do our full duty as a people. Christianity is the safeguard of the state. Do you think had we done our duty to the foreigners who have come into our midst, there would have been any anarchy in Chicago? No. Had the church done its duty is it not fair to assume that communism and anarchism would not have existed? Our present condition is such as we have not known since the war. God will be just if he allows these people from foreign nations to chastise us.

The Christian people must stand together and refuse to listen to the politician whose only cry is for THANKSGIVING OF OLD.

HOW THE DAY WAS OBSERVED IN NEW ENGLAND.

BY HARRIET BEECHER STOWE.

On the whole, about this time in our life we were a reasonably happy set of children. The Thanksgiving festival of that year is particularly impressed on my mind as a white day. Are there any of my readers who do not know what Thanksgiving Day is to a chil ? Then let them go back with me and recall the image of it as we kept it in Oldtown. People have often supposed because the Puritans founded a society where there were no professed public amusements that, therefore, there was no fun going on in that ancient land of Israel, and that there were no cakes and ale, because they were virtuous. They were never more mistaken in their lives; there was abundance of sober, well-considered merriment, and the hinges of life were well oiled with that sort of secret humor which to this day gives the raciness to real Yankee wit. Besides this, we must remember that life itself is the greatest possible amusement to people who really believe they can do much with it, who have that intense sense of what can be brought to pass by human efforts that was characteristic of the New England colonies. To such it is not exactly proper to say that life is an amusement; but it certainly is an engrossing interest that takes the place of all these amusements. Looking over the world on a broad scale, do we not find that public entertainments have very largely been the sops thrown out by the engrossing upper classes to keep the lower classes from inquiring too particularly into their rights, and to make them satisfied with a stone when it was not convenient to give them bread? Wherever there is a class that is to be made content to be plundered of its rights, there is an abundance of fiddling and dancing, and amusements, public and private, are in great requisition. It may also be set down, I think, as a general axiom that people feel the need of amusements less and less, precisely in proportion as they have solid reasons for being happy.

Our good Puritan fathers intended to form a state of society of such equality of conditions, and to make the means of securing the goods of life free to all, that everybody should find employment for his facultics in a prosperous seeking of his fortunes. Hence, while they forbade theaters, operas and dances, they made a state of unparalleled peace and prosperity, where one could go to sleep at all hours of day or night with the house-door wide open, without bolt or bar, yet without apprehension of any to molest or make afraid.

The Fourth of July took high rank after the Declaration of Independence, but the king and high priest of all festivals was the autumn Thanksgiving.

When the apples were all gathered, and the cider was all made, and the yellow pumpkins were rolled in from many a hill in billows of gold, and the corn was husked, and the labors of the season were done, and the warm, late days of Indian summer came in dreamy and calm and still, there came over the community a sort of genial repose of spirit, a sense of something accomplished, and of a new golden mark made in advance on the calendar of life.

In those days there were none of the thousand ameliorations of the labors of housekeeping which have since arisen; no ground and prepared spices and sweet herbs; everything came into our hands in the rough and in bulk, and the reducing of it into a state for use was deemed one of the appropriate labors of childhood. Even the salt we used in cooking was rock-salt, which we were required to wash and dry and pound and sift before it became fit for use.

Great as the preparations were for dinner, everything was so contrived that not a soul in the house should be kept from the morning service of Thanksgiving in the church and from listening to the Thanksgiving sermon, in which the minister was expected to express his views freely concerning the politics of the country and the state of things in society in general.

But it is to be confessed that, when the good man got carried away by the enthusiasm of his subject to extend those exercises beyond a certain length, anxious glances, exchanged between good wives, indicated a weakness of the flesh, having a tender reference to the turkeys and chickens and chicken-pies which might possibly be over-doing in the ovens at home. But your old brick oven was a true Puritan institution, a truly well-bred oven, and it would have blushed redder than its own fires if a God-fearing house matron, away at the temple of the Lord, should come home and find her pie-crust either burned or undone.

Although all servile labor and vain recreation on this day were by law forbidden, according to the terms of the proclamation, it was not held to be a violation of the precept that all the nice old aunties should bring their knitting-work and sit gently trotting their needles around the fire; nor that Uncle Bill should start a full-fledged romp among the girls and children, while the dinner was being set on the long table in the adjoining kitchen.

But who shall do justice to the dinner, and describe the turkey, and chickens and chicken-pies, with all that endless variety of vegetables which the American soil and climate have contributed to the table and which, without regard to the French doctrine of courses, were all piled together in jovial abundance upon the smoking board? There was much coming, and laughing, and talking and eating, and all showed that cheerful ability to dispatch the provisions which was the ruling spirit of the hour. After the meat came the plum puddings, and then the endless array of pies, till human nature was actually bewildered and overpowered by the tempting variety; and even we children turned from the profusion offered us, and wondered what was the matter that we could eat no more.

The dinner being cleared away, we youngsters, already excited to a tumult of laughter, tumbled into the bedroom under the supervision of Uncle Bill, to relieve ourselves with a game of blindman's buff, while the elderly women washed up the dishes and got the house in order, and the men folks went out to the barn to to look at the cattle, and walked over the farm and talked of the crops.

In the evening the house was all open and lighted with the best of tallow candles which Aunt Lois herself had made with especial care for this illumination. The succeeding hours were given up to amusement of an admissible character, the day thus rounded off with complete gratitude and enjoyment.—Oldtown Folks.

A THANKSGIVING BUNDLE.

Grandma is hunting the garret over,
What do you s'pose she wants to find?
She only laughs when I asked the question,
Said, "Run away, Tom, and never mind."
She pulled out some trunks and an old oak chest,
A spinning-wheel and a queer old chair;
When I told her I'd help her she looked so funny,
What do you s'pose she's doing up there?

Grandma had sent for all the children
To spend Thanksgiving with her at home;
She was keeping a secret she knew would please them
And planned a surprise when the time should come.
Aunt Amy from Boston had brought a bundle,
She gave to grandma in such a way;
While she said with a laugh, "I've brought you something
You wanted to have for Thanksgiving Day."

"I know what it is," Tom told his cousins,
When grandma had carried it out of sight;
"It's one of those puddings that dear Aunt Amy
Knows we're so fond of--I know I'm right!
I'm glad she brought it; there's lots of raisins,
And mamma will give us a great big slice;
But I can't think what there is up garret
For Thanksgiving Day that's very nice."

But when the children were called to dinner,
What do you suppose was waiting there?
At the end of the table they saw what grandma
Had found up garret—an old high chair,
And the cunningest baby tied within it—
The bundle Aunt Amy had brought along--
A blue-eyed, dimpling, darling cousin,
Who gravely gazed at the noisy throng.

"I see," cried Tom, as they danced, delighted,
"What grandma was hunting for so up there;
I'd never have guessed that we'd have at dinner
A baby tied in our old high chair."
And such a day as that glad Thanksgiving
They never had had in their lives before;
They had pudding with raisins, besides the baby,
And felt that they never could want for more.

THINKING AND DOING.—It is not what people eat, but what they digest that makes them strong. It is not what they gain, but what they save, that makes them rich. It is not what they read, but what they remember, that makes them learned. It is not what they profess, but what they practice, that makes them holy.

Do not wade far out into the dangerous sea of this world's comfort. Take what the good God provides you, but say of it, "It passeth away, for, indeed, it is but a temporary supply for a temporary need." Never suffer your goods to become your God.—Spurgeon.

A THANKSGIVING DAY.

In the winter of 1873-4, the Hon. Julius Harley ably represented Bytown and its surrounding country in the Ohio Senate and was one of its Committee on the Penitentiary. In his frequent visits to the prison his attention was often attracted by a young man, scarcely more than a boy, with the ruddy tints and boyish roundness not yet wholly faded from his face, and in sad contrast with the dumb wistfulness of the large blue eyes and the weary, hopeless droop of the thin, flexible lips. He was employed about one of the hallways, and day by day stood aside to let them pass, with a listless dejection apparent in every line of his firm, strong form. It was a figure that strongly impressed Harley, but he was always in company, always in a hurry, and his interest never came to more than a fleeting feeling, and would no doubt have been wholly forgotten had not business connected with his law practice called him to Columbus the following November, and while there, making a visit to the Penitentiary, he came upon this same prisoner in his old accustomed place. He was passing on as usual when, stirred by a sudden impulse, touched, perhaps, afresh by the worn lines on the young face, he turned back and spoke. The prisoner started at the cordial, ringing tone, stammered, hesitated; "Sir," he exclaimed, half in apology it seemed, half to utter the pent-up cry of his heart, "I have been in this prison three years, and except the officers, you are the first one that has ever spoken to me, and it has seemed sometimes that I was famishing for the sound of a kind word."

If Mr. Harley was touched before he was deeply moved now. "Tell me who you are and about yourself," he said, kindly.

"Who am I?" answered the young man sadly, "that is a question I sometimes ask myself. Once in Massachusetts there was a Harry Brainard, whose father was a good man, a deacon in the church, who every morning and evening as long as he lived gathered his children about him and prayed that they might grow up to be good men and women. He was taught to keep the Sabbath, to speak the truth, to shun vice. Sometimes I think I was that Harry Brainard, but now I am John Fuller, No. 342, sentenced for horse stealing."

"Yes. They said my guilt was self-evident, and yet I had no more thought of taking the horse than you have. But I will tell you the whole story. I was the youngest child and my older brothers had all left home, and after father died I grew to thinking that farm work was slow and farm life dull, in short, to fancying, as many a foolish boy has done before, that I was a little too smart for a farmer. So I grew restless and discontented, and at last when a friend who had come to Ohio wrote me that there was a chance for teachers in the southern part of the State, I left the old home and the old mother; God forgive me for it. I found a school in Belmont county, and in the spring got a situation as clerk in a drug store, where I could keep my hands white and my boots blacked all the time; so much more genteel you know than plowing or hoeing corn. Well, like all drug stores, we sold liquor, and like so many other drug clerks from handling I came to tasting. I knew mother would not approve, but she did not know the ways of the world, and there was no danger for me. I should always know where to stop and not take too much. But about this time I made a new acquaintance, a runner from Chicago, a gay, dashing fellow. He ridiculed my church-going, chaffed me for my innocence, mocked me for what true principle I had, and, in short, made light of everything I had been taught to consider sacred. I was completely fascinated by him, proud of his notice, and only too willing to follow where he led. One Sabbath we took a walk to a little town some two or three miles distant on the Ohio river, and when there Ruedy proposed we get a horse and buggy and go over to the Virginia side. Of course I agreed, as I did to everything he proposed, and when he further suggested that we have a bottle of brandy added to complete the rig, I also assented. We had had something before we left home, and now we treated the stable boy before starting. We treated the ferryman when we crossed the river, we treated the first man we met on the Virginia side, and then for want of some one else treated each other. I wasn't hardened to that sort of thing, so that is about the last I have any distinct remembrance of till I woke up two days later to find myself at a low tavern in a little town some twenty miles from the river, and there, while I was trying to collect my rather bewildered ideas and think what I had better do, the owner of the horse with a sheriff found and arrested me. The horse was in my possession and the landlord said I had called it mine. Ruedy had disappeared, and nobody would believe my story, while, to make mat. ters worse, that region had been suffering for some time from a gang of thieves, and they were anxious for some one to make an example of; so I was taken back in irons. Court was in session, and in less than a month I had my trial, my conviction, and a five years' sentence. At first my one thought had been to keep it from mother and the folks at home. It would be happiness for them to think me dead rather than to know the truth,but when I found myself locked up here,with even the excitement of suspense over, I thought I should die. I was young, proud and with all a boy's wild hopes, and I almost hoped I should die. But I have lived through three years of it, of the convict cell and convict dress and convict silence. I told you that I had a Christian training; that is something one cannot easily shake off. The old texts and hymns I heard in the village church and in my own home haunt me here, and one, 'He will blot them from the book of his remembrance,' is always ringing in my ears,for it has seemed that I was, indeed, utterly forgotten of both God and man."

There was a pathos of dull misery in the tone as well as the words with which he ended his story,that touched Harley's kindly heart and made him long to give some crumb of comfort, but his training had not been particularly in a theological line. However, he shook Brainard warmly by the hand with "Well my boy, yours is a pretty hard case, but keep up a good heart. I'll see what can be done about it; and as to your being forgotten,that's all nonsense. You know your mother thinks of you every day of her life, and as for the Lord, why, who knows but he sent me here to-day?"(A remembrance of his sudden impulse flashing through his mind and giving him a pleasurable sense of being a sort of committee man of Providence, as it were). "We don't know for certain that he did, of course, but still it wouldn't do any hurt to think so," and the Hon. Julius hurried away, congratulating himself that his effort in imparting religious instruction had been quite a brilliant success.

Returning to his hotel, what was his surprise to encounter his legislative friend, the "member from Belmont county,"who had run up to look a little after the affairs of state before the meeting of the Assembly,and Harley lost no time in imparting to him the discovery he had just made that there was a young fellow from his county in the Penitentiary who "really ought not to be there."

"So he says, eh?" with a superior smile, for the Belmont gentleman having enjoyed the advantage of ten years' legislative experience was inclined to look upon new comers, like his Bytown colleague, as unsophisticated, mere chicks in fact in the ways of the world. "Of course they are all victims of circumstances," he continued, critically balancing his cigar; "never knew one to be guilty of the crime for which he was sent; in fact, to take their word they are the most innocent body of men ever collected together."

But Harley was not to be repulsed. "Just go over with me and hear this boy's story for yourself."

"Oh, I'll do that,"was the careless assent,"though I doubt if it will bear examination." But he, too, was touched by the simple story, and, urged on by his friend, made immediate inquiries into the case, which confirmed the truth of Fuller or Brainard's statement, and the facts being laid before the Governor, Mr. Harley had the pleasure before he left for home and Thanksgiving of walking down to the Penitentiary with a pardon in his pocket, and it is doubtful if in all his full,prosperous life he had ever known many happier hours than when young Brainard stood before him once more a free man, his face flushed with joy,and his voice choked with emotion, and putting in his hand the little purse that had been raised by a few who had become interested in his story, told him to take the next train for Massachusetts and Thanksgiving.

The young man, clinging to his hand, exclaimed over and over again, "Oh, Mr. Harley, you don't know what this is to me. Why,it is home and friends and a chance in life again. But how can I ever thank you or ever repay you for it all?"

"By letting us know that you have made a man of yourself, a sober, honest, honorable man."

"Please God I will," was the faltering answer. "I have had a bitter lesson, but it has been well learned." And so they parted, the one to social pride and position,to a rounding of the year's pleasant success, made sweeter by this truest of all charities,the charity of helping the other to a returning akin to his of whom Christ taught, with the treasures of growth and years and opportunities spent and wasted, but with the promise of a new and nobler life opening before him,with that penitent cry, "Father, I have sinned against heaven and in thy sight."

II.

An old brown farm house rested snugly in a little hollow among the Massachusetts hills. A quaint old house with great chimneys, a sloping roof and dormer windows,with tall walnut trees swaying over it, and a great bitter-sweet vine clambering over the low eaves and mossy shingle roof, its clustering berries opening their scarlet hearts under the keen frost touches. There are clumps of great lilac and snowberry bushes in the yard, and dry stalks where hollyhocks and asters had bloomed,with a few hardy marigolds still lingering in sunny corners. There is a garden at the foot of the yard, an old-fashioned garden, with its broad center walk down from the picket gate, with a row of beehives under the plum trees on one side and bunches of carraway and anise and fennel and dill for summer Sundays and winter seed-cakes on the other, with a hedge of currant and raspberry bushes, a spreading barberry in one corner,and a border of sage and summer savory and saffron and pennyroyal. And in front of the garden wide meadows, for the old house stands amid its clustering barns,apart from even the drowsy stir of the quiet country road,with the heights of far, blue, mountainous hills lifting on the north,and in the east a narrow glimpse of the sea,whose breaking surf may be heard in storms or the stillness of clear nights. The entrance is up a shaded grassy lane, whose gate rolling on clumsy wooden wheels is seldom closed;on the one side is the meadow,on the other a stubble field of corn, and beyond that the orchard, with interlacing arches of gnarled old trees,and out from among these juice-gathering roots bubbles a clear spring that trickles down across the lane into a sunken mossy trough where the horses are led to water and the cows love to linger on their way to the milking yard.

It is Thanksgiving Day, cold and grayly clear, with a thin, pale sunshine over all the soft, brown fields and russet woods where the leaves of the oak and beech still cling,but the walnut trees have long been bare,the lane is full of the dry, rustling leaves of the apple and maple, and the thread of a brook murmurs half-choked by them; the barberrys gleam redder than ever among their brown branches, as do the few ungathered apples swaying on high and scattered boughs. It is Thanksgiving Day in the wide old kitchen where the broad fireplace and brick oven stretch behind the stove, and on the high mantel glisten shining brass candlesticks,the floor white scoured, and whiter still by contrast with the heavy wainscoting and many-paneled doors, almost ebony black by time and bright by frequent rubbing. But there is no stir of glad bustle, and the old turkey stands around the door and shakes his red head in calm security. Holidays are the saddest days in the year, when there is only silence and vacant places for the dear ones that once made their fulness complete, and so the white-faced widow feels as she goes about her simple morning duties. There is the early breakfast, and then she takes from its stand the worn family Bible, in which is written the birth and death of the husband and father, whose fingers had turned its pages for so many years, and the children who gathered in that old kitchen to listen, till, children no longer, they had gone forth from the home, some to the tumults of life,some to the hush of the grave. In a voice that is tremulous with years and many sorrows she reads the chapter indicated by the faded ribbon as the one in course, while the shock-headed hired man sits very upright,his thumbs pressed hard together in token of respectful attention. Then follows a prayer, in which the daily needs, through long repetition,have crystallized into a set form of phraseology. John is used to it all, to the remembrance of "this thy young servant now before thee," and for the absent, and to the tremor that always thrills her voice as she asks for the "missing one, that if he be among the living the arms of love may still be about him,"and only thinks that she is most through,and he will go out and feed the cows their cornstalks. By and by he brings the old brown horse and still older "calash top" around to the stepping-stone, and the little widow in her carefully kept black steps in, with a gentle reproof to John for not going too, and taking the lines into her mittened hands drives the two miles over the frozen, hilly road to the "Centre church," and all alone in the long,high-backed pew,save for the memories that cluster there, listens to the Proclamation and Thanksgiving sermon. Passing out at the close of the service, through neighboring family groups, gathering with cheerful greetings and chatter,a dimness comes before her eyes at the sight as she turns away up the steep,lonely road, the raw wind beating sharply in her face. John is waiting to hurry the horse into the stable, and then goes whistling away over the fields to his own Thanksgiving. As she enters the warm kitchen the toothsome flavor of the chicken she has put to roast (for she can not let the day pass without some slight observance of its feast) meets her, but the tall old clock ticking so loudly in the corner is the only sonnd that breaks the stillness, and the great gray cat rubbing about her is the only living thing that bids her welcome.

Never before has Thanksgiving Day found her utterly alone. Once there were fires in the "square rooms," a long table with a great turkey for the center-piece, and the house rang with gay voices and laughter,among which Harry's was the merriest of all. Only last year Jane was with her, but looking from her window across the hills she can see the white stones gleaming in the little burying ground where the autumn leaves are drifting over Jane's grave, and Harry—it is three years since she has heard of him, three years that she has been secretly praying God for the unspeakable comfort of knowing that he, her baby, her darling, has found the same quiet rest; and now Elizabeth in Wisconsin and James and Luther in Iowa are urging her to leave the old farm and come to them. No, she can not live alone, but they do not know what they ask. Leave the old house, the home to which she came as a bride, the rooms where she sang lullabys to her babies and folded the hands of her dead? And so absorbed in memory as she draws out the little round table and spreads it for the solitary meal, it is not strange that she does not hear a step coming through the dry leaves in the lane,a step that pauses by the little brook and again at the barberry bush; that hesitates at the gate, and coming softly up the stone walk, lifts the latch slowly and gently. The widow hears that. Some neighbor is coming in. She will put on another plate. But it is no neighbor's face that greets her as she looks up. The plate (and it is one of her best China, too) falls to the floor in fragments and she walks over them all unconscious,and the chicken in the oven gives many a warning sputter before she is aware of anything save the joy that this her son that was dead is alive again, was lost and is found. There might have been gayer,merrier Thanksgiving dinners eaten that day, but hardly one of more heartfelt happiness than that in the wide, low-ceiled kitchen, with the November afternoon sun shining through the tiny-paned windows shaded by the scarlet-flecked bitter-sweet vine, where blue jays and a late robin or two chattered and fluttered over their Thanksgiving. True, there is a stain of shame on an honered, untarnished name, and the shadow of a disgrace that time nor penitence can never wholly wipe away, but there is the humility that springs in the still valley of humiliation,the strength that is born of trial,and the contentedness of a heart that has found its rest.

That was four years ago. This summer the Hon. Mr. Harley, in a trip among the Massachusetts hills, passed through the gate, rolling on its clumsy, wooden wheels, up the grassy, shady lane, past the gnarled old orchard and thread of a brook; past the garden with its spreading barberry, its spicery smell of aromatic herbs; its bees humming under the plum trees; up the narrow stone walk under the tall walnut trees to the kitchen door, and the joyous greeting of the sun-browned young farmer, whose smiling face still shows lines of pain and conflict seldom seen in one so young. There is a greeting no less hearty, if shyer, from the blushing young wife, and the very young gentleman in very long dresses, who is introduced as Julius Harley Brainard. But best of all is the welcome of the white-faced, white-haired woman in her arm chair by the bitter-sweet shaded window, with her great Bible open on the stand beside her.

"Yes," she said, in her sweet, weak voice, "I am glad to see you before I go, and that will not be long, but I have nothing more to ask. I have lived to see my son restored to me. I shall end my life in the old home among the old friends. The good Lord has granted me every wish, and since that four years ago all my days have been Thanksgiving days."

The late Professor Samuel Miller, of Princeton, New Jersey, was a man of large benevolence. He refused to aid no object which he considered worthy of public or private beneficence. He used to say that he loved to have a nail in every building intended for the glory of God or the good of man. It was in his heart to aid to the extent of his ability every worthy cause. And doubtless he had his reward. He had it as he went along in the consciousness of doing good. He had it in the prayers and benedictions of the poor. He has it now in heaven in the smile of his divine Lord. And he will have it in the great rewarding day, when the Master will bring to light every good deed, and say unto him, "Well done, good and faithful servant; enter thou into the joy of thy Lord." Were all to act on the same principle, how much good would be accomplished!

"party." We allow a third or fourth-rate politician to go to our legislative halls and make our laws, laws at variance with the teachings of the Bible and the will of God. Until the Christian people come together and say we will have proper laws and have them properly enforced, we cannot hope for a remedy. The merchants of Tyre insisted upon selling goods near the temple on the Sabbath, and Nehemiah compelled the officers of the law to do their duty and stop it. So can we compel the officers of the law to do their duty. Our laws are sufficient if we will only enforce them. Sin is stubborn. I wish that the Christian had the persistency of the sinner. Sin is ever persistent. Drive the saloons out of Elgin, and they will locate just outside the limits. Close the front door, and the back door comes open. Close the saloon altogether, and the drug stores come into active service. When the church of God awakes and does its duty on one side and the state on the other we shall have no further trouble in this matter.

The doctor continued his explanation of Nehemiah's course in a masterly manner, making so plain the application to the present that it seemed like a picture of to-day.

Prof. Samuel Ives Curtis, D. D., of the Chicago Congregational Seminary, from whose faculty he was a delegate, spoke of the sympathy of his institution in this movement. He referred the case of Toronto where, under the executive control of a Christian Mayor, there is presented the illustrious example of a city that keeps the Sabbath. "Remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy," is forcibly impressed in the Scriptures. We are not commanded to remember the Sabbath as a day of rest or recreation, but to "keep it holy." If we keep it holy, we shall not go out on excursions, on pleasure bent. This day belongs to God; in his service shall we spend it. In foreign cities, following the church services, the people go to the beer garden, to the theater, and to every form of pleasure. The Fourth Commandment seems to have been singled out by foreign nations to be disobeyed and broken down. In Leipsic it has been found that on a single Sabbath, out of a population of 150,000, but two or three per cent are in church, while 40,000 are off on excursions. The church that is thus handicapped by the pleasure-seeking throng ceases to be an instrument of good to the glory of God. When the ministers of the Gospel have it known that they never travel on Sunday, they will have more influence with the congregation, and Sunday traffic will be materially decreased.

Rev. A. H. Ball, from the committee on resolutions, offered the following additional report, which was adopted:

Resolved, That we look with shame and sorrow on the non-observance of the Sabbath by many Christian people, in that the custom prevails with them of purchasing Sabbath newspapers, engaging in and patronizing Sabbath business and travel and in many instances giving themselves to pleasure and self indulgence, setting aside by neglect and indifference the great duties and privileges which God's day brings them.

2. That we give our votes and support to those candidates, or political officers who will pledge themselves to vote for the enactment and enforcing of statutes in favor of the civil Sabbath.

3. That we give our patronage to such business men, manufacturers and laborers as observe the Sabbath.

4. That we favor a permanent Sabbath organization for the State of Illinois; the object of which shall be the creation of public sentiment and to secure the enactment and enforcement of necessary laws for the protection of the Sabbath.

5. That we favor the organization of auxiliary societies to accomplish the above object.

6. That four committees be appointed by this convention, consisting of two persons each, a minister and a layman, one committee to carefully and accurately investigate and report to the next convention all the facts obtainable concerning Sunday business; one to investigate and report similarly concerning Sunday newspapers; one concerning Sunday pleasuring; one concerning Sunday transportation and travel.

The committee also roported a form of permanent organization, to be called The Sabbath Association of Illinois, whose purpose shall be to recover and preserve the Scriptural and historical Sabbath, commonly called the Lord's day.

On the last evening, after devotional service led by Rev. George R. Milton, the pastor of the church where the convention was sitting was called to the chair. Rev. Walter O. Ferris made a short speech on financial questions, and a collection was taken. Rev. D. W. Wise moved a resolution of thanks for the hospitality of the good people of Elgin. Letters were read from Dr. Herrick Johnson of the Presbyterian Seminary, Chicago, regretting the necessity of his absence, and condemning especially the Sunday newspaper; also from George May Powell, secretary of the Sabbath Association of Philadelphia. It was announced that the influence of the convention was already being felt—a butcher in in the city announced that his shop would close, and a letter was read from a druggist asking that an effort be made to close that branch of business.

Pres. C. A. Blanchard was introduced by pastor Rowlands as the one to whom the convention was indebted for its great success. He spoke briefly, saying that in this great work we are undertaking for the Sabbath we are representatives of the Lord God. The work is not ours. We must always remember that we are commissioned. Our own words have little weight. God's have power. It made no difference who bore the note from Grant to Buckner at Fort Donelson. It was the order that meant unconditional surrender. He illustrated by the boldness of General Connor at Salt Lake many years ago, how Christians must be invincible, not because of what we are, but because of what God is. The church has been thoughtless and neglectful of her work. Though armed and carrying bows we turn back in the day of battle. We need the courage of moral conviction, as Marshal Ney was brave for his French master in covering the renowned retreat from Russia.

The committee on nomination reported as follows:

Committee on Sabbath business—L. N. Stratton, G. P. Lord.

On Sabbath papers—H. W. Harbaugh, Amos Churchill.

On Sabbath pleasuring—C. E. Mandeville, Ezra A. Cook.

On Sabbath travel—James Lewis, Deacon Cornell.

The officers for the permanent association were also nominated:

President, Charles A. Blanchard of Wheaton.
Corresponding Secretary, W. H. Holmes, Joliet.
Recording Secretary, Dr. Staunton, Rockford.
Treasurer, W. L. Gary, Wheaton.
Executive Committee: The above named and Thomas E. Hill of Prospect Park, John Mitchell of Sycamore and Benjamin Douglas of Chicago.

All of the above named were elected unanimously by the convention.

Professor Fischer presented the following resolution which was unanimously adopted:

Resolved, That this association authorizes the executive committee to request railway corporations and newspapers to discontinue the running of Sunday trains and the publication of Sunday editions of their papers.

Rev. Mr. Rowlands closed the session with a short address to the delegates present and to the people of Elgin.

After a song, Rev. C. K. Colver closed the convention with the benediction.

—Ira D. Sankey, the singing evangelist, and companion of Moody, sailed for Europe Saturday, November 12.

—Fowler Hall, the new addition to the McCormick Theological Seminary of the Presbyterian church, was dedicated last week.

—The evangelist Moody was in Chicago Friday and was at first announced to speak in his old church on Chicago Avenue in the evening, but the appointment was withdrawn. He went on to Pittsburgh to begin a series of meetings.

—Rev. A. W. Parry, late pastor of the Free Methodist church at Prospect Park, Ill., was appointed agent of Evansville Seminary by his conference, but the sickness of the principal has compelled him to take temporary charge of the school.

—The one hundred and fifth session of the Methodist Conference (South) began at Danville, Va., Nov. 16, Bishop Key, of Georgia, presiding. When a motion was made to appoint a committee on temperance, the Bishop said: "No, sir, we do not appoint committees on temperance; we have passed temperance down in my county, and now call it prohibition." A committee on prohibition was appointed.

—Dwight L. Moody inaugurated a series of meetings on Sabbath day at the Grand Central Rink in Pittsburgh. The meetings are under the auspices of the Evangelical Ministerial Association, and will be continued daily for several weeks. The services Nov. 20 were attended by over 12,000 persons. There were fifty conversions.

—Rev. H. C. Heyser, pastor of a German evangelical church, has resigned. He says: "The cause of the disagreement is due to the fact that we have socialists and anarchists among the church members. They want a religion without a Christ and a world without a God. That is a kind of theology of which I have no understanding, and not being able to preach it I resigned." The most influential members in the congregation, it appears, are either saloon keepers or proprietors of shooting galleries, and the church is unable to discipine them.

LITERATURE.

THE PLEASURES OF LIFE. By Sir John Lubbock, Bart. Pp. 107. Price, 25 cents. John B. Alden, New York.

This is a volume of lectures by an Englishman who is eminent in Parliament, as a banker, a zoologist, and student and writer on topics relating to the early condition of the human race. The book is hardly written from the standpoint of a Christian; though if we limit the meaning of its title to those pleasures which are derived from the present life, and regard the higher and sweeter pleasures of the spiritual life as belonging to another classification, the work has a useful place. Though the Bible is placed at the head of the list of one hundred books that are often mentioned for their contributions to the genuine pleasure of life, it is hardly referred to otherwise. Writing from the standpoint thus indicated, the author gives us charming discussions on "The Duty of Happiness," "The Happiness of Duty," "A Song of Books," "The Choice of Books," "The Blessedness of Friends," "The Value of Time," "The Pleasures of Travel and of Home," "Science and Education." As a literary volume it will delight every reader. As a scientist the author magnifies the agency of scientific studies above measure in removing superstition, and confidence in witchcraft and sorcery. But science of itself has done very little of the kind. From the standpoint of the author it is a very entertaining and cheering book, full of helps to gratitude to God, the giver of all good: and it would have marred no page if there had been more positive recognition of this fact—the most fundamental to all true enjoyment.

The Story of Jonah is the title of a sermon by Prof. L. T. Townsend, D. D., professor of Theology in Boston University, in Plymouth Church, Brooklyn, last May. It is published at the request of a number of members of the church. It is a very able, learned and logical argument, establishing the truth of the Bible narrative in the most convincing manner. The discourse is issued in handsome style, and sold for 20 cents by J. J. Arakelyan, 150 Pearl St., Boston.

Mr. George Kennan, the Siberian traveler and writer, has been black-listed by the Russian Government, and will not be permitted to re-enter the Czar's dominions. "I expected, of course," says Mr. Kennan, "to be put on the Russian black-list. I am only thankful that I succeeded in crossing the frontier with all my material and papers coming this way. The outside of the Russian frontier line is a good enough side for me at present. I became satisfied before I got half through Siberia that I should never be permitted to go there again, and that after the publication of my papers no other foreigner would be allowed to make investigations there, and I lost no possible opportunity to secure accuracy and thoroughness. I brought back more than fifty pounds of notes, papers, and original documents, many of the latter from secret government archives, besides 500 or 600 foolscap pages of manuscript prepared for me by political exiles in all parts of Siberia, and covering the most noteworthy episodes in their lives. I visited every convict mine in Siberia, and every convict prison except one, and I believe I know the exile system better than most officers of the exile administration, and far better than any outsider. I can regard the black-listing, therefore, with a certain degree of complacency. The stable door is locked, but the horse has been stolen—and I've got him"—N. Y. Tribune.

The November number of the Cosmopolitan is guilty of an act which should be a crime for a respectable magazine, in advocating pugilism, the most beastly of so-called sports. It is no excuse that this is done by an author of some repute, Julian Hawthorne. The second part of Hornaday's "Passing of the Buffalo" is entertaining, but coarse and vulgar in passages. "The California Ranch," by Ella Sterling Cummins, gives a mass of information in regard to the great farms on the Pacific Coast. Shirley Dare, in an article on "A Brighter Outlook for Women," advocates the revival, in a modified form, of the convent for the benefit of unmarried and widowed women, that depend upon themselves for support. Joel Benton explains "The Origin of Love and Beauty," while William H Rideing describes "The Boyhood of James Russell Lowell," and Joseph T. Alling gives a lively and picturesque description of "The Chief City of a Moorish Despot."

H. C. Bunner's story in Scribner's for December is entitled "The Zadoc Pine Labor Union," and is said to be filled with humor and genial satire, exposing the absurdity of the foreign ideas about labor and capital which have found a foothold among workingmen in this country. Mr. Bunner is editor of Puck, which has always used toward the labor lodges that severity which their bad principles deserve.

Vick's Magazine opens fire this month on the English Sparrow, and if the little chirpers, so harmless looking, deserve one-half the punishment due under the indictment, they would soon be banished to some corner of the globe where they would have no one to annoy but themselves. Like anarchy, beer saloons, and lodges—all foreign importations—they should be driven back into the Atlantic.

The November Library Magazine has biographical articles on Coleridge, Richard Jefferies, Walt Whitman, and Thackeray. Popular topics are discussed in "The Nile and its Inundations," "Wheat Growing in India and America," "What is a Day?" "The Moon and the Weather," "The Railway Question in Manitoba." "Church- going" and "Sermons" suggest practical religious discussions.

POPULAR COMMENTARIES

In the critical Biblical literature of the century few books have been so unqualifiedly endorsed as

Jamieson, Fausset & Brown's Commentary

On the Old and New Testaments It has been tried, tested and proven, during one of the most active periods ever known in biblical research. That it has not been found wanting is evident in the still unabated demand. At considerable outlay we have issued a new edition of this valuable work in clear type, attractively bound, and at a price much lower than any complete commentary ever before issued.

In Extra Fine English Cloth, sprinkled edge, the full set, (4 vols) ..... $ 8.00
In Half Morocco, the full set, (4 vols.) 10 00

"The BEST condensed Commentary on the whole Bible is the Commentary on the Old and New Testaments, by Jamieson, Fausset & Brown. It contains notes of the choicest and richest character on all parts of the Holy Bible. It is the cream of the commentaries carefully collected by three eminent scholars Its critical introduction to each book of Scripture, its eminently practical notes, its numerous pictorial illustrations, commend it strongly to the Sunday-school worker and to the clergyman. Then it is such a marvel of cheapness."—Rev. J. H. Vincent, D. D., in "Aids to Bible Study."

The leading clergymen and college professors of the country unite with Dr Vincent in placing this commentary in the first rank of all biblical aids.

and to help break down everything that hinders its spread.

It teaches that men need to be converted to the personal Christ, and not simply to a system of truth, and that there must be implanted in them a divine life as well as a correct belief. The

EVANGELIST

seeks to show that the division of Christians into sects is a great wrong, and a very serious obstacle to the advancement of the Redeemer's kingdom, and it seeks to show Christians how they may be one in Christ, and to persuade and help them thus to unite. The

FARM NOTES.

HOW TO ACT AT A FIRE.

In a lecture before the Society of Arts, London, Mr. A. W. C. Ghean gave the following concise and simple directions how to act on the occurrence of fires. Fire requires air; therefore, on its appearance every effort should be made to exclude air—shut all doors and windows. By this means fire may be confined to a single room for a sufficient period to enable all the inmates to be aroused and escape; but if the doors and windows are thrown open, the fanning of the wind and the draft will instantly cause the flames to increase with extraordinary rapidity. It must never be forgotten that the most precious moments are at the commencement of a fire, and not a single second of time should be lost in tackling it. In a room a table cloth can be so used as to smother a large sheet of flame, and a cushion may serve to beat it out; a coat or anything similar may be used with an equally successful result. The great point is presence of mind—calmness in danger, action guarded by reason and thought. In all large houses buckets of water should be placed on every landing, a little salt being put into the water. Always endeavor to attack the bed of a fire; if you cannot extinguish a fire, shut the window and be sure to shut the door when making good your retreat. A wet silk handkerchief tied over the eyes and nose will make breathing possible in the midst of much smoke, and a blanket wetted and wrapped around the body will enable a person to pass through a sheet of flame in comparative safety. Should a lady's dress catch fire, let the wearer at once lie down. Rolling may extinguish the fire, but if not, anything (woolen preferred) wrapped tightly round will effect the desired purpose. A burn becomes less painful the moment air is excluded from it. For simple burns, oil or the white of an egg can be used. One part of carbolic acid to six parts of olive oil is found to be invaluable in most cases, slight or severe, and the first layer of lint should not be removed till the cure is complete, but saturated by the application of fresh outer layers from time to time. Linen rag soaked in a mixture of equal parts of lime water and linsed oil also forms a good dressing. Common whiting is very good, applied wet and continually dampened with a sponge.

INHERENT FERTILITY OF THE SOIL.

John J. Willis, superintendent of Lawes and Gilbert's experimental farm, Rothamsted, England, in summarizing the results of the renowned experiments of Lawes and Gilbert, writes in the American Agriculturist for November:

No soil is so rich that it cannot be made poor, if not almost barren; for, with every crop removed there is necessarily a certain quantity of inorganic matter, as well nitrogen, taken from the land. And if this goes on year after year, without restoring to the soil something of what has been taken out of it, the land becomes poorer and poorer, and at last is capable of growing only the most meager crops. Every acre of land growing a crop of thirty bushels of wheat removes about one hundred and ninety pounds of mineral plant-food and forty-five pounds of nitrogen. Land may also be exhausted by feeding stock. If what is grown be consumed on the land so that all the solid and liquid "excreta" produced be restored to the soil, the fertility of the surface soil would be slightly improved, but the soil as a whole would not be sufficiently enriched to produce a correspondingly large crop as that eaten off, because something would have been assimilated by the animals for respiration and increase of meat. Therefore, some other external supply of manure is rendered necessary if the fertility of the soil is to be maintained. There is, however, a certain amount of inherent fertility in nearly every soil, which it is extremely difficult to exhaust. This fact can be capitally illustrated by the Rothamsted experiments where cereal crops, of wheat and barley, have been grown on the same land year after year without manure, for more than forty years, and the whole of the produce, both grain and straw, removed.—American Agriculturist.

Tickets can be obtained of any coupon ticket agent of the C. B & Q. R R or connecting lines, or by addressing Paul Morton, Gen'l. Passenger and Ticket Agent, Chicago.

CONSUMPTION SURELY CURED.

To the Editor:—Please inform your readers that I have a positive remedy for the above named disease. By its timely use thousands of hopeless cases have been permanently cured. I shall be glad to send two bottles of my remedy FREE to any of your readers who have consumption if they will send me their Express and P. O. address. Respectfully, T. A. SLOCUM, M. C., 181 Pearl St., New York.

The Independent of New York is a newspaper, magazine, and review, all in one. It is a religious, a literary, an educational, a story, an art, a scientific, an agricultural, a financial, and a political paper combined. It has 32 folio pages and 21 departments. No matter what a person's religion, politics or profession may be, no matter what the age, sex, employment or condition may be, the Independent will prove a help, an instructor, an educator. Our readers can do no less than to send a postal for a free specimen copy, or for thirty cents the paper will be sent a month, enabling one to judge of its merits more critically. Its yearly subscription is $3, or two years for $5.

Those who desire, may send their subscriptions for the Independent and Cynosure direct to this office. The two papers for one year for $4. Each subscriber will thus save one dollar. This offer is only to those who are not in arrears, or who will at the time of remittance pay up their arrears. Address the Christian Cynosure, 221 W. Madison St., Chicago, Illinois.

CATARRH CURED.

A clergyman, after years of suffering from that loathsome disease, catarrh, and vainly trying every known remedy, at last found a prescription which completely cured and saved him from death. Any sufferer from this dreadful disease sending a self-addressed stamped envelope to Prof. J. A. Lawrence, 212 East 9th St., New York, will receive the recipe free of charge.

THE BROKEN SEAL,

Or Personal Reminiscences of the Abduction and Murder of Capt. Wm. Morgan.
By Samuel D. Greene.

One of the most interesting books ever published. In cloth, 75 cents; per dozen, $7.50. Paper covers, 40 cents per dozen, $3.50.

This deeply interesting narative shows what Masonry has done and is capable of doing in the Courts, and how bad men control the good men in the lodge and protect their own members when guilty of great crimes. For sale at 221 W. MADISON ST., CHICAGO, or THE NATIONAL CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION

By the Roman Catholic Church.

A Moral Mystery how any Friend of Religious Liberty could Consent to "Hand over Ireland to Parnellite Rule."

By Rev. John Lee, A. M., B. D.

General Viscount Wolseley: "Int resting."
Chicago Inter-Ocean: "A scarching review."
Christian Cynosure: "It deserves a wide circulation at the present time."
Bishop Coxe, Protestant Episcopal, of Western New York: "Most useful publication; a logical sequel to 'Our Country,' by Josiah Strong."
Emile De Laveleye of Belgium, the great publicist: "I have read with the greatest interest your answer to Cardinal Manning. I think Rome's encroachments in the United States ought to be carefully watched and resisted."
Rev. C. C. McCabe, D. D.: "It is a useful book and ought to have a wide sale. You are dealing with a question which will soon dominate every other in American politics. The Assassin of Nations is in our midst and is approaching the Temple of Liberty with stealthy tread. The people of this country will understand the Belfast frenzy some day better than they do now."
The Right Hon. Lord Robert Montague: "I have read it with the greatest pleasure, and with amazement at the intimate acquaintance with the acts of Romanism in our midst which you have evinced. I only wish that, instead of publishing your pamphlet in Chicago, you had sown it broadcast over England, Scotland and Ireland."

F. Ronayne.

Past Master of Keystone Lodge No. 631 Chicago.

Explains the true source and meaning of every ceremony and symbol of the Lodge, thus showing the principles on which the order is founded. By a careful perusal of this work, a more thorough knowledge of the principles of the order can be obtained than by attending the Lodge for years. Every Mason, every person contemplating becoming a member, and even those who are indifferent on the subject, should procure and carefully read this work. An appendix is added of 32 pages, embodying which gives every sign, grip and ceremony of the Lodge together with a brief explanation of each. The work contains 422 pages and is substantially and elegantly bound in cloth. Price, 75 cents.

Freemasonry at a Glance,

FIFTY YEARS and BEYOND;

OR,

Old Age and How to Enjoy It.

A most appropriate gift book for "The Old Folks at Home."

Compiled by REV. S. G. LATHROP.

Introduction by
REV. ARTHUR EDWARDS, D. D.,
(Editor N. W. Christian Advocate.)

The object of this volume is to give to that great army who are fast hastening toward the "great beyond" some practical hints and helps as to the best way to make the most of the remainder of that now is, and to give comfort and help life that is to come.

"It is a tribute to the Christianity that honors the gray head and refuses to consider the oldish man a burden or an obstacle. The book will aid and comfort every reader."—Northwestern Christian Advocate.

"The selections are very precious. Springing from such numerous and pure fountains, they can but afford a refreshing and healthful draught for every aged traveller to the great beyond."—Witness.

Price, bound in rich cloth, 400 pages, $1.

A Good ATLAS

$10. ALDEN'S HOME ATLAS of the WORLD. In one large octavo volume, 11x14 inches in size, containing more handsomely engraved and colored maps, and of a better quality than ever before found in an Atlas selling at less than $10.00. Also an index of over 5000 cities, rivers, mountains, etc., throughout the world, showing exact location. Cloth binding, price, $2.00; postage 26c. $2.

"It is really first-class."—Morning Star, Boston, Mass.

"A most comprehensive and useful work, and at a price one-fifth of that usually charged."—The Mail, Chicago.

"Alden's Home Atlas of the World is equal, if not superior, to atlases published heretofore for $10."—Post, Pittsburgh.

"Is superior in all important respects to any Atlas heretofore published at a less price than $10.00."—The Guardian. Philadelphia.

"This handsome, convenient, and attractive Atlas contains all the latest additions to geographical knowledge."—Press, Albany, N. Y.

"A beautiful Atlas. It leaves nothing to be desired in the way of maps. It is a magnificent book."—Christian Standard, Cincinnati, O.

"The volume is handsome in appearance and so marvelously cheap that it will doubtless find an immense sale."—Messenger, Philadelphia, Pa.

"A marvel of art, of information, and of price. The wonder is how so much and of such a character can be sold at so low a price."—Church Press, New York City.

"Is just the kind of atlas for which there is a real need. A complete one, tastily and handily bound, and surprisingly moderate in price."—Press, Philadelphia, Pa.

"Five dollars would be cheap for it. At two dollars it is half a gift. We hope we may induce a thousand homes to order the work."—Herald of Gospel Liberty, Dayton, O.

"For the excellence of its preparation and handsome binding, it is one of the marvels of cheapness for which American readers are already much indebted to this publisher."—Christian Cynosure, Chicago.

"This admirable work; maps, handsomely engraved and printed in colors. It is handsomely and strongly bound in cloth. It is confidently claimed that no work of equal merit has ever yet been sold at less than ten dollars."—Christian Advocate, Pittsburgh.

"Besides giving a map for every country of any importance—and many of these maps are well executed and contain the latest geographical data—every considerable town is included in an alphabetical list, with the country where situated, and the latitude and longitude. The make-up of the atlas is very good, the data are important, and the atlas in this form is very convenient for reference."—The Bulletin, San Francisco, Cal.

Complete Catalogue of ALDEN'S Publications (64 pages) sent free. NOT sold by book-sellers—no discounts allowed except to Stockholders in The Provident Book Co., which is open to all. Books sent for examination before payment, satisfactory reference being given.

In Brief.

A little girl is quoted who said: "Mamma says I'm five, but, counting all the good times I've had, seems as if I most a hundred."

Countryman (coming into town, and gazing at the network of overhead wires): "Just see how nothing is any good in these cities. Even the houses have to be tied together to keep them from falling."

Polite tramp: "Will you oblige me with a little vinegar and a bit of rag, madam? I've bruised my heel." Lady of the house: "I'm very sorry, but our vinegar is all out; wouldn't a little rum do as well?" Tramp: "I don't know madam; but I'll try it, and—er—never mind the rag."

Doubtless Archbishop Corrigan of New York has a large income, but he has a large cathedral to support. He has his fine marble "palace" rent free, and a salary of $5,000 a year. Then each church in the diocese, except the poorer ones, has to pay him $200 a year for the support of the cathedral. This cathedraticum, as it is called, is said to aggregate $15,000 a year. Then a dollar fee is charged for each burial in the Catholic cemetery, which amounts to about $20,000 a year. To this must be added many large gifts from wealthy parishioners. The princes of this world are mighty.

There are 400 Mormon bishops in Utah, 2,423 priests, 2,947 teachers, and 6,854 deacons. Salt Lake City is divided into wards of eight or nine blocks each, and a bishop is put in charge of each ward. Under him there are two teachers, whose business it is to learn the employment and income of every resident of the ward and report the same to the bishop. Then the bishop collects the tenth of each man's income and turns it in to the church authorities. The same complete system exists all over the Territory. As the bishops get a good commission on their collections they make very zealous and persistent collectors.

The great German scholar, Prof. Dr. De Wette, furnished Theodore Parker, and almost all modern infidels of that school, with the weapons with which they attack the faith of the Christian church. But this same De Wette, called the "universal doubter," was so fortunate as to marry an eminently holy and lovely Christian lady, and the influence of her merciful spirit and life led to a wondrous change in all his thought and teaching. In his last commentary we find these memorable words: "Only this I know; in no other is there salvation, except in the name of Jesus Christ, and him crucified: and for the human race there is nothing higher than the God-man realized in him, and the kingdom of God planted in him."

The Calcutta Englishman calls attention to a remarkable decline in the popularity of the great Rath Jattra, or Car Festival, at the Juggernaut Temple in Orissa. That the number of visitors this year shows a large decrease might have been expected, owing to the recent loss of two pilgrim steamers and to the common belief that the loss of a third had been predicted. It appears, however, that although the falling off is more marked this year, it has been going on steadily for some years past. The religious enthusiasm of the crowd is said to be also disappearing. There is no longer a wild rush for the car, in which the idol is dragged from the temple to a country house and back again, and on several occasions it has been necessary to hire coolies to perform the work.

In the foundations of the great Auditorium Building, now going up at the corner of Congress, Wabash and Michigan avenues, Chicago, they have used one million feet of timber. The excavation was made first, nearly twenty-five feet; then over the bottom was closely placed twelve inch timber about twenty five feet long; across these was placed another course of closely laid timbers, same size (these timbers are constantly under water); on this was closely laid a course of railroad rails; across this another course of iron rails; and on this a concrete about four feet thick. It takes six thousand tons of iron in all for the building and ten million bricks. The building will cost two million dollars, and will be the best structure in the city. A portion of it is to be ten stories high, and will require one or two years yet to finish. These facts were obtained of the architect who has charge of the work.

The Century Magazine.

With the November, 1887, issue the Century commences its thirty-fifth volume with a regular circulation of almost 250,000. The War Papers and the Life of Lincoln increased its monthly edition by 100,000. The latter history having recounted the events of Lincoln's early years, and given the necessary survey of the political condition of the country, reaches a new period, with which his secretaries were most intimately acquainted. Under the caption the writers now enter on the more important part of their narrative, viz.: the early years of the War and President Lincoln's part therein.

Lincoln in the War,

Supplementary War Papers,

following the "battle series" by distinguished generals, will describe interesting features of army life, tunneling from Libby Prison, narratives of personal adventure, etc. General Sherman will write on "The Grand Strategy of the War."

Kennan on Siberia.

Except the Life of Lincoln and the War Articles, no more important series has ever been undertaken by the Century than this of Mr. Kennan's. With the previous preparation of four years' travel and study in Russia and Siberia, the author undertook a journey of 15,000 miles for the special investigation here required. An introduction from the Russian Minister of the Interior admitted him to the principal mines and prisons, where he became acquainted with some three hundred State exiles,—Liberals, Nihilists, and others,—and the series will be a startling as well as accurate revelation of the exile system. The many illustrations by the artist and photographer, Mr. George A. Frost, who accompanied the author, will add greatly to the value of the articles.

Miscellaneous Features

will comprise several illustrated articles on Ireland, by Charles De Kay; papers touching the field of the Sunday-School Lessons, illustrated by E. L Wilson; wild Western life, by Theodore Roosevelt; the English Cathedrals, by Mrs. van Rensselaer, with illustrations by Pennell; Dr. Buckley's valuable papers on Dreams, Spiritualism, and Clairvoyance; essays in criticism, art, travel, and biography; poems: cartoons, etc.

By a special offer the numbers for the past year (containing the Lincoln history) may be secured with the year's subscription for November, 1887, twenty-four issues in all, for $6, or with the last year's numbers handsomely bound, $7.50.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

THE ANARCHISTS.

Johann Most, the anarchist, was arrested Thursday on an indictment for making an incendiary speech, calculated to incite a riot. The prisoner was locked up in one of the cells at police headquarters.

The Newark (N. J.) anarchist, whose saloon license has been revoked, refuses to close his place, and a collision is feared between the police and the "reds."

Petitions are being signed at Hartford, Conn., asking for the resignation of the Rev J. C. Kimball (Unitarian), pastor of Unity church, who, in a sermon last Sunday, compared the executed anarchists to Jesus Christ.

Two dynamite bombs, of the gas-pipe pattern, were found at St. Joseph, Mo., Thursday. One had been placed at the entrance to the city hall. The implements were exploded and showed terrific force. The Chief of Police notified his men to shoot all anarchists who resisted arrest.

What appeared to be a genuine dynamite bomb was found Friday night at the door of the local department of the Columbus, Ohio State Journal. A match was so arranged that if any one stepped on it the fuse would take fire and explode the dread implement.

A gas-pipe bomb, with fuse attached, was found Wednesday night at the door of an orphan asylum in a suburb of Cincinnati. The police took possession of the infernal contrivance,

A dynamite bomb, made of one-inch gas-pipe, with solid brass ends and six caps so placed that a fall would certainly strike one of them, was found by the janitor of the Embury church, Rockford, Ill., Sunday morning. It was placed so that had he opened the church as usual a swinging door would have knocked it down several stone steps and undoubtedly exploded it.

GENERAL.

The gold ledge recently discovered near Prescott, A. T., is said to be the richest ever found in the country. The ledge can be traced for nearly two miles, and the quartz rock taken out averages $100,000 a ton.

The Pennsylvania Railroad Company has decided to establish for its employes a trust savings fund, in which amounts from $5 upward may be deposited, and draw 4 per cent per annum interest.

A contract for two pumping engines of 15 000,000 gallons capacity, each, for the Minneapolis (Minn.) City Waterworks was let Friday. They will cost $129,000, and will be the largest pair west of New York.

Just before noon Friday an aerolite, weighing three tons, fell in the street in front of the Merchants' National Bank at Amsterdam N. Y., creating the greatest excitement. A deep indentation was made by the visitor from on high, in whose mass experts have found traces of iron, nickel, aluminum, and other metals.

During the year ended October 31 last, seventeen Gloucester (Mass.) fishing vessels were lost, 168 men perishing, who left over sixty fatherless children.

Dillard and Anna Bruins, who have been living upon public charity in Indianapolis, have fallen heirs to coal property in Pennsylvania worth nearly one million dollars.

ACCIDENTS.

The Anchor Line steamer, Arizona, was almost entirely destroyed by flames early Thursday at Marquette, Mich. The crew was in great danger for a time, and escaped, the vessel being run into port. The cargo and vessel are a total loss.

An explosion of gasoline lamps in the storage house of the Edison Electric Light Co., at Philadelphia, Thursday night, burned fourteen men, some of whom are not expected to survive.

An Italian workman fell 900 feet down the Hecla Mine shaft at Ishpeming, Mich., Thursday. He leaves a large family.

News was received to the effect that Indians are burning the Oklahoma country. No cause is assigned for the alleged outbreak. The supposition is that there is an uprising against "boomers."

A most disastrous fire visited Memphis, Tenn., Thursday night. It started in the buildings of the Merchants' Cotton Compress and Storage Company, and destroyed them, with 13,200 bales of cotton and several compresses. The loss will reach $800,000, on which there is not a great deal of insurance.

Robbers, who reported they were detectives, committed several burglaries in Tompkinsville, the county seat of Monroe, Kentucky, Thursday morning, and then set fire to the town, and it was almost wholly destroyed. The county records wore all burned.

A passenger train on the Brazil Branch of the Evansville and Indianapolis road was thrown from the track near Brazil Friday night, and the engineer was buried beneath his locomotive, which, with a coach, was consumed by flames. The fireman and brakeman were seriously injured, as were some of the passengers.

In the vicinity of Hope, Ark., and in the hills and bottoms of the Red and Sulphur Rivers, forest fires are raging. Many farm houses and out buildings have been destroyed, and numbers of hogs and cattle have been burned to death. At Little Rock the smoke is almost suffocating and unless rain speedily falls the losses throughout the State will be very heavy.

Barnam's great show in winter quarters at Bridgeport, Conn., was entirely destroyed by fire Sunday evening. In less than thirty minutes the immense two-story building, 600x200 feet, was consumed. Thirty elephants, a rhinoceros, and three lions and a few horses were rescued. The rest perished miserably.

Six men were blown to pieces Wednesday by an explosion in the Hancock Chemical Company's packing house for dynamite at Ishpeming, Mich. No trace of the men or building was found, such was the force of the shock.

It is reported that a few nights ago two negroes of Montgomery, Ala., assaulted Miss Fralish, a respectable young lady, while she was alone at home. The neighbors scoured the country until the brutal negroes were found. They were taken before the young lady who promptly identified them. The negroes were then chained to a pile of logs, which was set on fire and the two were soon enveloped in flames. Their cries were most pitiful, but they were left to their fate and burned to ashes.

FOREIGN.

The Czar of Russia arrived in Berlin Friday morning. The preparations to receive him were in keeping with his rank. The enthusiasm displayed was only moderate. The Czar is looking very sad and careworn. The Czarina and the Princess William were more heartily cheered than were their husbands. The spectators displayed more curiosity than enthusiasm. As the Czar and Prince William were driving through the Koenigs platz a man threw a paper into the carriage in which they were riding. The occurrence, for a moment, caused intense excitement among the onlookers. The man was immediately seized by the police. Later, while the imperial party were passing through Unter den Linden, a young man tried to throw a petition into the Czar's carriage. He was arrested.

It is said that Tippoo Tib, the African chief upon whom Stanley relied so much for assistance in the Congo country, has proved traitor to the explorer, and that the latter has been compelled to fight to save his life. His rear guard is reported annihilated.

The Dutch steamer, W. A. Scholten, Captain Taat, which left Rotterdam Saturday for New York, was sunk by a collision with the steamer Rosa Mary, of Hartlepool, at 11 o'clock at night ten miles off Dover, England. The Scholten carried a complement of 230 passengers and crew. The steamer Ebro of Sunderland rescued ninety of the crew and passengers and landed them at the Sailors' Home at Dover; 132 others are missing. One passenger and a child of the party brought to Dover were found dead from exposure. It is hoped that passing vessels have rescued the missing ones.

Letters from Berlin describe the state of public nervousness and solicitude as truly painful. The popular conviction in Berlin is that it is a close race which shall go first, the Emperor, the Empress or the Crown Prince. All three are regarded as stricken with death. The aged Kaiser is forced to get sleep, and spends the most of his waking hours in a sort of lethargy, broken only by attacks of agonizing colic.

ESTABLISHED 1868.

THE CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE,

The CYNOSURE represents the Christian movement against the Secret Lodge System; discusses fairly and fearlessly the various movements of the lodge as they appear to public view, and reveals the secret machinery of corruption in politics, courts, and social and religious circles.

There are in the United States
Some 200 different Lodges,
With 2,000 000 members,
Costing $20,000 000 yearly.

This mighty world power confronts the church and seeks to rule and ruin every Christian Reform.

No Christian Reform Movement of the day is so necessary, yet so unpopular and beset with difficulties, as that which would remove the dark pall of oaths, dark-lantern meetings, secret signs, mysterious and pagan worship about altars condemned by the Word of the Living God.

No other paper gives the best of its correspondence and editorial strength to this vitally important reform. The CYNOSURE should be your paper in addition to any other you may take.

Because it is the representative of the reform against the Lodge, with ablest arguments, biographical and historical sketches, letters from lecturers, seceders and sufferers from lodge persecution. The ablest writers on this subject from all denominations and all parts of the country contribute. Special departments for letters from our metropolitan centers, on the relation of secret orders to current events.

The CYNOSURE began its twentieth volume September 22, 1887, with features of special and popular interest.

TERMS: $2.00 per year; strictly in advance, $1.50. Special terms to clubs. Send for sample copy.

ELEVEN SHARES TAKEN.

The proposition to send 1000 copies of the Cynosure to colored ministers in the South has an excellent endorsement from Bro. Hinman, the N. C. A. Southern agent, who evidently had not seen the proposition in the Cynosure when he wrote. Please turn to his letter and read where he says, speaking of the effort to send the New York Voice to all ministers."There is still greater need of a fund to send the Cynosure to the ministers; for while there are many papers that will give the people the facts about temperance, there are very few that will tell the truth about the 'unfruitful works of darkness.' I suggest that $1,000 be raised and applied to that purpose."

Several friends have sent in since last week and eleven of the hundred fifteen dollar shares are taken. We are almost impatient. Dear friends, let us hasten this good work. Send what you can and remember how much every dollar heretofore invested in this way has accomplished.

The announcement that Gladstone will visit this country next spring brings a thrill of satisfaction to every American heart. The greatest of modern statesmen has not always appreciated this country at its full value, but his views have changed since the war, as have those of many other people, and he is now more fully in sympathy with our institutions than any of his compeers, unless we except sturdy old John Bright. Mr. Gillig, the banker of the American Exchange, London, who brings word of this visit, says that the advice of physicians that an ocean voyage will benefit his health has inclined Mr. Gladstone to overcome his aversion to a sea voyage, and he has always cherished a desire to visit this country. He will remain about two months and will visit the principal cities.

The Golden Rule of Boston says: "At Sidon, sister city to old Tyre, the home of ancient Masonry, there are now going on, partly impeded by the unprogressive and greedy Turkish government, most interesting excavations. Already eighteen sarcophagi have been found, richly sculptured. On one was carved eighteen statues, about three feet high, and inscriptions in Phœnician and hieroglyphical characters. These monuments are at least about three thousand years old, and may, when deciphered, throw light on Bible history." Tyre, as the seat and source of ancient Baal worship, was also the home of the Masonic lodge. The legend of Hiram Abiff is of but little account in comparison. We suggest that as Lieutenant Gorringe of Obelisk fame is dead, that the lodges of this country send their renowned Poet Laureate, Rob. Morris, the champion prevaricator, to supervise the Masonic part of these explorations. His experience in cutting Masonic marks in conspicuous places about Palestine would be of immense advantage to the lodge in this instance.

Dr. Munhall, who began another great meeting in the Doan Music Hall, Cleveland, November 20th, attended the recent convention in Philadelphia on Bible Inspiration. While there he explained to the editor of the Christian Statesman somewhat of his course in a revival meeting in dealing with prevalent public evils."My sermon last Sabbath afternoon," he said,"before three thousand men in the Armory in Columbus, under which some four hundred young men arose to profess conviction of sin and desire for salvation, was on 'Sins of Impurity and the Open Saloon.' I have delivered that sermon some sixty times in as many cities, and as far as I have been able to trace its results, about eighteen thousand men have been awakened by it to desires for a better life." It has been a sad fashion with our evangelists, as well as our pastors, to carefully avoid direct attacks upon sins which might be popular with some part of their congregations. Thank God that Moody, Pentecost and Munhall are setting a better example, and are proving that the Holy Spirit will bless the truth spoken faithfully, though it may cut down the vile sins that grow in secret and the people love.

Dr. Pentecost has lately closed a work of salvation in the busy city of Amesbury in the northeastern corner of Massachusetts, the home of the poet Whittier. He began the work October 9. The town was full of intense activity, but all for the present life; and the evangelist found the task of arousing the slumbering churches a difficult one. For a time the congregations were composed of all classes but the vigorous youth and young men and women. This class, which he desired so much to reach, was too busy to care for their souls. In an article in Words and Weapons for November, Mr. Pentecost says of one great hindrance to the Gospel work: "The town is full of all kinds of clubs, secret societies and other associations, where men especially congregate to spend such evenings as they have. More church members, we are told, are found in the Masonic and Odd-fellows' lodges, and in the rooms of other clubs and secret societies, than can be found on any single night in all the prayer meetings of the town." In the December Words and Weapons, Dr. Pentecost devotes a whole article to this lodge stumbling-block in Amesbury. It seems to have been a stronghold of the devil, nearly impregnable; but doubtless the faithful testimony of the evangelist will bear fruit, and he would find its blessed effect should he visit the place again.

The second trial of John Arensdorf, the brewer, for the murder of Haddock began in Sioux City, Iowa, November 14. The jury selected after several days' examination had a good share of the farmer class—promise of a more hopeful result than the disagreement at the first trial, when, had it not been for one noble old farmer who held out against the other eleven, this leader in murder conspiracy would have gone free to seek another victim. The attorneys of the State have found two important witnesses, a milkman and his wife, who saw the murder and knew that Arensdorf fired the shot. It was expected that the defense would shatter this testimony, but they have not yet assailed it. As before, the testimony of the defense is very contradictory, but shrewd lawyers who well know how "to make the worse appear the better reason," will make all confusion disappear when they address the jury. The people of Sioux City are generally eager to see justice done and the guilty Arensdorf convicted, yet not a few, and some prominent business men, are reported as using all their influence on the other side. May God hear the right and take vengeance upon the guilty.

Prohibition has another backset in the loss of the election in Atlanta, Georgia, by a small majority. Henry F. Grady, editor of the Constitution, who took an active part against the saloon, says of the result: "The defeat of the prohibition was not unexpected. From first to last the Negroes were almost solidly against it. Much of this was due to the influence of Yellowstone Kit, a rich and shrewd medicine vender, worshiped by the Negroes, who spoke night after night at the anti-meetings, carried on the shoulders of Negro men. The part taken in the campaign by the ladies was not significant. Prohibition was not beaten on its merits. The law was too extreme, it being impossible to get even medicinal or sacramental wine without violating it. Its administration has been often unwise. Had it not been for these things, the undeniable good it worked would have overcome even the great Negro majority against it. Atlanta will not suffer seriously. The bar-room as it existed—insolent, political, corrupting, and ruling—is a thing of the past. A conference will be held to devise a plan upon which the people can unite. Not the slightest ill-feeling survives the contest, which was without precedent in vigor and aggression. A City Council is to be elected on Dec. 6. In fighting for that, the leaders of the two factions will probably unite on a ticket of the best men in the city, and will seek to elect it by a compact of the conservative element of both sides." Mr. Grady two years ago was the chief antagonist of George W. Cable in his efforts to reconstruct the public opinion of the South on the subject of caste. Had he and others served their God as faithfully as they have their prejudices, the Negro vote instead of now being cast against the best interests of the country, would be joined with their white brethren in forever casting out the saloon demon. Mr. Grady is not reaping a profitable harvest, but he did not sow for any other.

The National W. C. T. U. at Nashville was a meeting of great enthusiasm and success. The superintendents of the forty departments of work in the W. C. T. U. met November 14th for general consultation. In the convention proper among the hundreds of delegates and visitors appeared those of Mrs. Hannah Whitall Smith of Philadelphia; Pundita Remaboi, the learned high-caste Hindoo lady; Mrs. Esther T. Hough of Vermont, editor of the Woman's Magazine; Miss Mary Allen West of Chicago, editor of the Union Signal; Rev. Dr. Stevenson of Philadelphia, editor of the Christian Statesman, and Rev. Dr. Weight of Cambridge, Mass., who conducted a class in New Testament Greek, for the evangelistic department. Frances E. Willard was re-elected president, the old board being honored in like manner. A framed photograph of the temperance temple to be erected in Chicago, to cost $850,000 first proposed by Mrs. T. B. Carse, was exhibited and highly praised, and $6,000 toward its construction was pledged. Resolutions were passed supporting the Blair education bill; a protest against personalities in politics; urging a temperance attorney at Washington to look after the body's interests; vigilance in the preservation of the Christian Sabbath, and urging men to sustain such laws by their votes; equal suffrages; scientific temperance instruction and indorsement of Mrs. Mary H. Hunt; work among colored people, and the reaffirmation of the former resolutions regarding the Prohibition party. Mrs. Tunstall, president of the Indian Territory Woman's Christian Temperance Union, spoke eloquently of the condition of the Territory regarding temperance. She told how, notwithstanding the United States Government is pledged to keep out liquor, it is smuggled in in eggshells, sacks of flour, sold as kerosene oil, and brought in in every possible way. The Indian women all favored temperance and suffrage, she said. The convention adopted a syllabus of the matter and manner of scientific temperance instruction in the public schools.

WEST AFRICAN ABUSES OF WOMEN.

BY J. GOMER, MISSIONARY AT SHERBRO.

I write particularly concerning the women amongst whom I live and labor; but what is true of the abuses of the women here, I have reason to believe is largely true of all African tribes. Of all heathen nations I know of none so degraded as the African; and of all the women of the world I know of none so abused as the African women, and we need not look far for the cause of this state of things, for besides the rum so universally used all along the coast, there are numerous secret societies, some exclusively for women. Foremost amongst these is the Boondoo.

I have tried to learn the nature and object of this society; all I can learn is that girls are taught etiquette, to sing, dance, anoint their bodies, to paint their bodies in the most grotesque manner possible. The Boondoo is to the African girl what the high school or seminary is to the American girl; and it has such reputation here that any female that has not been to Boondoo is called a Gbokah, i. e., a rude or vulger person.

A few years ago a man sent me word that he wished to put two of his daughters in the mission school to be trained. I sent him word that he should come himself and see me. He came, and seemed very anxious that his daughter should learn the white man's book, and all the white man's fashion. I told him we would take the girls and teach them on condition that they be left to us entirely; that they could never follow the Boondoo, or yassy, or any of the country medicines (religions or secret societies) again.

"But these are country girls," said he.

"Very true," said I, "but we will train them for God and the white man's medicine, and it won't do to mix them."

After some farther talk he said, "Very well, I will see the mammy first." I have not seen the man since.

Notwithstanding the supposed refining and elevating nature of these societies the women do not escape the most cruel treatment. Last week a young girl in Shengay told me her story: "My missis send me to Boondoo." (The sessions are held in a thick bush near to a town and last from two to six months.) Whilst in the Boondoo her father died, and the people of the town had to "pull the cry," which means to eat, drink, and dance for several days. She was sold for a cow to be eaten at her father's "cry," and was taken to another town. A man by the name of Baw Baw got into a fight and some of his teeth were broken out. A country court decided that they must pay him for his teeth. She was given to the man to pay for his teeth. She went to the English officer that has lately been stationed in a town near to where she was living, and reported that she had been given to the man for a slave. The officer told her she was free to go where she pleased, and sent her here. The man Baw Baw has followed her here and claims that she is his wife, and demands her; but the constables here refuse to give her up. What is greatly needed here is aWest African girls' home, where a hundred, yea, a thousand, of these harmless and friendless creatures could be cared for.

THE LEAVEN OF THE LODGE.

FROM A PAPER READ BY J. W. WOODWORTH BEFORE THE MILWAUKEE DISTRICT METHODIST EPISCOPAL CONFERENCE.

Jesus says, "Behold, I come quickly and my reward is with me to give every one according as his work shall be." Suppose he were to come quickly as we understand that word to mean, would the hosts of itinerant ministers and of local preachers and all the members of what is called Methodist churches, numbering many millions—would they, we say, be ready to meet him at his coming? I think not. But many of the leaders of this vast host would want to hide their heads beneath the mountains from the face of Him that sitteth upon the throne and from the wrath of the Lamb "who is of purer eyes than to behold iniquity," and "cannot look upon sin with any allowance."

There is an evil in our beloved church which must be purged out; and may God hasten the time. I refer to Freemasonry, by which the mind is enslaved, which is worse than the old African slavery, which enslaved the body but left the mind free. The evil, we think, exists mostly among the so-called great and wise and good men of our church. Imagine one of these dignified men stripped almost nude, with a cable tow around his body, hoodwinked and led around a room, the laughing stock of devils incarnate, compelled to kneel and swear oath after oath—such cruel oaths as were never administered in any Christian or civilized court—swearing to persecute any one of their number who would dare to divulge the secrets of their order, and to submit to have their own throats cut or their bowels torn out if they divulged the guilty secrets. Think of these very same men, perhaps the next day, going into a public assembly of respectable men and women and attempting to guide their steps into the way of life! Could you imagine anything more insulting to a true child of God? A true and accepted Mason can, in my view, certainly not be the servant of the Divine Redeemer, who commanded his disciples saying, "Swear not at all, neither by heaven, for it is God's throne; neither by the earth, for it is his footstool; neither shalt thou swear by thine head because thou canst not make one hair white or black."

The leaven of Freemasonry in the church is like the leaven of the Pharisees of which Christ told his disciples to beware. It is hypocrisy, deceit and guile, and gross wickedness, if we may credit the testimony of good men who have repented of the sins and horrible oaths into which they had been duped. These come out boldly denouncing Freemasonry as a master-piece of the devil, hatched out of his infernal brain to destroy souls. But our Lord Jesus will defeat Satan, for he will take the prey from the mighty, and he will purify the church.

Freemason ministers are in low reputation now among the well-informed of mankind; and I trust that soon they will have no flocks over which to preside, to feed on the fat, and clothe them with the wool. "For thus saith the Lord God unto the shepherds, Woe be the shepherds of Israel that do feed themselves! Should not the shepherds feed the flocks?" These words of the God of Israel were spoken in Ezekiel's day to the shepherds of Israel, but they are not of less force now, for the same woe of God is out against the same class of shepherds in this our day. Their end will be according to their works. But what a glorious reward awaits the true shepherd, "for when the chief Shepherd shall appear he shall receive a crown of glory that fadeth not away;" and we have many true shepherds in the church. Jesus knoweth them that are his; and let every one that nameth the name of the Lord depart from iniquity."

THE SOUTHERN LOUISIANA LABOR TROUBLES.

BY REV. H. H. HINMAN.

A minister of the Methodist Episcopal church, who resides at Pattersonville, said he was present when the sheriff's posse fired on the colored strikers, killing four men and wounding three others. There was absolutely no excuse for the murder. There was no riot and no resistance of law. The only pretext was, that the company did not at once disperse. The military who were present did not fire. The shooting of four white laborers at Terrebonne by colored strikers (as it is supposed) was the real incentive, yet no one for a moment imagines that the men shot at Pattersonville had anything to do with the shooting at Terrebonne. There has been much difference of opinion as to the propriety of calling out the troops. The planters approve it, but the Knights of Labor denounce it. It was probably quite unnecessary, but may have been supposed to be a wise precaution.

The real cause of all the trouble was the action of the Knights of Labor in New Orleans, who sought to make use of the plantation hands to further their purposes, and who made them promises that they had no means to fulfill. These laborers were getting from 75 cents to $1 per day, with 50 cents a watch (three hours) for night work. This is larger than the average wages of the South. There are a few planters who have improved appliances for sugar making, who could well afford to pay more. The large majority who use the old open-kettle process can hardly sustain themselves at the present price of sugar. The crop this year is unusually fine and rich. The season so far has been favorable, yet a single hard frost would destroy much of its value.

The strike was ordered in the highth of cane-cutting. The hands who were under contract by the year, and were living in their employers' houses, were compelled, often against their will, to stop work. The result was that other laborers were hired, mostly Germans, Italians, Chinese and Negroes from New Orleans, and the work went on with but partial suspension. Add to this, most of the strikers were evicted.

I stopped at Terrebonne Nov. 14th, and found the M. E. church full of women and children who had fled there for refuge. I called on Rev. Daniel Clay, pastor of the Congregational church, who told me that he was constantly importuned to open his church for the reception of these helpless families. He said that if the weather became cold and stormy he would do so, but so long as it was warm and dry they could live outdoors. He had built the church and preached for them for eight years. He thought the strike wholly unjustifiable and exceedingly foolish. He said that many of them would go to work, but were afraid to do so, and were vainly expecting help that did not come.

Mr. Clay was born in Kentucky in 1812, and is the son of the distinguished Henry Clay. He was a slave until made free by the war. He was sold South when he was but twelve years old, and had no opportunities for an education. He owns a small farm of this good land (Terre-Bonne), and is a vigerous old man of excellent judgment, a good preacher, and of unquestionable piety. He had never joined any secret society, but had always opposed them. He gave up the use of strong drink and tobacco, and persuaded most of his people to do so. They had had little connection with the secret societies until the Knights of Labor came there, and by specious promises induced most of his people to join them. He was greatly troubled with the present condition of things, and would have been very glad to have me address his congregation, except that it would be impossible to get them together.

The great alluvial region of Southern Louisiana has all the elements of vast agricultural wealth. In natural water-ways it is scarcely surpassed by any part of the world. It has but a single adversary, and that is water. There are vast marshes and cypress swamps that are uninhabitable, but if drained would produce magnificent crops. Large tracts, that before the war were in sugar plantations, are now simply great marshes. Here and there the old chimnies rise up out of the swamps. Bayou Terrebonne, that twenty-five years ago was navigable for steamboats, is now but a small, shallow ditch. Efforts are being made to restore it, and a steam dredge is now at work on its southern extensions. Some of the plantations are sufficiently high, but with most there is a constant struggle and expense to free them from water. As might be supposed there is considerable malarial fever, but not so much as used to prevail in Michigan, and the colored people are quite healthy.

We are now paying two and one-half cents per pound in duties on brown sugars. Louisiana produces but a fraction of our supply. After a hundred years' trial, it is found that sugar-cane can never be more than an exotic and sugar production an exotic industry. We are paying each year $48,000,000 in sugar duties, or about 100 per cent ad valorum. Of this vast sum, it is supposed that the sugar planters receive about $7,000,000 per year. If this sum were withheld nearly all the planters who follow the old process of boiling in open kettles, and they are in a large majority, would have to abandon the business. The result would not necessarily be financial ruin. These lands are well adapted to the culture of rice, cotton and corn; but it would result in the breaking up of many of the plantations and their sale or rental in small holdings, to the Negro laborers. This plan has taken the place, very largely, of the old plantation system in the great cotton belt and has been a benefit to the cotton interest. Here it would, I believe, result in a great benefit to both proprietor and laborer.

Let, therefore, the seven millions that these planters receive from our revenues be annually expended in drainage in Louisiana and Florida, and the sugar interest, so far as it is practicable, would take care of itself. The best equipped plantations would continue with a fair profit and the nation would be saved at least $41,000,000 annual tax. The prairies of Louisiana would furnish the cotton districts the corn and pork which they now get from the North, and all departments of society would be enriched.

Two cases of high-pressure sparkling champagne, one intended for President Cleveland and the other for Secretary of State Bayard, arrived at this port on Monday on the steamer Lord Gough. Colonel G. G. Fisher, an ex-United States Consul, had the wine in charge. The champagne being intended for the highest dignitaries in the country, the ex-Consul presumed that they would be admitted free of duty. Surveyor Campbell examined his law books. He could not find any clause which would allow the wine to come ashore without the usual tariff tax, so the President and the Secretary will be compelled to wait a couple of days for their mellow gift.—Philadelphia Record.

Leadville, Col., supports 1,100 saloons—but it has no money in its treasury to support its public schools.

WHY NOT JOIN THE G. A. R.?

Since the organization of the Grand Army of the Republic, I have been frequently urged to join the lodge and become more personally identified with the "boys in blue." In each instance where committees visited me, I replied that, if there was nothing objectionable in the lodge, I would join it at the earliest opportunity. Permit me to give your readers a dialogue that took place while I was pastor of our church in Sacramento, California. It occurred in the spring of 1878. For convenience I will use the abbreviations Com. for committee and C. for candidate, whom I am supposed to be. I will state the points only.

Com.—We were appointed to invite you to become a member of Summer Post No. -- of this city. Our boys have heard your patriotic enunciations upon several occasions since you became a resident of the city, and would be pleased to have you identify yourself with our Post.

C.—Comrade, if there is nothing objectionable in your lodge, I would not object to being associated with those who stood at my side when our flag was about to be stained by the hand of traitors; but I cannot consistently join you until I am made acquainted with your rules of decorum and your tenets of civil and religious beliefs, and be able to indorse them.

Com.—We can assure you that there is nothing in our lodge that you would not approve. When Rev. —— was pastor of the —— church, he was a member of our Post, and was our chaplain. We have had no clergyman in the city since who had been in the army, and our present chaplain cannot, of course, take part with us only on public occasions. We would like to have you become a member so that we could choose you as—

C.—Do I understand you that your present chaplain (Rev. R. Sheliers) cannot officiate in the lodge because he was not in the army? He is a patriot, I am sure, and was one all through the war.

Com.—Yes, of course, our Post is open only to all honorably discharged soldiers.

C.—If I were to join, would you exclude my wife from attending the lodge with me?

Com.—The meetings are held only with interest to those who belong to the Post.

C.—Yes, I believe that to be all right so long as it does not conflict with the interests of others; but I should feel embarrassed to join a society that would exclude my wife from sitting with me to enjoy the deliberations you claim to be of so great value to me. Would you then permit me to tell her upon my return home what occurred at the lodge, so she could have common interest with myself, and feel assured that her husband was indced connected with a society that brought honor upon herself and her family?

Com.—We have but few secrets. Only such as prevent impostors from imposing on us.

C.--Would you allow me to examine your ritual?

Com.—Yes, here it is.

C.—This is not the one I desired to see. I would like to look into the active and practical workings of the society.

Com.—That is not for outsiders to see; but then there is nothing in it that you would objcct to, we are sure.

C.—Answer me then a few questions. Do you take saloon-keepers in? And do you take spiritualists, and infidels, and Kearneyites? Suppose I would object to associating with men whose business is inimical to my home; and with infidels and debauched spiritualists, whose principles are calculated to destroy the institutions of both church and state, would your society allow me the privilege to either confer them to the principles of civil and religious purity, or move to expel them from the lodge?

Com.—You see we are not a religious society, and cannot interfere with the personal rights of individuals.

C.—Yes, that may be, but does not the business of making drunkards, and of inculcating anti-Christian sentiments and doctrines, interfere with me and my church, and their work in this city? How can I consistently fellowship a man in a lodge whom I would not take into church? And when you tell me that you do take such characters in, and then prevent Christian men from correcting the evils of their beliefs and practices, you give the fullest proof to my convictions that Christian men cannot consistently be identified with an institution that harbors members the church would not retain.

Com.—Our object is to perpetuate the patriotism that held us together while at the front, and not to teach religious tenets and enforce religious practiccs.

C.—Comrades, our patriotism has its best exhibition in the public maintenance of those institutions that discourage vice and crime, and provide the remedies for these evils; and when you tell me that wicked persons, who denounce the church, blaspheme God, malign Christian men, women and children, cannot be, and are not, restrained by your society, I am done. I will not yoke my neck with such fellows.

Com.—We regret that you cannot come in among us, and hope you will give it further thought, then we will see you again.

C.—Comrade, in glancing over the ritual you handed me, and comparing your answers to my questions, I plainly see that the G. A. R. is composed of all classes of men. I am also acquainted with many of the boys. When Ingersoll lectured here, some of them applauded his utterances. Last decoration day some of them were beastly drunk. On last Fourth of July, they marched immediately in the rear of a two-horse dray load of whisky, representing one of the industries of our city, while from a bunghole a flag-staff, with flag suspended, invited either the favor or the frown of the populace. The G. A. R. did not frown, but followed the insulting exhibit as though they were there to guard it.

Com.—The boys did not all feel that way about it.

C.—Why did not they respond when I urged them from the sidewalk where I stood to take down the flag and put a stop to the insult?

Com.—That would have raised a rumpus and broke up the order of the day.

C.—Yes, so it would, the boys would have resisted each other. Some of them like rum better than the flag. Comrades, excuse me; I will never go up stairs behind guarded doors, away from my family, to affiliate with persons who claim to be patriots, while at the same time they harbor both men and principles at variance with the state, and madly opposed to the church. I shall continue to live and labor for the church; and shall continue to honor the flag by maintaining the principles of my country. I will not join your Post.

The dialogue ended, and I had no further calls.—Rev. H. J. Becker in the Christian Conservator.

WALKING DELEGATES INDICTED.

The Grand Jury in this city have indicted the committee of the Knights of Labor, who for months past have been engaged in a conspiracy against one O. M. Hartt, because he, being the foreman in a shoe factory, and detecting theft in some of the employes thereof, dismissed them from service. Hartt simply did his duty; and for doing it the Knights of Labor demanded that he should be dismissed by his employer, and the cowardly employer yielded to their demand. He then sought and obtained employment in Philadelphia, and on a similar demand was there discharged. The same process against him with a similar result was renewed in Baltimore. Recently he made a contract with an employer in Newburgh in this State, and the employer intimidated by the same influence was led to break his contract with him.

Such, briefly, is the outline of the facts as they have appeared in the newspapers. They show a deliberate and persistent conspiracy to prevent this man from getting employment anywhere, simply because in discharging his duty he has offended the Knights of Labor. Such a conspiracy is an offense against the law of the State; and upon the presentation of these facts before the Grand Jury, these persecutors and conspirators have been indicted. If the proof upon their trial shall show the facts to be as represented, then they ought to be visited with the extreme penalty of the law, which is a fine of five hundred dollars and one year's imprisonment in the penitentiary. The Knights of Labor ought to be sternly taught that they cannot thus outrage the rights of the citizen without being punished for it. Society is bound to protect every man against such abominable treatment. This is a particularly glaring case, and is a good one for an effective example.—Independent.

THE UNION-LABOR SECRET-SOCIETY PARTY.

When a secret society turns itself into a political party it must expect to receive knocks just like other political organizations. The Knights of Labor were, by the machinations of their leaders, turned into a political party, and, as a consequence, were yesterday ground between the upper and nether millstones of Republican and Democratic parties, until now they present a beautiful dissolving view. A secret society is just the place for socialistic blatherskites and demagogues to come to the surface and push themselves into prominence. They did this very thing in the Union-Labor party, which was avowedly nothing more or less than a party of secret societies. These societies, which were formed for one purpose, have been used for another, and turned into an entirely different direction, simply to serve the political ambitions of their leaders. Take, for instance, the vote for Probate Judge: the Republican candidate received over 31,000; the Democratic over 18,000, and the Union-Labor over 14,000. The combined Republican and Democratic votes, viz., 49,000, shows the sentiment of voters of this county as against the dictation of secret societies in politics. This is a majority of 35,000 over the Union-Labor ticket—the ticket of secret labor societies. We are not criticising the rank and file of the Union-Labor party. We believe that they are thoroughly honest in their convictions and actions; that they have been blindly following their leaders and have been held together rather by pride in their organization than by sound political reasons. Now that the election is over they will begin to inquire into the motives and purposes of the Schrages, the Weiers, the Ogdens, the Davises, the Cavanaughs, et al.; they will discover the demagogism of these would-be reformers and agitators whose assumption to represent the labor of this country was preposterous. This country is a nation of laborers, where no badge of a secret society is required to give a man a chance to work. Here every man has the right to make his own livelihood according to his own free will; if he desires to enter a labor organization, that is his right and privilege, but being in, he cannot lay claim to being the only authorized laborer in this country to the exclusion of others who are not in his organization. This was the tendency of the Ogden-Cavanaugh style of demagogism and dictation in the Union-Labor campaign just closed. It is to be hoped that the lessons of yesterday's defeat will be studied and appreciated by the rank and file of the Union-Labor party, and that in the future demagogism and blatherskite leadership will be uncompromisingly rejected.—Cincinnati Weekly Times.

CARD-PLAYING.

In the fall of 1838 a number of young men, all of us of respectabte families, and, as the world goes, good habits, established a club-room. Soon cards were introduced, and we played simply for the game and as an amusement, without thought of danger or wrong-doing.

One evening, at a game of all-fours, it was proposed, as adding interest to our amusement, to play for cigars, the value of which would only be a few cents. The next trial was for tickets for an exhibition, costing one dollar. Soon we played for money, and one Seventh-day night, about six months after the club was started, just as the town-clock struck the hour of twelve, I threw my last card. The stakes on the table were then eighty dollars. I had lost! I looked back at the downward steps I had already taken, and then toward the future, which was pictured to my mind as a prospective view, and in the distance there appeared the States-prison and the gallows. It seemed clear to me that unless my steps were arrested, I must arrive at one or the other of these. My resolution was taken, and I then and there declared before my companions that I would never touch another card as long as I lived. And I am thankful to that Divine Preserver, who has strengthened me to keep my resolution, through many temptations and much ridicule and reproach.

I give my experience in hope that some who are treading this downward course may be induced to pause and reflect, and seek for the Divine aid, which can alone strengthen them to forsake this captivating snare of the great destroyer of men.—Cor. of Christian Statesman.

IT WILL UNMAN HIM.—We saw a mule taken up to an upper story to serve in drawing up grain. Cleats were nailed on the ascending stairway. The mule came to the ascent and halted. The leader pulled and coaxed, but the mule did not believe in going up, and set himself to stay down with a resolution worthy of a man's imitation. Oats was offered him, but as it was drawn up the mule showed that he loved his principles better than the oats. All projects failed, when a by-stander said, "Let me take him." He took hold of the halter, put a bag around the mule's head, covering its eyes. Then he led the mule around the room several times, and then came to the stairway and hoodwinked mule ran with haste up the ascent. Here we saw the reason why the lodges use the hoodwink and perform the rite of circumambulation. If this process will unmule the mule, it will unman the man.—Conservator.

The local option law would be a real blessing in some localities, and would be a general advantage were it not possible that those counties that choose to go wet, could be the sources of the supply for those who choose to banish the saloon, because they are contiguous, and could, therefore, monopolize the traffic.

OUR SAN FRANCISCO LETTER.

All classes of society have been greatly excited during the past month about a case of murder or suicide; which it is, has not yet been decided by the coroner's jury. If it be a murder, according to the general verdict, it is certainly a rival of "A Celebrated Case," and proves fact to be stranger than fiction. The victim was a young Jew, by the name of Benhayon. He was found lying dead upon the floor of a down-town lodging house on the 23d of October, but lay so composed, with his arms at his sides and his feet together, that the housekeeper thought him drunk, and that companions had carried him in during the night and laid him there. No one in the house knew who he was, or how or when he came there. On examining the room, however, poison was found in a glass near him, and on the table were three letters supposed to have been written by him. One of these was a confession of the murder of his only sister about two years ago, of which crime her husband, Dr. Bowers, was convicted at the time. Another letter was to Dr. Bowers asking his forgiveness for the injury done to him; and saying he would let him suffer no more for his sin. Dr. Bowers was convicted of murdering his wife by slow poisoning with phosphorus, to get the $17,000 insurance on her life, and is now awaiting the decision of the court on his application for a new trial.

At first it was supposed to be suicide, but Benhayon lived at his own home, was very fond of his sister and very bitter against her husband. He was not known to have a room down town; and was not known to have been, during his life, in the house in which he died. The room in which the body was found was engaged by a man named Dimig, a few days before the death occurred, and if it proves to be suicide Dimig is a victim of a wonderful chain of circumstantial evidence, indicating that he is one of the chief actors in a foul tragedy. The prevailing belief now is that Dr. Bowers has planned, and lured others to carry out a deep plot to clear himself and gain his own freedom. The letters found have been examined by experts, about half of whom pronounce them forgeries, while the others maintain that they are the genuine writings of Benhayon.

Another case which has incited more than usual interest, is the divorce case of R. H. McDonald, Jr., son of Dr. R. H. McDonald, once Prohibition candidate for governor. After he brought suit for divorce, his wife brought suit for $500,000 damages against Dr. McDonald for alienating the affections of her husband from her. She had a talk with Dr. McDonald about compromising, in a parlor of the Baldwin Hotel. At its close she drew a revolver and shot at him three times, without, however, injuring him. She was then put into prison with her little child, not three years old, and its nurse; after which she was charged with five cases of forgery against her father-in-law, with bail at $8,000. A man named Swalm, whom many suppose committed the forgeries for her, was arrested after starting for the East and lodged in prison in this city. When his trunks were examined they were found to contain $40,000 in gold notes, over $3,000 of Mrs. McDonald's jewelry and a large amount of elegant clothing belonging to her. Thus it seems she was to meet him at the East. The cases promise to reveal a sickening array of family troubles; though it now appears that the McDonalds are the most deeply injured parties.

San Francisco may almost be called a Catholic city; and the chief social attraction just now is the Catholic Fair, in the Mechanics' Pavilion. The proceeds are to go towards completing the new Catholic cathedral, the foundation of which has just been finished. Each parish has a booth which is stored with rich and beautiful furniture, silverware, pictures and useful and fancy articles, besides a large amount of statuary, most of them donated by merchants or private individuals. The most notable feature of the fair is the gambling, which would scarcely be tolerated in a county fair; but is encouraged and indulged in by all classes, because sanctioned by the "Holy Catholic Church." "His Reverence," the Right Reverend Archbishop Reardon, was present, as well as many of the parish clergy, encouraging the ladies by taking chances on articles in the different booths. Reardon is a remarkably young man for the high position which he holds, not looking to be much over thirty years of age. He is also a very intellectual appearing young man, yet very affable and pleasing in his manners. S.

REFORM NEWS.

THE WORK OF OUR AGENT IN THE SOUTH.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—On Saturday, Nov. 12th, I went west from New Orleans on the Southern Pacific railroad, expecting to spend the Sabbath at Terre Bonne, fifty-five miles from the city. Because the name of the station had been changed, I was carried by, and went on to Baldwin, 100 miles. I stayed at Gilbert Seminary, which is under the care of Dr. and Mrs. Godman, and was most hospitably entertained. I preached twice on the Sabbath in the M. E. church to the students and citizens. The pastor, who is an Odd-fellow, endorsed what I said about the orders, though some others thought it a hard saying to maintain that all the societies are bad.

I am now going up the Mississippi River on a steamer. We were stopped by the fog, but the air is now warm and bright. The country, on both sides, seems well settled and beautiful. That the river is higher than the land on each side, is evident. We can only see the tops of the houses and chimneys. One of the problems of science is what to do with the lower Mississippi. Its banks and bed are rising and always threaten the low-lying districts. It grows longer towards the Gulf because it carries its bed along with it, and the land is being cultivated much farther down than it was twenty years ago. It is a mighty and wonderful river. Baton Rouge is in sight and I stop there.

LOUISIANA'S CAPITAL AND ITS CHURCHES.

BATON ROUGE, Nov. 18.—The vast alluvial plain that occupies the entire region of Southern Louisiana, ends at Baton Rouge, 130 miles by the river above New Orleans. Here also end the sugar plantations on the east side of the river. On the west, they continue somewhat higher up. The climatic influences are not widely different from New Orleans. There are orange trees here in full bearing, and I have nowhere seen so large fig trees. The soil in this part of the State is excellent, and the crops of cotton and sugar good, the latter especially so. There is said to be a greater yield of crystalized sugar to the acre than was ever known before.

Baton Rouge is a pleasant little city, and ought to be a more important place than it is. Its elevation above the river, and freedom from floods, ought to make it much healthier than New Orleans. It is said that it was very prosperous before the war, but has never been able to become adapted to the new order of things. A gentleman who kindly showed me through the rather elegant State House, thought that one hundred years hence it would be the garden of the world; that the only drawback was the Negro, and that when they were all sent back to Africa, the country would be prosperous. That is a specimen of the kind of talk that you will hear all over the South. The trouble with such men is, that they are profoundly ignorant of history, arithmetic, and the Ten Commandments. Like the Bourbons, they never learn or forget anything. With a colored population in Louisiana larger than the white, and increasing more rapidly; with a constant advancement on their part, in education and wealth, there is about as little prospect of their being expatriated as there is of their white brethren. Men, like Gen. Jackson in his Macon speech, may prate about slavery as "the gentlest and kindliest relation that ever existed between labor and capital," but no possible change will ever restore the old order of things, or get rid of the Negro. He will remain the co-laborer and fellow-citizen with the race to whom, without his choice, he is largely united in the ties of consanguinity, and with whom he must inevitably bear the equal burdens and responsibilities of government.

Baton Rouge is beginning to grow. It is slowly taking its place in the New South. I find the churches here as much afflicted with the lodge pestilence as elsewhere. A pastor of one of the largest colored churches, told me that twelve years ago he joined the Masons. After being a member of the order three weeks, he saw a Mason shoot down an unoffending man in the streets. His lodge forbade any one taking sides against the murderer. He left them, and as a pastor, had lifted up his voice against them. He said that the time had been when the influence of the societies was so great that no member of the church could be brought to discipline; but that such influence had measurably declined. Three other ministers gave similar testimony, and all regarded the lodge system as a nuisance to be abated as speedily as possible.

I reached the city Wednesday afternoon, and preached that evening in a colored Baptist church, Rev. Geo. Bird, pastor. My testimony against the lodge caused some commotion, but was not unkindly taken. Here I found teaching, Miss Emily Beeken, formerly of the Mendi Mission, West Africa. She has been several years laboring here and at New Orleans. She expressed hearty sympathy with my work. Next night I preached in Mt. Zion Baptist church, Rev. H. Williams, pastor. He reads the Cynosure, and heartily welcomed my testimony against the lodge. He says that most of the people are out in the sugar region, and will not be in till Saturday night. He is anxious that I should remain and preach on the Sabbath, which I have consented to do, and also to preach in one of the Methodist churches. The pastor of the only white Baptist church in the city does not reside here, but I understand he reads the Cynosure and sympathizes with our work, and yet it would be hard to find a city anywhere, in which the combined power of the lodge and saloon is greater than here.

I am exceedingly glad of the movement that sends The Voice to all the ministers of the land. It is a most wise and profitable expenditure of means. There is still greater need of a fund to send the Cynosure to the ministers; for while there are many papers that will give the people the facts about temperance, there are very few that will tell the truth about the "unfruitful works of darkness." I suggest that $1,000 be raised and applied to the purpose.

NATCHEZ AND ITS SCHOOLS.

NATCHEZ, Miss., Nov. 22.—On my last Sabbath at Baton Rouge, I preached three times: in the Shiloh Baptist, the Mt. Zion Baptist, and the A. M. E. churches. The day was chilly, and there was no provision for warming the houses of worship, which made the attendance smaller than otherwise. Nevertheless there was a good attendance at Mt. Zion at 3 P. M., and I preached from Eph. 5: 11–13. Most of those who listened, heartily assented, and the pastor, who has seen the inside of the lodge, gave his earnest endorsement. At night, in the M. E. church, the pastor told me I had better not say much about the societies, as his people would not receive it. I did not say much, and what I did say was received with evident disfavor. I had many hearty amens, until I spoke of the lodge iniquity. I think, however, the pastor endorsed what I said, and was glad to have it spoken.

On Monday morning I left Natchez by the Mississippi Valley railroad. We saw no more orange trees or cane fields, but found a fine cotton region, with numerous small villages. At Harriston the road intersects with the Natchez, Jackson and Columbus railroad. Here I had to wait nearly four hours. There were standing on the side track of the M. V. R. R., six cars loaded with about 250 bales of cotton. Sparks from a passing train set them on fire, and in a few minutes they were all enveloped in flames. Of course the cars burned as well as the cotton. Most that could be done was to separate the remaining cars from those which were burning. Within ten days past, immense quantities of cotton have been burned at Memphis, and on ship board, and has led to a consideration of the exceedingly careless way in which it is packed and shipped.

At 5 P. M. we left for Natchez, (28 miles), which our mixed train reached in three hours. I had visited this city in December of 1843, and had not been here since. Except the magnificent bluff, on which it stands, and the roads leading down to the landing, there was nothing to remind me of forty-four years ago. Across the river, where there was then a cotton field, white with its open bolls, there is now a village, and "Natchez under the hill" where there are now some tumble-down houses and dilapidated huts. Nevertheless, Natchez is a pleasant and growing city, with about 11,000 inhabitants and some large manufacturing establishments. A number of large and costly residences are in process of construction. There is a fine building for the colored public school, and its work is supplemented by other institutions.

I visited Natchez College, under the care of Profs. Wadlow and Owens, graduates of Roger Williams University, Nashville, Tenn. There were about seventy students, none of whom are primary. I was greatly pleased with the thoroughness of the instruction, and the proficiency of the students. When I explained to the professors the nature of my work, I found it met their hearty approval. This, they said, was what they had been taught at Roger Williams. They cheerfully gave me the hour from 12 to 1 P. M. I spoke nearly an hour and then answered questions. All were glad to get tracts and expressed a warm interest in the discussion.

I also visited the school for colored young ladies conducted by Rev. A. J. and Mrs. Miller. They have just gotten into a new school building, and their work is one of great promise. Mr. and Mrs. Miller are from Washington, D. C. Mrs. M. was educated at Howard University. Bro. Miller is pastor of the A. M. E. church, the only colored Methodist church in the city. They have a fine house of worship and are strong in numbers. Like nearly all the churches, they are almost devoured by the swarms of secret lodges that infest them. The pastor told me that he had been a Mason, and had helped organize the "Universal Brotherhood of America," which is described in your paper of Nov. 10th. Since then he has seen his mistake, and has withdrawn from them. He reads the Cynosure with great interest. There are several colored Baptist churches here, but I have been able to see but one of the pastors. Providence permitting, I shall go to Jackson, Tougaloo and other points in the center of the State. H. H. HINMAN.

THE LODGE SHOWS FIGHT IN SOUTHWESTERN MISSOURI.

MESSER, Kansas, Nov. 23, 1887.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—At last writing I was speaking at Oronogo, a mining town in Jasper county, Missouri. On returning from Carthage with Rev. J. R. Glassford on the night train of November 15, we found the M. E. church locked, and the report going the rounds that there would be no meeting.

We had no notion of playing that way. Bro. Waggoner, a holiness man and an ex-member of the Masonic lodge in Oronogo, opened the holiness church, and soon it was packed to standing room. Wilbur F. Haughawout, Esq., one of the trustees of the locked church, made a rattling speech in favor of free speech against this miserable oath-bound secret despotism. Then I took the stand with my books; God gave me liberty and I poured a broadside of Masonic Government into the lodge. The threats of violence during the day, and the attempt to decoy me into the baggage car to "do me up," had stirred my blood, and I felt like talking. The utmost quietness and decorum prevailed while I spoke. The fraternity, not satisfied in locking us out, had come up to the meeting in full force and took it like little men, as honoring Albert Pike, robbing Washington's grave, and the treasonable teachings of Masonry were rehearsed to the astonished people, a large part of whom were ladies.

But when Bro. Glassford, a seceded Mason from Carthage lodge, took the floor and began showing up the lodgites and their doings it was the last straw that broke the camel's back. The Masons adjourned our meeting in a regular bedlam of confusion worse than when poor Hiram is slain by Jubelum in the lodge. Nothing has ever stirred the Oronogo and Joplin Masons like these meetings, and this is only the beginning of the end. We have a long list of free Americans who are aroused at this attempt to suppress free speech. Men like Bro. Wilbur F. Haughawout, who have faced rebel lead at Antietam, Gettysburg, Winchester, Chancellorsville, Cedar Mountain, Atlanta, Second Bull Run, and more than twenty hard-fought battles, are not the men to quail when free speech is assailed, and threats heard from organized corruption. They declare that if this is not free America the sooner the public find it out the better. An effort will be made to determine who was the cat-paw of the lodge to lock members of the church out of their own building. But more anon on that.

We are now speaking, distributing N. C. A. literature and listing names in the southeast corner county in the great State of Kansas. It is trying to rain to-day as we are comfortably housed at the pleasant home of Bro. J. C. Peterson, who is a solid American. The rain will lay the dust, which has been very disagreeable to breathe and wade through. Yours for the war, M. N. BUTLER.

THE OHIO STATE CONVENTION.

RESOLUTIONS ADOPTED AT NEW CONCORD, OHIO, NOV. 16TH AND 17TH, 1887.

Resolved, 1. That we reaffirm our former declarations in relation to the anti-Christian and anti-republican nature of secret societies, for whatever purpose formed.

2. We express gratitude to God for the success which has thus far attended our efforts to awaken public attention to the evils of the system of secrecy, as this is seen in the largely increased number of avowed friends of our cause from all ranks and professions, the continually increasing prominence, and widening influence of the N. C. A., and from the many State and other auxiliary associations which have been formed; from the frank and fearless utterances of the Christian and occasionally even of the secular press, on the evils incident to as well as necessarily intended in sworn secrecy. It has come that the charmed circle in which the secret orders fancied themselves included, by which all investigation was precluded, has been broken, and the veil which concealed their character and acts has been torn away, and public opinion recognizes the fact that discussion of their principles and workings is legitimate.

3. We recognize with thankfulness the ordering of Divine Providence in so permitting the indefinite multiplication of secret orders and their constant and almost universal interference and obstruction of the manufacturing and other interests of the country, thus imperilling her commercial and financial prosperity and stability, that thinking men of all classes are gradually opening their eyes to the fact that secret associations are nothing less than a conspiracy against all who are not included in them, and are therefore inherently and essentially unjust, and that they are hurtful to society and dangerous to the state.

4. The secret empire being the organized kingdom of Satan in the world, and the rival and enemy of the church, its overthrow is but a question of time. In the conflict in which we are engaged we recognize the Lord Jesus Christ as our leader and rest on his power and grace to crown our efforts with ultimate and complete victory.

WHEREAS, The National Committee of the Prohibition party is to meet in Chicago for conference in the near future, and among other duties they will be called upon to elect a chairman of their body; and

WHEREAS, We believe in open methods of carrying on honorable work and do not wish the Prohibition party to be made the servant of a secret society; therefore

Resolved, That we request the members of our committe to be appointed to that conference to use their influence to secure the election of a chairman who will not use the organization to strengthen the lodge, but who will confine his efforts to the work of securing national prohibition of the importation, manufacture and sale of intoxicating drinks.

J. P. LYTLE, Chairman of Committee.
S. A. GEORGE, Secretary.

The following officers were elected for the ensuing year:

President: Rev. F. M. Spencer, D. D., New Concord.
First Vice-President: Rev. H. R. Smith, Pagetown.

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE VIRTUES OF THE PILGRIM FATHERS.

OSWEGO, N. Y., Nov. 24, 1887.

EDITOR CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE:—While in America, Canon Farrar delivered a lecture on Dante's Divine Comedy. He told us how the poet was led by Virgil through the Inferno, the hell where sin is punished, and through Purgatorio, the fires where sin is purged, and at last by Beatrice through Paradiso, the heaven where the soul is filled with God. Hell represents selfishness, in the mind of the poet. It is divided into three sections, according to the three all-inclusive sins. These sins are Lust, Hate, and Fraud. There is the Upper Hell, the Hell of Incontinence, the Central Hell, the Hell of Malice, the Nether Hell, the Hell of Fraud and Treachery, in the lowest pit of which sits Satan himself. In the introduction he called attention to the "awful virtues of the Pilgrim Fathers," the virtues that have made Americans what they are. "If you are to-day wise and great, these virtues have made you so. These are the virtues which made the rock, touched by the feet of a few pilgrims, the corner-stone of a great nation. These virtues inspired the writer of the Declaration of Independence. These virtues gave courage to the men who, at Lexington, 'fired the shot heard round the world.' These virtues inspired the words of Canning and Parker, of Whittier and Longfellow. These virtues gave Lincoln the faith which called forth the armies to crush the rebellion and led to victory the 100,000 men under Grant. These virtues have grouped the eight and thirty stars about the Goddess of Liberty and have flung the chains from the slave. If America be true to these virtues she will be the enlightener of the world. But if the sons of these fathers be false to these virtues, then, like all before her, she shall fall from heaven like Lucifer of old." The National Reform Association is calling the nation to the exercise of these virtues.

Last Sabbath evening I preached in Fair Haven M. E. church, Rev. E. C. Crowe, pastor. The Presbyterian congregation, of which Rev. Sweet is pastor, joined in the service. The house was filled, and they listened for over an hour with the closest attention. On Monday I visited Oswego. The editor of the Daily Times cordially received an article on Nation Reform. Arrangements were also made for preaching in the M. E. church next Sabbath evening. Through Mrs. G. M. Gardenier, secretary of the Oswego W. C. T. U., and Mrs. C. B. Randall, the president, arrangements were made for a lecture in Phœnix on Friday evening.

From here I went to Syracuse and called at the office of the Northern Christian Advocate. The editor, Rev. Dr. Warren, very willingly gave a column and a half for National Reform. I had an exceedingly pleasant conversation with him. I shall always think of it with the greatest of pleasure. In the evening I lectured in the Reformed Presbyterian church, Rev. A. G. Wallace, pastor. The Congregational pastor near by was present, and many of his people. We had a very fair audience. Tuesday morning I talked to the students of the Syracuse University. This was the most responsive audience I have met in the Empire State. The Chancellor, Rev. Charles A. Sims, D. D., L. L. D., was out of the city. The Dean, Prof. John R. French, L.L. D., read the hymn in the chapel exercises, and I never heard his equal. His voice is deep and strong; a large man of commanding appearance, he holds his hearers as in a vice. His build is in a striking contrast with Stephens. He was a member of the commission sent by the congress of the Southern Confederacy to confer with Lincoln about terms of peace. He wore a great overcoat which made him look large, and when he took it off he looked correspondingly small. Lincoln afterwards said to Grant, "I never saw such a big chuck with such a little ear."

This university is comparatively new. It was originally Genesee College, located at Lima, I believe. It was removed to Syracuse in 1873. Hon. George F. Comstock, L. L. D., donated a lot of fifty acres. They have a substantial building, costing $250,000. The foundation is laid for a library building near by. Through the munificent contribution of Mr. John Crouse, another building is to be erected next summer. Last Friday they dedicated the Observatory. They have an endowment of $650,000. It is expected soon to reach $1,000,000. "The university now receives annually about $16,000 from its invested funds, and $7,500 from conference professorships." They have a faculty of forty-six instructors, and 430 students. There are three departments, College of Liberal Arts, of Medicine, and of Fine Arts. This institution has adopted co-education.

I called at the office of the Wesleyan Methodist. The editor very promptly gave me the freedom of his columns, and so I wrote an article on National Reform which will soon appear.

On Tuesday evening I lectured in the Sterling Valley United Presbyterian church. Bro. Lytle, the pastor, at the close made a few remarks, indicating where he stood. On Wednesday evening I lectured in the Hannibal Presbyterian church. This is a village of 2,000. Rev. M. A. Gault lectured in this place two years ago. On Thursday evening I lectured in the Reformed Presbyterian church of Sterling Center. Rev. T. J. Allen ministered here for thirteen years. Having resigned, the congregation has called a licentiate, Mr. French, who has signified his intention to accept. On Friday evening I lectured in Phœnix, under the auspices of the W. C. T. U.

Last Friday evening Hon. Benjamin Butterworth of Cincinnati spoke in Rochester, advocating Commercial Union with Canada. Canada, including all the provinces, has an area of 3,500,000 square miles. The United States an area of 3,036,000 square miles. These are separated by a barbed wire fence 4,000 miles long. There are gates at which stand Custom House officers. A man starts over with nine carloads of corn; he must drop three at the gate before entering Canada. He starts back with seven carloads of barley, and three must be left for toll before entering the United States. The world's supply is not more than one year in advance of the starvation line. There is no danger of over-production. This fence ought to be taken down. The inventive genius of America has furnished the world 375,000 new industries in the last generation. He was in favor of protecting these; but the food barricade between the United States and Canada ought to be taken down.

It is interesting to note that in the last election in this State a religious test was applied. The Personal Liberty party resolved to put the question to every candidate, "Will you vote for a law granting the privilege of keeping saloons open Sabbath afternoon?" The ministers of Syracuse met and resolved that they must put a counter question: and so they made a negative answer to the question a condition of their support, as the Personal Liberty party had made the affirmative answer the condition of their suffrage. This, of course, is unconstitutional. J. M. FOSTER.

A STALWART REFORMER.

Rev. John K. Glassford of Carthage, Mo., has made a record deserving of mention. A native of Hamilton county, Ohio, he came to Lafayette county, Ind., where he professed Christ and united with the M. E. church at 18 years of age. He began preaching when 20 years old. He traveled Blue Island circuit, near Chicago, in 1853–4. He removed to northern Iowa and was made a Mason in Waverly, Bremer county, in 1858. Previous to initiation he had read Morgan's expose and had been often told by men reputed truthful that it was false. After taking one degree he was disgusted, but finally consented to the "passing and raising." He ceased active connection at once, and privately spoke against the lodge. He very soon encountered threats and opposition, but nothing daunted he continued to assert his rights until the pressure became strong, when he boldly and publicly renounced the order, and challenged his opponents to an honorable discussion. As usual the result was personal hostility and insinuations of violence to which he gave little heed.

In November, 1865, he removed with his family to Jasper county, Missouri, where he has since remained an active, uncompromising foe to all secret societies. Believing the M. E. church hopelessly throttled by the lodge, he transferred his relations to the United Brethren, where he still remains, in deep sympathy with the loyal wing, though not very hopeful of the final result.

Besides attending personally to an extended and varied business, he preaches and lectures frequently, and when occasion requires works the three degrees of Blue Lodge Masonry. His wife is a most estimable and cultured lady, and has stood by her husband unflinchingly during their years of fiery trial. She related some thrilling episodes in their early experience during the trying days of reconstruction, when the "regulators" used to suspend thieves and bush-whackers to the nearest suitable limb without the formality of impanneling a jury. Their two surviving children imbibed the sterling principles of their parents, and the third genertion gives promise of being typical reformers in due time.

THE MEMPHIS SCHOOL.

All will be glad to hear how the good work goes on under the charge of Prof. Woodsmall, the self-denying laborer among the Southern colored Baptist churches. The following letter was written to Bro. George W. Clark:

MEMPHIS, Tenn., Nov. 2, 1887.

MY DEAR BRO. CLARK.—I am truly glad to hear from you; but how much more I should enjoy sitting down and having a good talk with you and then go and have a rousing meeting with the colored people and hear you sing, like we had last winter in Arkansas! I often think about our experience; it was a delightful one to me, and I feel sure that the Master blessed your work and is still blessing it.

My health is about as last year. I am very tired now and half sick, hardly able to be up. Yet I am happy in my work, and the outlook is hopeful for the winter. I am preparing to start on a campaign in Mississippi of several weeks. I have planned a special course for pastors for the winter at Little Rock as last year, and also here at Memphis. Dr. Stone, an old brother in Ohio who has helped me in former years, has promised to take charge at Little Rock. The colored brethren have decided to start a school here at Memphis, and decided to have no teacher who drinks drams, uses tobacco or opium, or is a member of a secret society! Bro. Peter Howe promised $10,000. The school was begun in a small way to-day. I expect to provide for the pastor by Jan. 3d. I think that this enterprise is of the Lord. I have a good strong colored man with me now. He will work in the field with me and in the school when needed.

I hope you can come South this winter. If you can, write me before hand. I would write more, but but have too much do, and am afraid to delay lest I delay too long, as each day brings all that I can do. I hope you may soon be better. Pray for me. Your brother in Christ, H. WOODSMALL.

While Christian friends will not fail to pray for Bro. Woodsmall and such faithful workers at the South, they will sincerely sympathize also with Bro. Countee who has lost a devoted, intelligent, amiable and noble Christian mother. G. W. C.

A PLEASANT VISIT.

In response to an invitation from Hon. J. A. Conant I spent the second Sabbath in November at Willimantic, Conn. I found a noble few laboring to promote temperance, truth and righteousness. To preach the Gospel to them seemed like feeding those who had a relish for "the sincere milk of the Word." And to lecture on temperance was like addressing those whose hearts are in sympathy with God in all his benevolent designs and purposes. There is a loud call for such workers in Willimantic.

I learned that the pastor of one of the prominent churches rejects the atonement and cuts the Bible to suit his own notions. It may be others may feel compelled to follow the example of the great London preacher, Rev. C. H. Spurgeon, in withdrawing from the Baptist Union.

Willimantic, from a business standpoint, is a thriving town of eight thousand or more inhabitants. Bro. Conant has a pleasant family and a delightful home overlooking the town. I enjoyed my visit with them very much. Moreover, the laborer is remembered as worthy of a reward. ISAAC HYATT.

NEW ORLEANS LODGES THINNING OUT.

NEW ORLEANS, La., Nov. 14, 1887.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—That dearly beloved and faithful servant of the Master, Rev. H. H. Hinman, was in this modern Sodom last week. He had been here before in October, but I knew it not. We spent last Tuesday and Wednesday together and visited several of the city clergymen. Among them we met Rev. R. Thompson, D.D., pastor of Union Chapel M. E. church, the largest M. E. colored church in the city. The learned doctor was busy, but very heartily received us. He wore the pin of F. L. T. and F. C. B., but when Bro. Hinman began opening their secret faults he owned up.

I am sure Bro. Hinman's visit here in the interest of the National Convention has done good. He lectured last Wednesday night at St. Mark's Fourth Baptist church, and Thursday night at Shiloh Baptist church. I met a sister yesterday who chanced to be at Shiloh church Thursday night, and she was furious. She addressed me thus: "What old white man was dat with you Thursday night?" I told her quietly.

"Well, he need not come here to help Elder Green talk 'bout s'cieties." I read a letter from last week's Cynosure, and she became convinced.

I listened with patience to a masterly sermon by Dr. Thompson, yesterday evening. Taking for his text Psalm 27: 4, among other things, the doctor said: "It doth make my very heart pain to hear men going through the country claiming self-made institutions and organizations of men to be better than God's church, which is the pillar of truth. Any organization of men better than God's church is too good for me!" Although Wesley Chapel M. E. church, where the sermon was preached, is a stronghold for all kinds of secretism, the sermon was enthusiastically received throughout.

I preached Sunday night at St. John Divine Baptist church on "Separation." This church is pretty well filled with societies, but they gladly received the sermon. Bro. Richard Shepherd, a member of Shiloh Baptist church, told me to-day he was pleased with Bro. Hinman's lecture Thursday night. He has been a member of Amos Lodge G. U. O. of O. F.; also Golden Keys Tabernacle No. 4. He is convinced of their foolery, and has left them. Mr. Johnson, member of Union Bethel, A. M. E, is a Patriarch Mason, and Good Samaritan, but says he is convinced of their robbery. He says he has seen his error. Mr. Antoine Rosemond, an ex-member of Pride of the South Lodge K. of P., has seen his mistake, after spending $25 foolishly, and has severed connection with them.

I want (God helping) to arouse as many as possible to attend the N. C. A. Convention. I trust to start out from Thibodeauxville to Bayou Sara next month to awaken them up there. F. J. DAVIDSON.

PITH AND POINT.

FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE BAPTIST SUNDAY-SCHOOL STATE CONVENTION, TEXAS.

Please send me as much spare literature on secret societies as you can. I desire to distribute the same over Texas. I find places that need it. Your literature is doing great good in helping to destroy that deadly foe to Christ's cause. An early reply will greatly oblige, yours in the advancement of the Master's work, J. TOLIVER.

WHAT ARE THE WEAPONS?

It is reported that a distinguished professor in a Baptist Theological Seminary says that "Anti-masons are fighting for truth with false weapons." I want to say that real Anti-masons know that they are fighting for truth; but if with false weapons, with what kind of weapons, I ask, does the vanguard of Protestantism, and the Baptist denomination in particular, in the matter of Freemasonry fight for lies? And by what authority are Christians cast out of churches and that for no other reason than they are real Anti-masons? True love, love that reflects the love of God, "rejoiceth in the truth." To contend against truth is Satanic.—W. FENTON, St. Paul, Minn.

FROM A MEMBER OF THE SABBATH CONVENTION.

I have read several numbers of the Cynosure lately and have become very much interested in the paper. You certainly are engaged in a good work. I will risk my salvation upon the correctness of your position in opposing all forms of secret organizations wherein the relation we sustain to our fellow men is affected. I like your paper more especially because it is the fearless advocate of all moral reforms. I was much interested in the report of the late convention in Elgin, Ill., in the interest of Sabbath reform. Surely there is nothing more desirable and more necessary in order to secure the favor of God than that the people return to their allegiance to him by a proper observance of his holy day!—A. M, Berlin, Wis.

FAINT HEARTED.

Mr. ——— is very fearful that the effort to change public opinion on the lodge question will fail, and is disposed to drop the Cynosure, notwithstanding his Scotch birth and Presbyterian training. I see that it requires a Christ formed within, and the spirit and character of the same developed, to make the way smooth on the anti-secrecy line.—M. L. W., Kingston, Ill.

BIBLE LESSON.

STUDIES IN THE NEW TESTAMENT.

LESSON XI.—Dec. 11.—Parable of the Tares.—Matt. 13: 24-30.

GOLDEN TEXT.—The harvest is the end of the world and the reapers are the angels.—Matt. 13:39.

[Open the Bible and read the lesson.]

From Peloubet's Notes.

The Sower is the Son of Man (ver. 37). He is the source of all the powers by which men are made good. He changes men's hearts; he sends the Holy Spirit; he brought the truth; he made the atonement; he instituted the church. More than this, he not only creates the good seed, but he sows it,—he commands his people go into all the world and preach the Gospel; he plants in their hearts the desire to lead men to God; he opens the door for them, and leads them to the best instrumentality.

God's children are seed, not mere grains of sand; for (1) they are living, (2) they are the means of increasing the disciples, (3) through them the whole world is to be filled with the fruits of the Spirit and the children of the kingdom.—P.

Note (1) That every Christian should remember that he is a seed sown by the Son of Man. He is not to live alone, a selfish life, but is to lead many others to be Christians (2) He is, therefore, to be very careful to be good seed, such as bears fruit, and such as bears good fruit. For every seed produces fruit after its kind. Imperfect Christians tend to multiply imperfect Christians. Every error or fault of ours is doubly evil,—it injures ourselves and it injures others.—P.

The Tares are those children of the wicked one (ver. 38) who resemble in appearance the children of God; the false professors, the wolves in sheep's clothing, for the point of comparison is that the tares resemble the wheat till the fruit appears. Those partaking of his nature and belonging to him, serving him, and destined to be sharers in his punishment.—Alexander.

Here, as throughout the Scriptures, the broad line is drawn between the two classes of men: they do not in fact, as in appearance, resemble one another. One is produced from good seed, the other from evil seed; one class are the children of God, the other are the children of the devil; one belongs to the kingdom of light, the other to the kingdom of darkness. But the difference is not ineradicable here: the great gulf which begins on earth becomes impassable only at death.—Abbott. We are not to suppose that the wheat can never become tares or the tares wheat: this would be to contradict the purpose of Him who willeth not the death of a sinner, but rather that he should be converted and live; and this gracious purpose shines through the command, Let both grow together till the harvest.—Alford.

The enemy that sowed the tares was the devil, the enemy of God and man (ver. 39), whose effort is to make men as bad as himself. Here, as in so many other places, the great conflict is spoken of as rather between Satan and the Son of Man than between Satan and God. It was part of the great scheme of redemption that the victory over evil should be a moral triumph, not obtained by mere putting forth of superior strength.—Trench.

The Destruction of the Tares. All that is iniquity, all that offend others, that is, all that cause others to fall into sin, shall be cast into a furnace of fire, where there shall be wailing and gnashing of teeth. And this for two reasons: (1) This is all they are fit for. It is the just end and right punishment of the wicked. (2) Punishment is intended to keep wickedness from spreading and destroying all the good.—P. Fire is frequently employed in the Bible as a metaphor for the punishment of the ungodly (Isa. 5 24; 10:16,17; Mal. 4:1; Matt. 3:10; 7:19; Heb. 6.8; 10:27). The fire is represented, not as something external to the sinner, but as consisting of his sins and as proceeding from himself (Isa. 9 18, 19; 33 11, 12). An examination of these passages will make it clear that (a) fire is used in them as a symbol, not of purification, but of punishment; (b) that it represents a punishment which is a finality, from which there is no deliverance or restoration; (c) that it stands for a terrible penalty, such as could be interpreted only by a physical symbol; (d) that it is symbolical merely (as of necessity it must be, for souls and spiritual bodies cannot be burned with literal fire).—Abbott.

The righteous shall in that day shine forth in the kingdom of their Father as the sun, the symbol of gladness, of truth, of glory, of life in themselves, and of giving light and life and cheer to all around.—P. Then, when the dark hindering element is removed, shall this element of light, which was before struggling with and obstructed by it, come forth in its full brightness (see Col. 3.4; Rom. 8: 18; Prov. 25:4,5). A glory shall be revealed in the saints; it shall not merely be brought to them and added from without; but rather a glory which they before had, but which did not before evidently appear, shall burst forth and show itself openly, as did the Lord's hidden glory once in the days of his flesh, at the moment of his transfiguration. That shall be the day of the manifestation of the sons of God: they shall shine forth as the sun, when the clouds are rolled away (Dan. 12:3).—Trench.

SECRET SOCIETIES CONDEMNED

BY GREAT MEN IN THE CHURCH.

ALBERT BARNES, 1849:—Any good cause, I think, can be promoted openly; any secret association is liable, at least, to abuse and danger.

REV. LEONARD BACON, D. D.—Wishing you good success in your war against secret societies.

REV. B. P. AYDELDOTTE, D.D., former president of Woodward College, O., (a renouncing Mason):—Freemasonry is a lie all over.

REV. JUSTIN EDWARDS, D.D., author and head of Andover Seminary:—Whenever the cause of temperance is veiled in darkness and secrecy, it must lose its hold on the public confidence and sympathy.

REV. M. BENNETT, long presiding elder M. E. church.—I am pleased to be counted in for the movement which is being inaugurated against tyrannical organizations and factitious distinctions in society.

DR. THOMAS SCOTT, the great commentator:—Rash oaths are above all things to be avoided; but if men are entangled by them, they ought rather to infringe the sinful oaths than to add sin to sin and ruin to their own souls.

REV. J. C. K. MILLIGAN, editor of "Our Banner:"—Through such silence, secret connivance and horrid oaths "ever to conceal and never reveal," the state of our country is rapidly becoming such as to alarm every Christian philanthropist.

REV. B. T. ROBERTS, editor of the Free Methodist:—For us to keep silent respecting Masonry, and thus tacitly endorse the idea that a man can both accept Christ and deny him—that is, be a good Mason and a good Christian at the same time, would be treason to Christ.

JOHN G. FEE, Berea College, 1868.—It is Freemasonry, Odd-fellowship and kindred associations that have spawned and now lend respectability to "Regulators," "Ku Klux Klans," and other bands of midnight assassins now ranging through Kentucky and other portions of the South.

REV. J. P. LYTLE, D. D.:—Masonry has damned all who ever trusted in it for salvation. It is now leading away thousands from the church, and from paths of virtue by association with the intemperate, unclean and profane, and is dragging them down the road which leads to the chambers of eternal death.

REV. EDWARD BEECHER, D.D.:—If on such anti-Christian grounds, prayers are framed, rites established and chaplains appointed, ignoring Christ and his intercession, God regards it as a mockery and an insult to himself and his church. In it is revealed the hatred of Satan to Christ. By it Christ is dethroned and Satan exalted.

REV. W. W. PATTON, D. D., 1869:—However secret societies may differ among themselves, yet they are all anti-republican in their tendencies; and are all leading to the same results, viz., a substitution of worldly and selfish innovations for moral and religious influences, and, ultimately, to the theoretical and practical neutralization of Christianity.

REV. JAMES H. FAIRCHILD, D.D., Pittsburg address:—The point is not that the working of a secret organization may be perverted to selfish ends, but that in its very nature it strongly tends to such perversion. A worthy institution may be perverted, but an institution in which the tendency to perversion is inherent and constitutional, is not a good institution.

REV. DR. JAMES. B. WALKER, author of "Philosophy of the Plan of Salvation."—There is probably not one in a thousand who enter the lodge, who know, when blindfolded they take the terrible oaths, that Masonry is an anti-Christ and one of the most powerful enemies of Christ that exists. But this is put beyond the possibility of a doubt by the highest Masonic authorities.

REV. NATHAN BROWN, Editor "Am. Baptist" and missionary to Japan.—If Freemasonry had existed in the days of Christ, and in the same form that it exists with us, he could not have condemned it more distinctly than he did in his Sermon on the Mount: "If ye do good to them that do good to you, what do ye more than others? Do not even the publicans the same?" The Gospel is at war with every system of clique or clan, caste or combination that seeks to create distinctions in the human family.

CHARLES C. FOOTE:—What would the introduction of Christ into Mohammedanism be, but its annihilation? And thus would it be with Masonry.

REV. JOHN TODD, Pittsfield, Mass.:—Unhesitatingly I give my decided disapprobation of what I deem secret societies in college and elsewhere. I have never known any good results from them which could not have been attained in some other more appropriate way, and I have known great evils resulting from them.

HOWARD CROSBY, Chancellor University of New York, 1870:—We have no hesitation in writing secret societies among the quackeries of the earth.

Idem, 1886:—The secret lodge system belongs to despotisms and not to democracies. Whatever in it is not babyish is dangerous.

REV. MATTHEW L. R. PERRINE, D.D., Auburn Theological Seminary, REV. JOEL PARKER and REV. CHAUNCEY EDDY:—Having formerly associated with Freemasons, we deem it our duty, publicly to declare that the system of Freemasonry is in our judgment, of a tendency on the whole pernicious to the moral habits, and dangerous to the civil and religious institutions of our country.

REV. LEVI CHASE, Fall River, Mass.:—The question has been asked by Masons, who wish to asperse the characters of those who have renounced Masonry, "Why did not they renounce it before?" For one, I will give them the reason why I did not. The Masonic oaths locked my tongue in silence—death, in all its horrid shapes and frightful forms, stared me in the face—I considered the oaths binding.

REV. C. D. BURLINGHAM, in history of the Genesee M. E Conference, 1860:—This new element of discord (Odd fellowship) began to introduce itself in our church, professedly as a mutual insurance company against temporal want, and a newly discovered and remarkably successful Gospel appliance for bringing the world, reformed and saved into the church. But our people very naturally looked upon it with suspicion, dreading its power as a secret agency acting through affiliated societies, and doubting its utility as a financial scheme. They feared it would drag the church, debased and corrupted, into the world.

REV. JOEL MANN, a renouncing Mason:—Although portions of the Gospel are interwoven with its forms, I conceive that Masonry presents false grounds of hope; leads men to depend on their own defective righteousness;—to expect the favor of God without the interposition of a Redeemer, and even without repentance; and thus has a most injurious influence on their eternal interests. Under the most favorable circumstances, which in any place, have attended Masonry, it has occasioned a great waste of time and money, which might and ought to have been employed for better purposes. And furthermore, it interferes materially with domestic religious duties.

REV. AARON LELAND, formerly Lieut.-Governor of Vermont and Deputy Grand Master of the Masonic Grand Lodge (to a Baptist association):—He stated that the first objection which presented itself to his mind was the practice of praying for the soul of a brother Mason after he had been dead two, three, and sometimes four days—that he persisted in the practice for a short season to the injury of his conscience—that it was a Romish custom, and he never would preach at the burial of a Mason when Masonic forms and customs were attended to—that he never would preach to a lodge of Masons as such, and that he was ashamed that he had ever participated in the principles and practices of the institution.

ELDER DAVID BERNARD:—I solemnly renounce all fealty to Masonry, and do most earnestly beseech my brethren in Christ Jesus, of every name, to come out and bear unequivocal testimony against it. Think, O think, dear Christians, that hundreds and thousands of precious and immortal souls will be lost forever, unless they return and repent, but that the name of the precious Jesus is rejected, your Saviour, your precious and adorable Saviour taken away—the cause of your bleeding Redeemer injured—the hands of the wicked strengthened, and the Almighty God dishonored! And O, let me entreat you in the mercy and bowels of Jesus Christ, to reflect that you have to answer for the blood of those who shall find also, when it shall be forever too late, that Masonry is not a Saviour!

THE CHURCHES VS. LODGERY.

The following denominations are committed by vote of their legislative assemblies or by constitution to a separation from secret lodge worship:

Adventists (Seventh-day.)

Baptists—Primitive, Seventh-day and Scandinavian.

Brethren (Dunkers or German Baptists.)

Christian Reformed Church.

Church of God (Northern Indiana Eldership.)

Congregational—The State Associations of Illinois and Iowa have adopted resolutions against the lodge.

Disciples (in part.)

Friends.

Lutherans—Norwegian, Danish, Swedish and Synodical Conferences.

Mennonites.

Methodists—Free and Wesleyan.

Methodist Protestant (Minnesota Conference.)

Moravians.

Plymouth Brethren.

Presbyterian—Associate, Reformed and United.

Reformed Church (Holland Branch.)

United Brethren in Christ.

Individual churches in some of these denominations should be excepted, in part of them even a considerable portion.

The following local churches have, as a pledge to disfellowship and oppose lodge worship, given their names to the following list as

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, DECEMBER 1, 1887.

THE NEW ORLEANS CONVENTION FEBRUARY 17 TO 20, 1888.

AT HOME, after a long and happy journey to the hills where father, mother, and three sisters were buried, and where all our young imaginations were born. The trip has fastened two impressions in our mind: that the lodge is to be overthrown more speedily than we have expected; and the churches are to suffer worse. The ministers almost universally dislike and dread the lodge; yet are silent concerning it till spoken to, and then reply with bated voice, as though afraid some one would hear.

F. W. CAPWELL, ESQ., of Wyoming county, New York, is hoping to attend the New Orleans convention, with Mrs. Capwell. Two things make this Southern anniversary exceptionally important. 1. New Orleans and Louisiana, as their names import, were founded by French Roman Catholics, who, of all civilized, Christian peoples, have least hatred of colored people. And, second, just now millions of money are seeking investment South. This wears out the hatred of Northerners, and will open the hereditary hospitality of Southern people to our N. C. A. anniversary. A third reason is that our meeting is in 1888. This will give us access to a million of colored votes, which, if gained for American Prohibition, would turn the scale and elect a reform President at the latest in 1892.

AARON BURR.—Since our last issue, some valuable facts respecting the Masonic career of the murderer of Alexander Hamilton have been discovered in the history of Masonry in Illinois, by John C. Reynolds, a Deputy Grand Master. When Burr was on his way, or returning, during his well known trip to New Orleans he visited the Grand Lodge of Illinois on the 4th of April, 1812. While in this State he also visited Morning Star Lodge at Kaskaskia, and his name appeared afterward on the records of that lodge as a visitor. Burr hailed from Union Lodge, No. 40, Connecticut. Morning Star Lodge went down with all the rest in Illinois during the Morgan times. The oldest lodge in this State now on the roll is Bodley, No 1, of Quincy, the charter dating from 1840.

THE NATIONAL W. C. T. U. CONVENTION.

In this great meeting at Nashville, Tennessee, Miss Willard's annual address contained the following passage:

"I have always been opposed to secret societies and never more so than to-day. They are a relic of mediæval times, and destined to become extinct. But the Good Templars and the Knights of Labor have so much in them that is praiseworthy, their secretism is so nominal, and their purposes so helpful that it has always seemed to me they formed exceptions to the general rule. I believe they will not always be secret even in name, but that this useless feature will fade away and merge into the light of common day."

The friends of humanity, the country, and the Christian religion, have much reason to congratulate themselves on the utterance of Miss Willard given in the above extract. Her national position, untiring industry, singular ability, philanthropy, and address, make her utterance above a historic event; and her mind has certainly made progress toward a right understanding of the secret lodge issue. And yet, if she goes no farther, she will certainly help the lodge and hinder prohibition.

Her views are defective, and in our judgment fatally so, in the following particulars:

1. She indicts secret societies only as "a relic of mediæval times, destined to become extinct," whereas, the lodge ritual is a Christ-omitting, man-invented religion. In the sound words of Dr. Gray, editor of the Interior, "Masonry claims to save men and take them to heaven without the mediation of Christ." And every religion on our globe which omits Christ, is "Gentile," or demon worship. To accuse such a system of being "mediæval" and "destined to extinction," is to blink at its malignant nature, just as it would be to accuse treason of being old and likely to fade out.

2. It pleads for Good Templar and Knights of Labor secrecy, as Lot pleaded for Zoar, "Is it not a little one?" The objection to this "little" secrecy is, that it is in the plain of the Masonic Sodom, and not on the mountain to which the angels commanded Lot to escape. There is no "little" deliberate departure from the plain example of Jesus Christ, John 18: 20. More Masons can be made to-day by sending out a lecturer to form Good Templar lodges, than to form Masonic lodges! The Master of Wheaton (Ill.) lodge offered a thousand dollars to Wheaton College if the rule might be waived so that students might join Good Templar lodges. This being refused, he offered ten thousand dollars if the rule might be relaxed, so as to make Wheaton "like Beloit and other colleges." This being refused he prosecuted the College in the Circuit and Supreme Courts of Illinois, to break down the anti-secret rule. Miss Willard's speech grants all that this lodge master demanded of Wheaton College to make its opposition to lodgery harmless.

Soon after The Issue (a magnificent paper) was started in Nashville to take Prohibition to the people of Tennessee, Finch & Co. put a brisk agent into that State and covered it with Good Templar lodges. Of course the popular vote went against the Prohibition cause, as it always has done, and always will do, where secrecy holds the helm. We are not in their lodges. The lodge members themselves, that is, the rank and file, do not know how the defeat is carried; but the general method is, to let Templar men in the Legislature or State vote Prohibition so as to hide their treachery; but to bribe with distillers' and brewers' money just enough to defeat the Prohibition cause. When St. John was sunk near fifty thousand votes in Kansas, the bribery was wholesale. Negro votes were bought for a chunk of tobacco; and bummer politicans for prices to suit. Such methods defeated Prohibition in Tennessee. The whole State was sworn to secrecy, especially the temperance wing of it.

Miss Willard's courage failed as it did before Powderly's show of millions. Hence she put into her address the following:

"As temperance people we must no longer leave our interests undefended in Washington. I suggest that this convention invite the Sons of Temperance, Good Templars, and the Prohibition party to combine with us in the effort to engage a Christian temperance lawyer at Washington who shall watch our interests as carefully as Louis Shade & Co. do those of the brewers and distillers."

But does Miss Willard think we are so dull as to hope that Sons of Temperance and Templar lodges will send a lawyer to Washington who is not a sworn secretist? Never! She has steadily refused to be initiated by the Good Templars; yet she yokes the open workers up with them. If she were in the lodges, she might protect us. But now she puts us at their mercy; and the tender mercy of lodge-leaders is cruel.

The venerable, and now sainted Bishop Simpson wrote us, a few weeks before he died, that he had "never joined a secret society, not even the Sons of Temperance. But I allow others the exercise of their own judgment."

This is not Cynosure morals. If there were good and sufficient reasons why Bishop Simpson should shun secret societies through his whole life, he should have given those reasons to the church, and saved thousands of Methodists, and millions of money, from the maw of the secret anti-Christ.

Miss Willard has excelled the good and great Bishop. She has broken silence, which he did not; and we greatly rejoice. But fidelity to Christ and his cause must keep us from her error, viz., giving our words against the lodge, and our actions for it.

ADDRESS TO THE CHRISTIANS OF SARATOGA.

REPLY TO DR. S. V. LEECH.—HISTORY OF FREEMASONRY.—ITS CONNECTION WITH THE REBELLION.—ITS COMING DOWNFALL.

[Leaving Saratoga I wrote the following semi-farewell to its citizens who have showed me many kindnesses for years with no rebuffs for our reform. It was to have been printed there, but the editor of the Eagle, though a fair and fearless man, shrunk from publishing it, saying, "With my limited knowledge of secret societies it would be monstrous for me to print an article practically branding a large section of our population as criminals or concealers of crime." Our judicious and fair minded friends, Mr. and Mrs. Capwell, of Dale, N.Y., where I stopped, with others, insist that it should be published.—J. B.]

Forty-nine years ago my young wife and myself made our first visit to Saratoga, on the way to our new western home. We have often drunk health from these fountains since; and found society, here, pleasant as the Springs. Indeed, years before, the Davidson children, whose gifted sister lies buried near here, were my pupils in Plattsburgh; and Hon. Judge Cowen, the most learned of jurists and legal reporters, urged me to share his office and library here. His monument now honors your cemetery and city. Seventy-eight years ago (1809) Judge Cowen, then a poor boy, wrote and circulated a total abstinence pledge; and this county was the home of the first temperance society. The handful of seed thus sown now "shakes like Lebanon."

But my apology for addressing you this note is this: By invitation of the excellent Mrs. Pond, president of your W. C. T. U., I lately addressed a body of Saratoga temperance women, in a speech printed in the Eagle, urging that the temperance lodges should drop their secrecy and unite with the Women's "Union" in one grand, open, American, Christian body, for the extermination of the liquor curse. And last Sabbath, by invitation of the same good lady president, I added, in a few remarks, my amen to Dr. S. V. Leech's brilliant and powerful prohibition speech in his M. E. church in this city.

EXPLANATIONS.

Some friends wondered a little at my cordial endorsement of Dr. Leech's speech, seeing he denounced, with unchristian bitterness, some persons who, he said, had censured him concerning his course on temperance, because he voted with the Republican party while advocating prohibition.

I answered: "I endorsed the speech, not the consistency of the speaker." We read of some persons "defiled" by false worships or other sins; that they "profess that they know God, but in works deny him." And such are called by Paul "abominable, disobedient, and to every good work, reprobate." (Titus 1: 16.) Now if Dr. Leech boards his family at a licensed liquor-selling hotel; if he voted for license candidates while prohibition candidates were in the field; and if, as I am told, he intended his almost scurrillous and railing remarks for third party Prohibitionists, like the Christian patriot, Dr. Emory Potter, because they have censured his course, which they had the same right to do which he had to censure theirs, as he has often done; but, above all, if Dr. Leech is an Odd-fellow and Freemason, and, relying on the pretended secrecy of those orders for concealment, if he represents them to be what he knows they are not, then, and in that case, he is certainly included in the above terrific denunciations and definitions of Paul.

DR. LEECH'S SPEECH.

Dr. Leech, within a year past, addressed the Odd-fellows in their hall here, and in the address, said, "I have sat, on many occasions, in the council rooms of Freemasons." His speech may be read in the Daily Saratogian, Dec. 10, 1886. Those who will take the pains to read that speech will find him saying of Masons and Odd-fellows: "I affirm that their precepts, rules, rituals and private work are in profoundest harmony with the most rigid morality."

Now if Dr. Leech was properly initiated, we have the following facts concerning his initiation on the testimony of Charles G. Finney, late president of Oberlin College, who had been a Mason, and who was one of the holiest men on earth, with thousands of other good men; as well as on sworn testimony in New York courts. (See Wendell, 13 vol., 1st case.)

DR. LEECH'S INITIATION.

When Dr. Leech was initiated he was stripped of coat, vest, pants, shoes and socks; a slipper was put on one foot, a rope about his neck, and a hoodwink over his eyes. In this manner he was led by the rope around the lodge in the rite of "circumambulation." If that was "profound morality" it certainly was not common decency.

Before he became a Master Mason, he swore twenty-eight oaths, ending, "So help me God;" and under the most savage and disgusting penalties. All this in the face of Christ, whose minister he professes to be, and who has said, "Swear not at all." Is this "morality?"

Further, he swore to conceal all a Master Mason's crimes but two; and if he took four more degrees, to the Royal Arch, he swore to conceal all a Royal Arch Mason's crimes without exception. Concealing crime is to be accessory to crime before or after the fact. Is this "morality?"

Then Masonry turns the whole Decalogue from God's law into lodge law. Thus, instead of the Seventh Commandment, "Thou shall not commit adultery," the Mason swears not to defile the female relatives of Masons. Is this morality? But Mackey, in the chief Lexicon of the order, says in the article on "Moral Law" that that does not mean "the Ten Commandments, but only the law written in the heart of man,"—of Africans, for instance! It were easy to show that the lodge has no standard of law or morals but its own dicta, which are no standard. D'Israeli said to his Jewish brethren, "Christ has taken the ten precepts given by Moses and made them the moral standard of Christendom." Hence, rejecting the Decalogue, Masons have no standard of law or morals.

Stone masonry is as old as stone walls. Apprentices were early hazed, as the phrase now is, and their indentures were wet with liquor. So with Fellow Crafts and Master Masons. In 926 a rite of three degrees was made out of these three hazings, which stood 791 years, till 1717. Then stone masonry was dropped, and all who would join and could pay dues were "accepted," and given the freedom of the order, and so became "Free and Accepted Masons," made up of all sorts, as we see in the lodges now. They then began to build a mystical temple and send men to the "lodge above," no matter how they had lived or died. "A Master Mason," says Mackey, "represents a man, under the doctrine of love, saved from the grave of iniquity and raised to the faith of salvation." And the leading Presbyterian paper in the United States lately said, "Enough proof is before the American people to show that Masonry professes to save men and send them to heaven without the mediation of Christ."

Moreover, the lodge makes a clean sweep of the God of the Bible, "Father, Son and Holy Ghost," and substitutes an imaginary "Grand Architect of the Universe," or "god of this world," which is an alias of the devil, to whom, and not to Christ, every Masonic prayer is offered. It is to be charitably hoped that Dr. Leech is ignorant of this, being bewitched by all the sorceries of the lodge. Such was Masonry, formed in 1717 at the Appletree tavern, Covent Garden, London.

FACTS IN HISTORY.

James II. turned papist and fled to France. All the degrees above the three old York Rite degrees were invented as upper degrees, in France, by Jesuits, aided by an apostate Protestant, Ramsay, to govern the English lodges and get the Stuarts back on the throne of England and crush Protestantism and free government in Europe. William of Orange went over and the scheme failed. But Masonry had now an independent existence of its own. It was a false religion, with altars, rituals, burial service, priests, high priests, and "Grand High Priests," and Voltaire and Frederick of Prussia used it to overthrow all religions but itself. In 1758 was formed, at Paris, a "Council of Emperors, East and West." This "Council of Emperors," in 1761, empowered Stephen Morin, a Jew who retained nothing of Judaism but its hate of Christ, to proceed to the new world and plant these French degrees. They called him a "Sovereign Inspector General." This Morin made sixteen other "inspectors," thirteen of whom were Jews. The three who were not Jews were Frederick Dalcho, John Mitchell and Col. Provost. These, in Charleston, S. C., opened the first Supreme Masonic Council in the world, added eight new degrees to what they before had, and formed the present "Ancient and Accepted Scottish Rite" of thirty-three degrees, of which rite Albert Pike is now the head of the original Southern Jurisdiction in this country. This Supreme Council in Charleston was formed in 1801, the year of Jefferson's first election. Aaron Burr, who was a Mason along with Benedict Arnold, and who had been on Arnold's staff in the Canada invasion, came near defeating Jefferson by fraud. He afterwards attempted to divide the United States' territory by the Ohio and Mississippi rivers, as the Charleston Supreme Masonic Council afterward divided it Masonically; and as Calhoun attempted by nullification, and the great secession in 1860 nearly accomplished it. Jefferson tried Burr for treason, purchased Louisiana, and consolidated the Union.

THE MORGAN MURDER.

While these events were passing, lodges spread rapidly for twenty-five years, till 1826, when William Morgan, who was a patriot, said to his friends that Masonry would surely destroy the Republic, and spoke the words which are on his monument at Batavia, N. Y.: "I owe to my country an exposure of its dangers." He exposed three degrees, and the excellent David Bernard published the rest. And, in 1832, of 2,000 lodges then in the country, 1,500 gave up their charters, and 228,000 votes were cast for Wirt and Ellmaker against the lodge.

That year (1832) Garrison formed his New England Anti-Slavery society, and the slave question swallowed up all others. The lodge went South, became a "Southern institution," and organized secession and rebellion in its lodge rooms. The proof of this is in Greeley s "Great American Conflict." The first secession ordinance issued at Columbia, South Carolina, Dec. 17, 1860. Parker, Inglis, Keits and Rhett, all four said in that meeting they had been working up secession for thirty years; that is, from Jackson to Lincoln. Of course that "working up" was not done outdoors, but in the secret lodge rooms. The ten lodges of the District of Columbia all went secesh, and the country Southern lodges followed suit. But God saved the Union by Lincoln, Grant, Seward, Chase, Stevens, Sumner, Wilson, Giddings, Charles Francis Adams and Thurlow Weed, whom Lincoln sent to aid Adams at London. THESE WERE ALL ANTI-MASONS. McClellan and McDowell were not. These facts are now beginning to be opened to the country, and will yet attract universal attention.

But while our boys were fighting, the lodge leaders were initiating and swindling them. They drew in our Union soldiers by thousands, by telling them they would get favors from rebel Masons. So Masonry came back on the refluent waves of the war which it had hatched in the rebel lodge rooms; and now the pulpit and the press are choked and stifled by the lodge; and the success of this stupendous swindle, by the lodge which owns the temple, has bred a thousand others. Dr. Leech boasts of the vast charities of Odd-fellowship. A careful scanning of their reports and records will show three dollars paid in to one paid "for relief," and that to rich and poor alike. This is not charity; it is taking two dollars for handling one; and paying alike to rich and poor.

A perfect craze of secretism, finery, and grandiloquent titles has seized the ex-slave, and thousands on thousands of black mothers now board their husbands, whose wages go to the lodges: and they are disintegrating the churches.

THE ANTI-SECRET REVIVAL.

But there is always a revival of sin before a revival of holiness. Paul says, "When the commandment came, sin revived." And the commandment is come. In 1868 a National Christian Association was formed in Pittsburgh, "opposed to secret societies." President Fairchild of Oberlin gave the chief address, and Prof. Henry Cowles was chairman of the committee which reported the constitution. Its organ, the Christian Cynosure, has stood, now, nineteen years, and sees its work extending in other papers: in Washington, where we own a fine headquarters, in New Hampshire, Iowa and Pennsylvania; while the venerable organs of the United and the Reformed Presbyterians, Friend Quakers, Wesleyan and Free Methodists, and others, have aroused themselves, like lions from their lairs, and shaken the dewdrops from their manes. Christ is coming, and is well on his way.

Too largely the ministry of the large church organizations, as in the slavery grapple, still stand aghast; but thousands pray for our success who never say a word in public. One Mason can hang a jury, and, with his lodge to back him, can govern a church. The ministers "do err, not knowing the Scriptures," nor the nature of the lodge, nor the signs of the times. The power of Popery, Mormonism, Spiritualism and the lodge is sorcery; and the apparent conflict between any of these is a conflict between a kite and a snake, merely a question of prey. A false religion puts the soul of a man into a posture in which the devil can mesmerize him.

On the contrary, receiving Christ makes us "free indeed." Unlike the false priest, he has "all power in heaven and earth," and has no motive to oppress us. "All things that the Father hath" are his; he has therefore no motive to plunder us. He is our elder brother; has felt temptations and knows how to feel for us. He has died once for our sins, and is not likely to get out of patience with us. In short, we "are complete in him." For "through him we have access by one Spirit to the Father," in whom eternity and infinity meet; and he is "our Father who art in heaven;" and his home is ours! Aye! and his kingdom is coming "on earth." The Lord's prayer was not given to mock us, but to be answered. "He shall send his angels and gather out of his kingdom all things that offend, and them which do iniquity." This is now being done. Twelve legions of angels were ready at his cross, and they all "excel" the evil spirits "in strength." And they all know the way home, and can bring us there, as they did the beggar at the gate.

Now contrast the stupendous magnificence of an infinite world, filled with "righteousness, peace, and joy in the Holy Ghost," a world harmonized by the two definite forces of supreme love to God and equal love to man, as taught by Christ—contrast this with the dreary babblings of mediums, the lying wonders of the spirit circle, the blood-howl of the anarchist and atheist, or the milder mummery of the lodges, which fill the conscience with oaths and pledges, so that, like the liver of a calomel patient, it becomes incapable of healthy action of any kind. Set off a community of such persons by themselves—no God's oath to secure property, or stable marriage, or father, mother, brother or sister-hood; to be guarded by pass-words, grips, signs and summons given by strange lips and hands which may, for aught we know, be the hands of harlots or bandits; and then stand up and bray eloquently over the glories of the lodge, and trample on the example of Christ who "in secret said nothing," John 18: 20. No, no! NO!! a thousand times NO. "If any man will serve me," said our Saviour, "let him follow me;" do as I did; and that was not to join a secret society, for he did not.

J. BLANCHARD.

—Our "Personal Notes" mention the names of two gentlemen who are ready to enter our reform lecture work. The Illinois Executive Committee have not yet positively secured a State agent. They were hoping to find Bro. M. N. Butler at liberty, but Secretary Stoddard holds him fast; and, truly, while he is doing such excellent work in Missouri it would not be good policy to withdraw him. God is answering our prayers that laborers may be sent into the vineyard of reform. Let us be diligent in providing for them bountifully.

—Rev. Dr. W. H. French, of Cincinnati, who was requested by the N. C. A. Board to attend the meeting of the Evangelical Alliance in Washington from Wednesday to Friday of next week, and present the cause for which we especially labor, has consented to act, and is making preparations suitable to the duty and the occasion.

TO ALL STUDENTS

IN COLLEGES, THEOLOGICAL SEMINARIES AND ACADEMIES.

The Board of the National Christian Association desiring to arouse an interest among American students in the topics named below, have offered cash prizes for essays on the following topics:

"Secret Societies and the Labor Problem."

"The Relation of Secret Societies to the Temperance Cause."

For the best essay on each of these topics a premium of Twenty Dollars will be paid to its author: for the second in merit a premium of Ten Dollars.

This offer is made to students of both sexes in all the institutions named above, with the following limitations:

1. The length of the essays may not be more than 2,000 words, plainly written.

2. They must be mailed to the "Essay Committee, N. C. A. office, 221 West Madison St., Chicago," before May 1, 1888.

3. The name and address of each writer must be plainly written on a separate sheet accompanying the essay.

4. The Association to have the privilege of publishing as a tract, or in their paper, the Christian Cynosure, any or all the four prize essays; and any others which may seem desirable, if satisfactory arrangements can be made with their authors.

The committee of award have not yet been chosen.

PERSONAL MENTION.

—Word from Miss Flagg is hopeful of the speedy recovery of her father, and the resumption of her literary labor for the reform, whereat we all rejoice with thanksgiving.

—Elder J. F. Browne has accepted an invitation to take charge of Howe Academy, New Iberia, Louisiana, and leaves Berea College about the 6th inst. for his new labors.

—Dr. J. N. Norris of Birmingham, Iowa, disappoints us all by word that he cannot attend the Prohibition Conference and the special consultation in the N. C. A. building this week. Dr. Norris would be a Nestor in our counsels.

—Pres. J. Blanchard returned from his Eastern trip of a month last week Tuesday, in time to enjoy a Thanksgiving reunion at which nearly half a hundred friends sat down at the festival tables. That New England hospitality is bountiful is proved by the fact that he has increased in weight ten pounds by it.

—A. E. Burt of New Haven, Michigan, one of the leaders in the late political agitation against the lodge in that place, expects to attend the Prohibition Conference. He has lately been lecturing against the orders in the vicinity of his home, and we hope an open door may be found by which he may continue that work. Mr. Burt is an attorney.

—The Keystone, a leading Masonic organ, pictures a portion of a lodge interior not down in Bernard, Ronayne or Doesburg. This is suggestive of temperance and morality. Read: "Labor can best be performed in an apartment set apart from which the odor of viands and the fumes of tobacco are excluded, and refreshments can be best enjoyed 'around the mahogany,' when the labor of the evening has been concluded, and naught remains to be done except to 'harmonize in the light' of the banquet hall, and then 'part upon the square.' The Masonic bodies which habitually exclude the banquet from their curriculum make a serious mistake."

THE HOME.

WHEN HE COMES.

If I were told that I must die to-morrow,
That the next sun
Which sinks should bear me past all fear and sorrow
For any one;
All the fight fought, all the short journey through;
What should I do?

I do not think that I should shrink or falter
But just go on,
Doing my work, nor change, nor seek to alter
Aught that is gone;
But rise and move and love and smile and pray,
For one more day.

And, lying down at night for a last sleeping,
Say in that ear
Which hearkens ever: "Lord, within thy keeping
How should I fear?
And when to-morrow brings thee nearer still,
Do thou thy will."

I might not sleep for awe; but peaceful, tender,
My soul would lie
All the night long; but when the morning splendor
Flashed o'er the sky,
I think that I could smile—could calmly say,
"It is His day."

But, if a wondrous hand from the blue yonder
Held out a scroll,
On which my life was writ, and I with wonder
Beheld unroll
To a long century's end its mystic clew,
What should I do?

What could I do, O blessed Guide and Master,
Other than this--
Still to go on as now; not slower, faster;
Nor fear to miss
The road, although so very long it be,
While led by thee?

Step after step, feeling thee close beside me,
Although unseen;
Through thorns, through flowers, whether the tempest hide thee,
Or heavens serene,
Assured thy faithfulness can not betray,
Nor love decay.

I may not know, my God; no hand revealeth
Thy counsels wise;
Along the path a deepening shadow stealeth;
No voice replies
To all my questioning thought, the time to tell;
And it is well.

Let me keep on, abiding and unfearing,
Thy will always;
Through a long century's ripe fruition nearing,
Or a short day's;
Thou canst not come too soon; and I can wait
If thou come late.

CHRISTIANITY AND CRIME.

One fact is certain and undeniable; there is no decent civilization or education outside of the influence of the Bible. The man who wishes to train up his daughters, and educate his sons in science, art, and morality, is careful to keep within the range of Christian influences and institutions. He may, for the sake of gain, go into heathen lands. He may, if in love with iniquity, remain there, and participate in the degradation that surrounds him; but if he seeks and loves purity, righteousness, and morality, he finds it only where the light of the Gospel has been shed. And to-day we find that those countries most noted for their order, uprightness, and piety, and most free from violence and strife, are the countries where the Bible is believed and obeyed.

Says the Lutheran Visitor, "Travelers tell us that there is less crime, less theft, arson, perjury, murder, in Scotland and Wales than in any other countries on the globe. The people are the most moral. It is said that a bad book, an immoral publication, cannot live in these countries. There is not a bad book in the Welsh language. Why is this? Because of the hold the Bible has on the people. Go into a church, and when the pastor announces his text there is a rustling of leaves all over the church —the people are hunting the text. Every one has his Bible with him. It is his hand book--his daily companion. The Bible is dominant. And the Bible is the foe to all wrong-doing. Hence, so little crime, so much virtue. We have too many books, too many bad books, too many good books; they take the place of the Bible. Our newspapers are read much more than our Bibles."

There are some countries where for generations the Bible has been kept from the common people. What is the condition of those countries to day? Who wishes to live there? Who sends his children to such countries to be educated and trained for usefulness?

There was one nation from which the Bible had been excluded for generations, while those who read and loved it were imprisoned and exiled, until at length the benighted and oppressed nation plunged into infidelity, and arose in its madness and overturned all religion, and buried itself in its ruins.

Said a French journalist at that time: "We are the only people in the world who ever tried to do without a religion. But what is already our sad experience? Every ten days we are astounded by the recital of more crimes and assassinations than were committed formerly in the whole year. At the risk of speaking an obsolete language, and receiving insult for a response, we declare that we must cease striving to destroy the remnants of religion if we desire to prevent the entire dissolution of society."

The world has seen, in the horrors of the French revolution, one example of a government where God was denied, and his Word was prohibited. That tale of horrors will not soon be forgotten by men who care for the present or future welfare of themselves, their families, or their race.—Armory.

NEWTON AND VOLTAIRE ON PROPHECY.

It is a singular and most remarkable fact that Sir Isaac Newton, in his work on the prophecies of Daniel and Revelation, said that if the predictions of these books were true, as he knew that they were, it would be necessary that new modes of traveling should be invented and brought into use. And he further said that the knowledge of mankind would be so increased before a certain date or time alluded to in the prophecy, namely the 1,260 years (which most commentators agree in fixing not far from A. D. 1860), that men would be able to travel at the rate of fifty miles an hour.

Voltaire got hold of this statement of Newton's and, in the sneering spirit of skepticism, said, "Now look at the mighty mind of Newton, the great philosopher who discovered the law of gravitation; when he became an old man and got into his dotage he began to study the book called the Bible, and in order to credit its fabulous nonsense he would have us believe that the knowledge of mankind will yet be so increased that we shall by-and-by be able to travel fifty miles an hour! Poor dotard!"

Doubtless the sneer of the philosophic infidel afforded a laugh to his skeptical friends, and both he and they probably thought it evidence of his wisdom and of the superstitious weakness of Newton. But the most confirmed skeptic, if he should get into a railroad train to-day, would be compelled to say that Newton was the wise Christian philosopher and Voltaire both illmannered and unwise.—Am. Messenger.

"VERILY, THOU SHALT BE FED."

I found in Syracuse a Christian woman whom they called "Mother Austin," a person of most remarkable faith. She was so poor that she was entirely dependent upon the charity of the people for subsistence. She was an uneducated woman, and had been brought up manifestly in a family of very little cultivation, but she had such faith as to secure the confidence of all who knew her. I do not think I ever witnessed greater faith, in its simplicity, than was manifested by this woman.

A great many facts were related to me respecting her trust in God, and in what a remarkable manner God provided for her wants from day to day. She said to me on one occasion, "Mr. Finney, it is impossible for me to suffer for any of the necessaries of life, because God has said to me, 'Trust in the Lord and do good; so shalt thou dwell in the land, and verily, thou shalt be fed.'"

She related to me many facts in her history, and many facts were related to me by others, illustrative of her faith. One Saturday evening, she said, a friend of hers, but an impenitent man, called to see her, and after conversing awhile, offered her a five-dollar bill. She said she felt an inward admonition not to take it, feeling that it would be an act of self-righteousness on the part of the young man, and might do him more harm than it would do her good. She, therefore, declined to take it, and he went away. She told me she had just wood and food enough in the house to last over Sunday, and that was all; that she had no means whatever of obtaining any more. Still she was not at all afraid to trust God in these circumstances, as she had done for so many years.

On that Sunday morning there came a violent snow storm. On Monday morning the snow was several feet deep, and the streets so blocked up there was no getting out without clearing the way. She had a young son who lived with her, the two composing the whole family. They arose in the morning and found themselves snowed in on every side. They made out to muster fuel enough for a little fire, and soon the boy began to inquire what they should have for breakfast. She said, "I do not know, my son; but the Lord will provide."

She looked out and saw that nobody could pass the streets. The lad began to weep bitterly, and concluded that they should freeze and starve to death. However, she said she went on and made such preparations as she could to provide for breakfast, if any should come. I think she told me she set her table, and made arrangements for the meal, believing that something would come in due season.

Very soon she heard loud talking in the street. Going to the window to see what it was, she saw a man in a single sleigh, and some men with him shoveling snow so that the horse could get through. Up they came to her door,and, behold, they had brought fuel and provision, everything to make her comfortable for several days!

But time would fail me to relate the instances in which she was helped in a manner as striking as this. Indeed, it was notorious through the city, so far as I could learn, that Mother Austin's faith was like a bank; and that she never suffered for want of the necessaries of life, because she drew on God.—Autobiography of Pres. Finney.

"HIS LOVE TO ME."

To an invalid friend, who was a trembling, doubting believer, a minister once said: "When I leave you I shall go to my own residence, if the Lord will; and when there the first thing that I expect to do is to call for a baby that is in the house. I expect to place her on my knee, and look down into her sweet eyes, and listen to her charming prattle; and, tired as I am, her presence will rest me, for I love that child with an unutterable tenderness.

"But the fact is she does not love me; or to say the most for her, she loves me very little. If my heart were breaking under a burden of crushing sorrow it would not disturb her sleep. If my body were racked with excruciating pain it would not interrupt her play with her toys. If I were dead she would be amused in watching my pale face and closed eyes. If my friends came to remove the corpse to the place of burial she would probably clap her hands in glee, and in two or three days totally forget her papa. Besides this she has never brought me in a penny, but has been a constant expense on my hands ever since she was born. Yet, although I am not rich in this world's possessions, there is not money enough in this world to buy my baby. How is it? Does she love me or do I love her? Do I withhold my love until I know she loves me? Am I waiting for her to do something worthy of my love before extending it to her?"

"Oh, I see it!" said the sick man, while the tears ran down his cheeks, "I see it clearly; it is not my love to God, but God's love to me I ought to be thinking about; and I do love him now as I never loved him before."

From that time his peace was like a river. "We love him because he first loved us."—Lights and Shadows.

"JESUS DID IT."

Elkanah Beard, who was for many years a missionary, tells the following about a little girl in the city of Benares, in Hindustan. He knew the father and mother of the child, and knows every word of it to be true, and believes that God answered the little girl's prayer.

In that city lay a mother sick. For months she had not left her bed, and all that she looked forward to was slow death. Her little daughter was eight years old. She loved her mother and was almost broken-hearted. She took the New Testament and read the promises of answers to prayer. Going to her mother, she said:

"Mother, dear, can't Jesus make you well?"

"Yes, my child, but it is not his will."

"Mother, why not? Have you ever asked him to heal you?"

"No, no, my child, but —"

"Mother, you pray to God, I know."

"Yes, darling."

"What kind of prayers, mamma?"

"Oh, my child, I am in such agony I cannot talk to you about it; go and play."

The chiid dropped her head sadly, and went out beneath a tree in her father's garden, for her father was a postal official in that large city, and had a beautiful home. She sat there, and thought and prayed. Suddenly she returned to the bedside of her mother, and kneeling, said: "Mamma, I am going to try Jesus, anyhow. He says, 'Ask.' Yes, I am going to ask him. Now, mamma, pray with me. O Jesus, dear, good Jesus, I've no happy days now, since my mamma is sick these three months. She is so sick she can't talk to her little girl. O Jesus, she is so sick. O God, make my poor mamma to get well. O God, you can, you will. Mamma loves you! her little girl loves you!"

Suddenly she sprang to her feet and clapping her hands, cried, "He will, mamma, he will, he will."

That self-same day the lady, who had not moved her limbs for months, arose from her bed, and went about her household duties, healed and praising God. Her husband met her at the door that day, and overwhelmed with the event, went down on his knees and prayed to God to make him worthy of the blessing that had fallen on his house; while his little girl stood by him, her face radiant with holy joy, exclaiming, "O papa, Jesus did it!"—Times of Refreshing.

WHO IS THIS LITTLE GIRL?

I know a bright little girl who can say
Each one of her letters from Z to A,
And is always willing to leave her play
When mamma wants an errand done;
Who knows how to knit and mend and sew,
And is neat as wax from top to toe.
She brings her father's slippers and gown
When he returns from the busy town,
Where he works from morn till the sun goes down;
We never knew her a falsehood to tell,
Whate'er she does she loves to do well;
What is her name, do you know?

THE POWER OF HABIT.

The passers-by on a country road used to pause sometimes and wonder to see an old white horse in the pasture traveling round and round in a circle. Hour after hour he kept up his tramp, though entirely free to go and come as he pleased. This shows the power of habit. For twenty years he had been daily harnessed to the end of a long sweep,and traveled in just such a circuit, until too stiff and blind for further service; then a kind master gave him his time and a good pasture. Twenty years of steady industry had made work a necessity. Now when life was all holiday, there was no holiday; so he kept on, from choice, in his old round.

Habits, good or bad, cling to us. I remember what a blustering winter morning it was when Allen resolutely buttoned his overcoat up to his chin and drew on his fleecy gloves.

"You are not going to church such a morning as this, Allen?" said a brother medical student.

"To be sure I am," said the other decidedly. "I was brought up to attend church, and I should as soon think of going without my breakfast as of staying at home.

It is one of the best habits a youth can form, and a great safeguard amidst the temptations of a city, to attend the house of God.

The habit of patient industry is a grand one to form very early, for all of one's success in life must hinge upon it. "The idle soul shall suffer hunger."

There are bad habits, too, which seem to blend into one another as the waters of the brook mingle with those of the river. Idlers love the saloons and the shady porches of old tavern-stands, and the company they meet there. They fall an easy prey to the rum-seller; and when the habit of tasting his samples is once formed, it is not often broken. All manhood goes down with it, as into an awful whirlpool.

How happy a boy should be who finds a good habit of any kind growing stronger every day! It is easy for one to tell for himself just how he stands, if he will only look sharply at his going and comings, and see with what feelings he goes about his daily duties. "He that hath clean hands shall be stronger and stronger." One cannot have his hands clean from sin unless the thoughts flow in right channels. They do make channels for themselves, in which they habitually flow, just as surely as the water-courses.—Youth's World.

WHAT THE CHILDREN DID.

Rev. N. H. Boston, addressing a missionary meeting of English children, told the following story: "In my country (Africa) there was a man who had to take a journey on very important business. When he got to the boat that was to take him, it was fast in the mud of the river. 'You cannot go till the tide rises,' said the captain. 'I must,' said the man; and he called to the strongest man there to bring a rope and help pull; but the ship did not move. 'You must wait,' said the captain. 'I cannot,' said the other; and he called all the men in the village to pull the rope; but the ship would not move. 'It's of no use; you must make up your mind to stay,' said the captain. 'I will not,' cried the man; and he fetched all the women, and they pulled with the men. Still the ship did not move. 'Well, you see,' said the captain, 'you can't do anything, you must stop.' 'I shall not,' said the man; and he gathered the children, and they took hold of the rope and pulled with their fathers and mothers. Slowly the ship moved in the water, and the man sailed about his business. So now, children, come and pull, and see if the ship will not move."

TEMPERANCE.

WHAT YOU VOTE FOR!

[From the Detroit Evening Journal.]

Every citizen who goes to the polls and casts a ballot performs one of the most important acts of his life—an act that affects more of his fellow creatures in respect of their rights, their interests and their homes, for "weal or for woe," than in anything else he does. He touches the springs that move the whole machinery of government. He votes for good or bad laws, for righteous or unrighteous government, according to the character and qualifications of the men or parties for whom he votes. Governments are of God's ordaining, and are for the protection of society, its rights, safety and welfare, against the selfish, unprincipled and lawless—a "terror to evil doers and a praise to them that do well!" God's command is: "Choose out from among you righteous men to rule over you, men who fear God, love the truth, hate covetousness, who will do justice in the morning and let the oppressed go free!" That is the class of men we want now. "He that ruleth over men must be just."

Now, the question comes to every voter, can he observe and obey these important principles and commands and vote for either the Democratic or Republican parties? Can a good, loyal, patriotic citizen—can a good Christian, whose duty it is to "do all to the glory of God"—support the one or the other of these degenerate and corrupt political organizations, considering their relations to righteous civil government and their complicity and support of the wicked liquor traffic? I hold he cannot, and for these reasons:

1st. These parties are not and do not profess to be governed by any of these high moral considerations, and are decided upon no moral or reform issues whatever, but are engaged in a selfish and unholy strife for the "offices"—the "ins" to hold on—the "outs" to get in; and the mode of their warfare and their diatribes upon each other are demoralizing and disgraceful in the extreme. 2. These parties are to-day the great props, guys, and supports of the whole crime and misery-producing liquor business in this country! They are both completely subservient to the liquor power, and its bidding they do and its interests they serve. They both enact, and for bribe money, sanction and defend the atrocious license scheme, thus perverting and degrading the functions and powers of the government to the legalized support and perpetuity of the liquor curse.

To vote, therefore, for either of these parties is to vote directly for that against which God pronounces a "woe!" is to vote directly for licensing the drink traffic, the "hellish saloons!" the direct cause of idleness, drunkenness, pauperism, rowdyism, anarchism, riots, robberies, Sabbath desecrations, wife and children starvings and beatings and ghastly murders! O, fellow-men! O, fellow-Christians, can you thus prostitute your God given franchise! But to vote for the Prohibition party you vote for good, true, clean men, who will administer the government in righteousness, abolish the deadly liquor traffic and save and protect our cherished institutions of liberty, learning and religion, and save our homes and our children from the terrible liquor scourge. Which will you vote for? GEO. W. CLARK.

TEMPERANCE TEXT-BOOKS.

During the last five years, the Legislatures of twenty three out of the thirty-five States, and the National Congress for all the ten Territories, have made the study of Scientific Temperance compulsory "for all pupils in all their public schools."

The population of these States and Territories is over one-half that of the whole country. Thus America's majority to-morrow, is in these schools of to-day.

It was the intention of those who secured these laws that the children should have the latest science concerning the dangers and hurtful qualities of alcohol, used in any degree, and the peril of forming the habit of its use.

The law requires this; nothing less than this will ever satisfy its friends.

Those text-books that only point out the evils of drunkenness and the danger of excessive use of alcoholic drinks and narcotics, do not meet the requirements of the law, and do not satisfy those who secured its enactments, and who are determined to secure its enforcement.

A petition, therefore, has been signed by many legislators who voted for these laws in various States, and in the National Congress, by the representatives of temperance organizations, who are familiar with the sentiments and are entitled to speak for the very numerous membership of different churches and other bodies, extending widely throughout the land, and by citizens who speak for themselves.

This petition makes a respectful and earnest appeal to all publishers of text-books on this subject, to revise their publications to conform to the latest results of scientific inquiry, and to meet the terms and spirit of these statutes, so that public and authorized expressions of approval and endorsement of all such books can be issued and given wide circulation.

Such an appeal to all publishers effectually refutes the charge that the friends of temperance instruction are pecuniarily interested in the sale of any particular book. It is because the question of total abstinence for the children of this country, and, therefore, of their well being and that of the land soon to be governed by them, depends largely upon the teachings in the text-books employed, that this appeal is made.

Among the signers of this petition are thirty-two gentlemen, members of the National Congress, who were influential in securing the passage of the statute enacted by that body, requiring the study of Scientific Temperance in all schools under the control of the Federal Government. These names are led by those of Hon. John J. Ingalls, President Protempore of U. S. Senate, Senator H. W. Blair from New Hampshire, Senator Palmer from Michigan, Senators Hoar and Dawes from Massachusetts, Senator Frye from Maine and others.

Congressman Long of Massachusetts, Hon. Geo. W. Geddes of Ohio, Hon. A. S. Willis of Kentucky, Hon. James O. Donnell of Michigan, Hon. E. N. Morrill of Kansas, and Congressmen Conger and Hepburn from Iowa, are among the petitioners from the lower House of the same Congress.

If space would allow the printing of the entire list of signers, the reader would see many additional names of persons whose opinions have national influence.

As a whole, the petition constitutes an expression of the best public sentiment of our country, in favor of teaching to the children of the United States, the full truth of science against strong drink, and in favor of total abstinence.

A HOME-MADE DRUNKARD AND MURDERER.

John Hodel, a silk weaver, living at Turnersville, Conn., shot his wife last night, (Nov. 1) and then set fire to the house. Two children were burned to death. Hodel fled but is now under arrest. The murder is one of the most horrible ever known in Connecticut. Hodel had been on a spree for about a week, and when sober was a quiet, good-natured fellow. He tells the following story: "Last night I told my wife I was going to kill myself. She said she wanted to die, too. An agreement was then made that the whole family should die together, two small children, a boy and girl, aged three and six years, and the mother, who expected to be confined again in a month. During the night I brought the two children from an adjoining room and placed them in bed with their mother and set fire to the bed; but the smothering process was too slow, so I got a shot-gun and fired both barrels into my wife's breast killing her instantly. The flames then spread and smothered both children. I then went down stairs, rapped on the window of the lower tenement bed-room and called them to come in and see what I had done. Then, with nothing on but a night-shirt, I ran down the road toward the depot crying 'fire.'"

Hansicker and other neighbors put out the fire after the room had been badly scorched and a hole burned in the floor. Hodel wandered around awhile, got a pair of pants from a German neighbor, and finally, after the bodies had been moved into the room below, came back to the house, and made no effort to escape. He is a Swiss, and came from Lucerne a year ago last July. He says he expects to be hanged, and don't care how quickly. He had half a dozen barrels of home-made wine and cider in his cellar, and drinking from these made him crazy and prompted the murder. Neither he nor his wife had any relatives in this country.—Dispatch to Chicago Herald.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

There were on Tuesday, the 22nd inst., by actual count, seventy-five Congressmen at the Capital, and the list is lengthened on the arrival of nearly every train. Among the most prominent of the members I have noticed on the Avenue (that's Pennsylvania Avenue—so called by all Washingtonians)are Messrs. Voorhees, Harrison, Edmunds and Everts, of the Senate, and Messrs. Carlisle, Springer, Breckenridge and Davenport of the House. Two other remarkable men and notable figures who are often seen on the streets are the ex-President of the Senate and the President of the Senate, John Sherman and John J. Ingalls. The stately form of the Ohio Senator is seldom seen outside of his carriage on the streets, while on the other hand, the long, willowy figure of the picturesque Kansan can often be seen mingling with the throngs that frequent the thoroughfares of this beautiful city. If one wishes to catch a glimpse occasionally of most of the national solons, the best place to take a stand, outside of the Capitol itself, is in the corridors of the different departments, near the doors of the Secretary's office. When a common mortal, like you or I, dear reader, would enter the awe-inspiring presence of a Cabinet minister, the obliging door-keeper always hands out a card, with blanks, wherein we are required to state "name and nature of business," and send it in by a messenger before the slightest chance for admission; but, when a "member," as they are popularly known, appears, the door flies open as if by magic by the time he is within six feet of it.

As forshadowed in my last letter, the resignation of Commissioner of the Land Office Sparks has taken place—the President letting down the arrogant and rebellious official as easily as possible. This was the only way, outside of a peremptory dismissal, to properly rebuke the persistent insubordination of the irascible Illinoian, who constantly deported himself in office as if he was lord of all he surveyed.

It is the gossip of the hotel and departmental corridors that some opposition is developing to the confirmation of Secretary Lamar's probable nomination to the Supreme Bench, chiefly on account of his advanced age—he is entering his sixty-third year—and it appears that this feeling is by no means confined to his political opponents. There is a disposition on the part of several Republican Senators to raise a sectional outcry against the Secretary on account of his having within the past four years championed the civil chieftain of the Southern Confederacy, on the floor of the United States Senate. It is broadly intimated that the Supreme Court is equally divided on the issue of the prohibition cases from Iowa, Kansas and Georgia, and that the new Justice will have to cast the deciding vote—it now stands four to four—nine being a full bench. In the celebrated drive well case, the Supreme Court has recently rendered a decision against the patentee, who claims a royalty of ten dollars each on all the driven wells in the United States—the number being estimated at three millions.

The deficiencies for the transportation of the mails amounted to from eight to fifteen million dollars per annum a few years since; but these deficits have been gradually reduced until they are now no more than a million a year—so that by the end of the present year the Postoffice Department promises to be on a self-sustaining basis. *

RELIGIOUS NEWS.

—Dr. Wm. Wishart is doing an excellent work in Clearfield, Iowa. The Midland says it is possible that the Doctor may become a resident of Southwestern Iowa.

—Rev. J. B. Galloway of Vernon, Wis., has been requested to supply Yorkville congregation half time for the present, and appointed to do so by Wisconsin Presbytery.

—Rev. David Strang of Lincoln, Tenn., and at one time a United Presbyterian missionary in Egypt, has recently made a visit to Wooster, Ohio.

—Rev. H. W. Crabbe has lately gone to his appointment as pastor of the United Presbyterian church at Los Angeles. He succeeds Rev. J. M. Hervey.

—Elder Isaac Hyatt, of Gilford Village, New Hampshire, begins a series of revival meetings with his church. He will be assisted by Rev. R. W. Churchill, of Belmont, and asks all Christians to pray for an abundant blessing.

—After telling what has been accomplished by missionaries in India, a leading religious journal remarks: "Notwithstanding all that has been done, the heathen population is larger to-day than when Gordon Hall landed in Bombay, and it has a population that in its higher classes is breaking with old traditions, givnig up its old faith, and in imminent danger of drifting away from all religion."

—Mr. Munhall and his co-workers, Mr. and Mrs. Towner, began their evangelical work in Cleveland Sunday evening in the Music Hall. They had a wonderful meeting in Columbus.

—Rev. W. H. Chandler has just closed his second year at Plymouth, Ill. In this time the membership has more than doubled, and a new parsonage has just been built. Bro. Chandler was formerly connected with the United Brethren.

—D. W. Potter, the evangelist from this city, has been holding very successful meetings in Aurora. Several hundred were converted.

—Professor Smyth, of the Andover Seminary, has appealed to the Supreme Court from the decision of the Board of visitors deposing him from his professorship. The case will be heard in Boston early in December.

—Previous to the adjournment of the North Alabama Conference of the Southern Methodist church at Tuscaloosa, a resolution was adopted requesting Dr. D. C. Kelley, of Nashville, one of the most eminent Methodist divines in America, and missionary treasurer of the General Conference, to resign his official position on account of his utterances in reference to the Emma Abbott episode at Nashville. The resolution will create a great sensation throughout the entire Southern Methodist church. Dr. Kelley defended Miss Abbott's rising in church to defend herself against a severe but just condemnation of theater-going.

—At a meeting of ministers of all denominations, at the First Methodist church of Chicago, Francis Murphy was requested to commence a winter campaign against intemperance in the city.

—At a meeting of Presbyterian ministers in Pittsburgh, resolutions were unanimously adopted denouncing Sunday newspapers and protesting against their publication, sale, and reading on the Sabbath day; also entreating all lovers of social order and the Sabbath to withdraw their patronage from such papers and threatening to appeal to the authorities to have them suppressed. The resolutions were then sent to the ministers of other churches with a request that similar action be taken.

—The Evangelical Alliance, composed of ministers of nearly all the churches of Cincinnati, at a meeting held to-day deplored the "impending perils of anarchism, socialism, ultramontanism, infidelity, Sabbath-breaking, and intemperance," and heartily promised all possible aid to "efforts to combine the patriotism and Christianity of our country in taking measures to save it from those threatening its destruction." They approved the plan of the proposed National convention at Washington, D. C., to consider these questions and appointed delegates to attend it.

—The China Inland Mission, undenominational, has 126 unmarried and 43 married missionaries; these, with 117 native workers and the wives of the missionaries, constitute a band of over 300, and the mission is asking for 100 more, of whom seventy are already secured. The income of the past year was $110,745. Donations were received from Africa, Palestine, America, New Zealand, Australia, India, and every European country except Austria, Turkey and Greece. Of converts, the Society mention 1,655 as "in fellowship," and 402 as baptized during the year.

—The manager of one of the most important newspapers in Tokyo had been told about Christianity by some of his friends, but avowed himself as unwilling to accept it. A short time ago he arranged to print a Christian book, and in doing so, was obliged to look over and correct the proof. He became interested in the contents, and he soon began to study it with great pleasure. So he was led on step by step to a belief in Christ, and a profession of the Christian faith.

—Rev. Narcisse Cyr, a well-known French clergyman and preacher in Boston, a professor, also, in Boston University, has been cordially invited to return to France to labor in connection with the McAll Mission and in the Reformed church, and has accepted the invitation.

—No fewer than one hundred and ten candidates have applied for the living of the EstablishedChurch, Kennoway, England, which has recently been made vacant by the death of the pastor. It is evident that there are some men in the ministry who don't believe that the field is the world.

LITERATURE.

BIBLE STUDIES from the Old and New Testaments, covering the International Sunday-school Lessons for 1888. By Geo. F. Pentecost, D. D. Pp. 343. Price, cloth, $1; paper, 50 cents. A. S. Barnes & Co., New York and Chicago.

The notes on the Sabbath-school lessons, which have appeared in the New York Witness and Words and Weapons, by Dr. Pentecost, for several years, have been justly admired for their practical and earnest character. All who have been helped in their use, and all who have marked with gratitude to God the fearless course of Dr. Pentecost as an evangelist and able writer on religious topics, will hail this volume. In connection with the International Sunday-school Lessons for 1888, it is highly probable that no one book will prove of greater value or excite more wide-spread interest than these "Bible Studies." It covers the Old and New Testament International Lessons by a plan of treatment which is decidedly new and interesting. The author has avoided the too common mistake followed by writers on these lessons, and has rigidly excluded the mass of merely critical and explanatory and exegetical matter, which only serves to overload the lesson for the average teacher, and has confined himself to a purely common-sense and spiritual exposition of the Scriptures. Every incident and sentence has a vital and pregnant meaning, and he writes as though the Scriptures were given for the readers of to-day rather than for those to whom it was first revealed centuries ago. The book will be a vast help to Sunday-school teachers and advanced scholars; indeed, it is evidently a book of more than mere passing value, for it is so written and prepared as to give it a permanent place among books of comment on the Sacred Text. It ought to have, and no doubt will have, a wide reading. The literary style is not high, but is easy and very direct in presenting its meanings in fresh and condensed forms that are remarkably suggestive and inspiring to the reader's thought. No one will have any doubt as to what the writer has meant to say.

December Scribner's Magazine fittingly closes a very successful first year's work with a number full of literary excellence and an unusual number of illustrations artistic and original. In "The Zadoc Pine Labor Union," by H. C. Bunner, editor of Puck, a ringing word is spoken for strong, native American energy and shrewdness as an antidote to the wild theories and methods which foreign laborers have introduced in this country with their labor union lodge. It is the application of native wit instead of foreign theory to the labor question. The contrast between common sense and rant is ludicrous, and the satire penetrating. The most fully illustrated article is "In Florence with Romola," by E. H. Blashfield, the well known painter, and his wife, with sixteen drawings by the former. This is the fruit of several visits to the scenes of George Eliot's romance, and is an affectionate and faithful interpretation of some of the most interesting features of Florence, from both the artistic and the literary point of view. "In Dickens-Land" is a posthumous essay by Edwin Percy Whipple, the great American essayist. The poetry is of high class and in some respects remarkable, especially Stevenson's transformation of the Scotch legend of Ticonderoga. Other handsomely illustrated poems are "Tarpeia," a legend of ancient Rome, by Louise Imogen Guiney, "The Water Witch," by Elizabeth Akers, and "A Song to the Lute," by Austin Dobson.

The Missionary Review issues a double number for November and December, the last work of the noble-souled R. G. Wilder. He had thus brought the Review through its tenth volume and turned it over to the new editors, Rev. Drs. J. M. Sherwood and A. T. Pierson, who take charge with the January number. It is their purpose to greatly enlarge it, making it a monthly of 80 pages, give it a fine mechanical appearance, enlarge its scope, increase its literary and intellectual attractions, and bring it into harmonious relations with all the great missionary agencies and movements of the age—in a word, to make it the "Missionary Review of the World" in fact as well as in name—a review truly representative of the spirit, policy and work of modern missions in their unity, entirety and universality. This labor will popularize the Review, but we fear its independent spirit will fade in the attempt, and we shall no longer find those faithful criticisms of society management which were of such real value to the missionary organizations and were so much needed for the information and intelligent action of the churches. We pray the new editors to be as faithful as Paul admonished Timothy to be.

The American edition of the London Illustrated News for Nov. 26 contains a fine, full-page portrait of the late great prima donna, Jenny Lind. In the sketches of the visit of the Prince of Wales in Devon and Cornwall, one represents the Prince laying the corner stone of a new church at Falmouth. He does it not as Grand Master of Freemasons, but simply as the heir apparent to the throne.

The current number of Science contains a very able plea for the study of Logic which is worth a careful reading by educators. There is also a picture of the annual congress of the Theosophical Congress at Adyar, India. This Society is closely associated with the higher degrees of Freemasonry, Masons of many degrees being among its leading disciples. Its great object is Masonic —"to lay the foundation for a universal brotherhood of man, without distinction of race, religion or color."

LODGE NOTES.

District Assembly No. 3,115, K.of L., the oldest assembly in New Albany, Ind., has gone out of existence. It had at one time a membership of 800, but this number was reduced to 70. There was no dissenting voice to the proposed dissolution. So mote it be!

One of the men concerned in the shooting of the four white men at Pharr's cane carrier, Nov. 4, in southern Louisiana, has made a partial confession, which puts the responsibility of the deed directly on the master workman of Barwick lodge, Knights of Labor, and the secretary of the executive board of that district.

The Masonic Grand Lodge of Ohio had a long and hot discussion of the motion to disapprove the Grand Master's decision that the higher degree order of Cerean was illegal and unmasonic. Arguments pro and con occupied the time until 2 o'clock, when a vote was reached and the ruling of the Grand Master was sustained by a large majority.

The Grand Lodge of Perfection of Northern Indiana conferred the Scottish Rite degree on forty applicants. Among those who took part in the services were a large number of State officials and politicians as: Bruce Carr, Auditor of State; L.T. Michener, Attorney General; Charles Griffin, Secretary of State; Judges Elliott and Zollars, of the Supreme Bench, and about thirty others from Indianapolis.

On the 28th of September the Ohio State lodge of the "Patriotic Order Sons of America" adopted resolutions condemning the Chicago anarchists and commending the courts and officials legally engaged in their punishment This very patriotic order not finding a suitable opportunity to display themselves in the Chicago papers, finally, just before the day of execution, published their resolutions as a big two column advertisement to catch new members.

The Supreme Council of Sovereign Grand Inspectors General of the Thirty-third Degree, Scottish Rite Freemasonry for the United States, held their session this year in New York city. The following officers were elected: Judge John J. Gorman, of New York, Sovereign Grand Commander; William A. Hershiser, of Columbus, Lieutenant Grand Commander; Granville A. Frambics, of Ohio Grand Minister of State; Robert E. Roberts, Grand Treasurer General; Robert B Folger, M. D., of Brooklyn, Grand Corresponding Secretary General; John G. Barker, Grand Secretary General; John Boyd, Grand Keeper of the Archives; Isaac F. Graham, of Connecticut, Grand Standard Bearer; E J Edwards, of Minneapolis, Grand Captain of the Guard.

The Grand Lodge of Illinois Odd-fellows lately met at Cairo considered several important propositions, one of which was to amend the constitutions of subordinate lodges so that applicants for reinstatement must sign an agreement not to seek redress in the civil courts for grievances arising in the order, a beautiful plan whereby the order should be protected from its excellent and virtuous members. Resolutions affecting mileage paid delegates to the Grand Lodge stirred up a warm debate. The proposition was to reduce the allowance from 8 cents per mile to 6. The opponents of the measure held that the present rate of 8 cents did not more than cover expenses, while the other side held that the amount allowed now would bankrupt the treasury, leaving it short $6,000, there being but $16,000 on hand against $21,000 required. The resolution was lost. Right! Odd-fellows pay enough for dues and other exactions without bearing their own traveling expenses beside. Never mind what becomes of the Grand Lodge!

MASON & HAMLIN ORGANS.

The cabinet organ was introduced in its present form by Mason & Hamlin in 1861. Other makers followed in the manufacture of these instruments, but the Mason & Hamlin Organs have always maintained their supremacy as the best in the world.

Mason & Hamlin offer, as demonstration of the unequaled excellence of their organs, the fact that at all of the great World's Exhibitions, since that of Paris, 1867, in competition with best makers of all countries, they have invariably taken the highest honors. Illustrated catalogues free.

PIANOS.

Mason & Hamlin's Piano Stringer was introduced by them in 1882, and has been pronounced by experts the "greatest improvement in pianos in half a century."

A circular, containing testimonials from three hundred purchasers, musicians, and tuners, sent, together with descriptive catalogue, to any applicant.

Pianos and Organs sold for cash or easy payments; also rented.

Old Age and How to Enjoy It.

A most appropriate gift book for "The Old Folks at Home."

Compiled by REV. S. G. LATHROP.

Introduction by
REV. ARTHUR EDWARDS, D. D.,
(Editor N. W. Christian Advocate.)

The object of this volume is to give to that great army who are fast hastening toward the "great beyond" some practical hints and helps as to the best way to make the most of the remainder of that now is, and to give comfort and help life that is to come.

"It is a tribute to the Christianity that honors the gray head and refuses to consider the oldish man a burden or an obstacle. The book will aid and comfort every reader."—Northwestern Christian Advocate.

"The selections are very precious. Springing from such numerous and pure fountains, they can but afford a refreshing and healthful draught for every aged traveller to the great beyond."—Witness.

The Master's Carpet.

BY

F. Ronayne.

Past Master of Keystone Lodge No. 631 Chicago.

Explains the true source and meaning of every ceremony and symbol of the Lodge, thus showing the principles on which the order is founded. By a careful perusal of this work, a more thorough knowledge of the principles of the order can be obtained than by attending the Lodge for years. Every Mason, every person contemplating becoming a member, and even those who are indifferent on the subject, should procure and carefully read this work. An appendix is added of 32 pages, embodying which gives every sign, grip and ceremony of the Lodge together with a brief explanation of each. The work contains 432 pages and is substantially and elegantly bound in cloth. Price, 75 cents.

Freemasonry at a Glance,

IN THE COILS;

—OR—

The Coming Conflict.

A NEW AND STRANGE STORY BASED ON STARTLING FACTS, VIVIDLY PORTRAYING A MYSTERIOUS AND DANGEROUS POWER AT WORK IN THE GOVERNMENT, THE CHURCH, AND THE HOME.

"All will agree that this is a powerfully written story."—Evangelist, (Chicago, Ills.)

"A book which we trust may have a wide circulation."—National Baptist, (Philadelphia.)

"So intensely interesting did I find it that it was hard to pause until the last sentence was read. This work places the author high among the writers of fiction."—W. W. Barr, D. D. in Christian Instructor, (Philadelphia.)

"Unless we are greatly mistaken, the work will do more to awaken the American church and people to the evils of Freemasonry than any other book recently published."—Evangelical Repository.

"The book will create a sensation in Masonic circles, and evoke criticism of a most relentless character. The courage of the author in attacking such a rock-rooted bulwark as Freemasonry is something to admire. Fanatic though he be."—Nebraska Watchman.

"Light is needed on this subject and needed badly, and we welcome this contribution to the literature of anti-secretism, and cordially commend it to the favorable attention of our readers."—United Presbyterian, (Pittsburgh.)

"A charming work, fit to be classed with 'Uncle Tom's Cabin;' it is indeed less a work of fiction. The volume is as valuable as a work of reference as it is agreeable, truthful and useful. Our young folks will not leave the book, if they begin it, till they 'see how it turns out.'"—Cynosure, (Chicago, Ills.)

A Few Books of Special Worth

IN BIBLE STUDY.

THE LIFE OF CHRIST. By Rev. James Stalker, M.A. Arranged for study. 16mo, cloth, 60 cts.
This work is in truth "Multum in Parvo," containing within small compass a vast amount of most helpful teaching, so admirably arranged that the reader gathers with remarkable definiteness the whole revealed record of the life-work of our Lord in a nutshell of space and with a minimum of study.

THE GOSPEL ACCORDING TO MOSES, as Seen in the Tabernacle and Its Services. By Rev. George Rogers. New Edition, enlarged. Cloth, 75 cts.; paper, 50 cts.
The writer of this delightfully interesting work has opened up a rich vein of truth, and in a remarkably suggestive style has presented the typical teachings of the Tabernacle of Israel. The book is really fascinating.

NOTES AND SUGGESTIONS FOR BIBLE READINGS. By Briggs and Elliott. Contains over twenty short chapters by various authors on different plans and methods for Bible Readings, followed by over six hundred outlines of Bible Readings, by a great variety of authors. 262 pages, 12mo, flexible cloth, 75 cts.; stiff cloth, $1.00.

C. H. M's, NOTES ON THE PENTATEUCH. By C. H. Macintosh. 6 vols. In set. Per set, $4.50; separate vols., each, 75 cts.
Mr. D. L. Moody says: "They have been to me a very key to the Scriptures."
Maj. D. W. Whittle says: "Under God they have blessed me more than any books outside the Bible I have ever read."

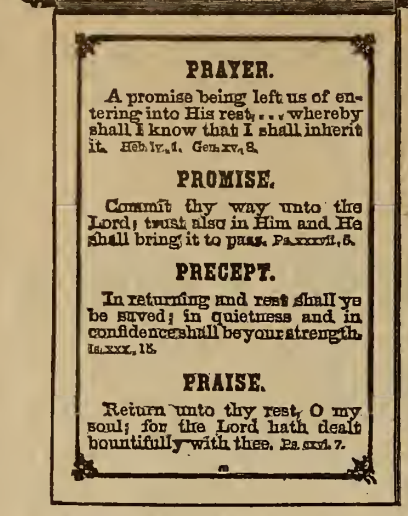
HOME AND HEALTH.

HOW TO MAKE GUESTS UNCOMFORTABLE.

May I name a few of the plans resorted to by well meaning but mistaken people to make their homes so decidedly unattractive to any one that the time required for social pleasures takes almost nothing from their lifetime? One of these ways is the habit of constantly calling attention to, by excusing, all the short comings and drawbacks to the hospitality being dispensed. The hostess who habitually does this is a troublesome person to visit, whether she "fears that the smallness of her rooms must cramp you," or deplores "the shabbiness of the furniture," or is worried "lest the noise of her children will make you long to be at home again," or excuses the manner in which meals are served. It may be that most of these things would pass unnoticed, or trouble you very little, if only the mistress of the house would not plaintively proclaim them, taxing the powers of the polite guest to the very utmost to protest that they were not noticeable, or to coin some little fiction as to the disorder being excusable, and growing tired and worried over the effort to cover up the poor management of the hostess, and her impolite ness also, for it is impolite to tax a guest in this double way; she has her own share as well as that of the hostess to bear, and it is little wonder if, in future, she keeps away from such a tax. Perhaps we enter a house where draperies of cobwebs seem to be the order of the day. What do we care if such is the state of their walls? Very few of us care at all, if only our homes are neat. If such is the taste of the dwellers there you are willing it shall be gratified. But to be told to "only look at them!" and to be asked "if this is not a disgraceful condition of things?" or told, 'I am sure you will tell how carelessly we live, now, won't you?" is rather embarrassing. So, intending to make yourself agreeable, you observe that "cobwebs are rather pretty and quite graceful, and you rather like them," and such like inanities as this, "They do collect so fast this weather," knowing these must be the collection of months, and then you collapse, for the effort is severe, and the hostess keeps on saying:

"Perfectly dreadful! You are not used to such things, and I shan't sleep to night for thinking of the condition in which you found my rooms."

If you are fond of careless housekeeping, it is entirely your own affair, but to impress it on your guests is an experiment you will not find successful, for they will not stand it often. The excusing hostess is particularly annoying at meals, and often obliges her guest to eat of unsavory or ill-cooked dishes, in the effort to save the feelings of one who deserves little or no consideration. Unless you eat extravagantly, she is sure the meal is "badly prepared," "not to your taste," "overdone," "underdone," and she "just knows you will starve."



Don't make people at your table eat more than they wish to; particularly don't urge on them anything that is one atom questionable by debating its merit, and so sending a challenge to a polite person to accept more of it (as a proof of its superior quality) than is agreeable or profitable. Even if an entire meal should prove a failure, it is better to order it quietly away than to load the stomach of your victim with uneatable food. The temporary discomfort of being a little unsatisfied is soon cured, while eating undigestible food carries its reminder in physical suffering for several days.

There is another very common form of victimizing your guests—talking about things or people they don't know, never have known, and under no circumstances will ever be likely to come in contact with. It leaves the visitor so entirely outside of any chance to interest himself in the conversation; leaves him so entirely alone that if he is not intimate enough to take a book or a nap, so as to wait for a change in the topic of talk which he can understand and join in, his position is often embarrassing, always tiresome and not one to accept willingly many times.

POPULAR COMMENTARIES

In the critical biblical literature of the century few books have been so unqualifiedly endorsed as

Jamieson, Fausset & Brown's Commentary

On the Old and New Testaments. It has been tried, tested and proven, during one of the most active periods ever known in biblical research. That it has not been found wanting is evident in the still unabated demand. At considerable outlay we have issued a new edition of this valuable work in clear type, attractively bound, and at a price much lower than any complete commentary ever before issued.
In Extra Fine English Cloth, sprinkled edge, the full set, (4 vols.).....$ 8.00
In Half Morocco, the full set, (4 vols.)..... 10 00

"The BEST condensed Commentary on the whole Bible is the Commentary on the Old and New Testaments, by Jamieson, Fausset & Brown. It contains notes of the choicest and richest character on all parts of the Holy Bible. It is the cream of the commentaries carefully collected by three eminent scholars. Its critical introduction to each book of Scripture, its eminently practical notes, its numerous pictorial illustrations, commend it strongly to the Sunday-school worker and to the clergyman. Then it is such a marvel of cheapness."—Rev. J. H. Vincent, D. D., in "Aids to Bible Study."

The leading clergymen and college professors of the country unite with Dr. Vincent in placing this commentary in the first rank of all biblical aids.

The Christian's Secret
OF
A Happy Life.
28th THOUSAND.

Baptist Commendation.

"We are delighted with this book. It reaches to the very core of Christian experience, and is eminently experimental in its teachings. It meets the donbts and difficulties of conscientious seekers after the bread and water of life, bnt whose efforts result only in alternate failure and victory. The author, without claiming to be a theologian, sends ont the results of a happy and rich experience to help others into a happy Christian life."—Baptist Weekly.

Presbyterian Endorsement.

"The book is so truly and reverentially devont in its spirit that it disarms criticism. It contains so much that is sound and practical, so much that, if heeded, will make our lives better, happier and more useful, that the intelligent reader who really wishes to lead a life 'hid with Christ in God' can scarcely fail to derive profit from its pernsal."—Interior.

Methodist Word of Praise.

"We have not for years read a book with more light and profit. It is not a theological book. No fort is made to change the theological views of any one. The author has a rich experience, and tells it in a plain and delightful manner."—Christian Advocate.

NATIONAL SUICIDE,
AND
ITS PREVENTION.
BY OSCAR F. LUMRY, PH. D.

Prof. Lumry's book, "National Suicide and Its Remedy," will be read with profit even by those who do not accept its doctrine, that taking interest for money loaned, one or more per cent, is sin, taking something for nothing. For, as Goldsmith said of his Vicar of Wakefield,

E'en his failings lean to virtue's side.
—Cynosure.

Dr. Lumry is a man of ideas and never fails to make his readers understand just what they are. Every sentiment he writes has such an air of honesty that it will in a measure disarm those who read to criticise. It is a good book to set people to thinking, whether they believe his theories or not. The book is well worth a careful reading and study.—Inter Ocean.

On all the points named they differ radically from those which prevail in the organization of society. Either they are true or false. It is a curious fact that all of them have been stigmatized as crazy, and yet nearly all of them have been for some years steadily gaining the adherence of men of intellectual ability.—Times.

BEREA EVANGELIST,

A monthly journal whose aim it is to advance

CHRISTIANITY

and to help break down everything that hinders its spread.
It teaches that men need to be converted to the personal Christ, and not simply to a system of truth, and that there must be implanted in them a divine life as well as a correct belief. The

EVANGELIST

seeks to show that the division of Christians into sects is a great wrong, and a very serious obstacle to the advancement of the Redeemer's kingdom, and it seeks to show Christians how they may be one in Christ, and to persuade and help them thus to unite. The

EVANGELIST.

also opposes Intemperance, Secret Societies, Worldliness, and the spirit of Caste, and aims to "war a good warfare" against all wrong.

IN BRIEF.

Division of labor has been carried to such perfection in this country that it is now possible, so it is said, to make a complete sewing machine in one minute, or sixty in an hour; a reaper every fifteen minutes; a locomotive in a day, and 300 watches in the same time.

The National Agricultural Department estimates the corn yield will be about 1,500,000,000 bushels, and that the wheat crop will reach 450,000,000 bushels. The conditions of cotton and potatoes are said to have declined, while the tobacco average has increased 5 per cent since last report.

At Salem, Mass., the committee having the matter in hand decided to present to John Greenleaf Whittier, on the occasion of his eightieth birthday a suitably inscribed memorial, to be signed by the public men of Massachusetts, the governor, Senators and members of Congress, in grateful recognition of the poet's services to the commonwealth and the nation.

The first train on the Rome, Watertown & Ogdensburg to be heated by steam began running lately on the Oswego and Syracuse division. The steam is conveyed by pipes from the locomotive, and the scheme is reported to be an excellent one and the method of heating to give satisfaction. The company intends to use the system on all its trains.

In all the villages and through the farming districts of the Miami Valley, Ohio, as a result of the water famine an epidemic of diphtheria and fevers prevails, and the further the investigation is extended the more appalling are the reports of the plague. At Lewisburg, where the death list is the greatest, schools are closed and the children are forbidden to go upon the streets.

It has recently been discovered that the headquarters of Mormon activity in Europe is in the canton of Berne, Switzerland. The station is in charge of Bishop Schoenfeld, and from it missionaries are sent out in all directions. The number of converts in Berne alone last year was 336; throughout the whole of Switzerland the year before the whole number of converts was between 600 and 700. It is said that gifts and collections are expected of the converts to carry on the work. The government is thoroughly aroused and proposes to take vigorous measures to break it up.

What is known as the driven well patent, which has been several times before the United States Supreme Court, and which has always heretofore been sustained, has just been declared invalid in an opinion by Justice Blatchford based upon the record in case number 16, Andrews, Green and others vs. George Hovey, brought here by an appeal from the United States circuit court for the southern district of Iowa. This court holds that the fact, now made to appear for the first time in the driven well litigation, that the invention was used at Cortland, N.Y., by others than Green more than two years before application for patent was made, is a fact fatal to the patent's validity. The decree of the circuit court in favor of the alleged infringer Hovey is affirmed.

An item of interest connected with the Chicago anarchists is Mrs. Capt. Black's doggery. All through the long trial before Judge Gary Mrs. Black attended closely and constantly and has shown even deeper interest in the men and more sympathy with their revolutionary principles than her husband, though he was the leading lawyer on the defense. The other day an immense pile of market baskets, 150 to 200 of them, astonished the patrons of a Fifth Avenue meat market, piled about the door without and within. The proprietor explained that they were returned by Mrs. Black, who bought about $3.00 worth of meat daily to feed her two or three score dogs. Mrs. Black's sympathy is so strong for the poor workingman—but the curs must be fed all the same.

Talks ON THE Labor Troubles,
BY REV. C. C. BROWN.

The Danger—The Laborer's Grievance—The Laborer's Foe—The Laborer's Fallacy—The Laborer's Hope—Mind and Muscle—Co-Laborers.

TIMELY TALKS ON AN IMPORTANT SUBJECT.

The Papers Say of this Book:

"It is well to remind the world of the great law of human brotherhood, but how to make the 'more general application of it?' 'Aye, there's the rub!' Our author contributes his mite in that direction, and his voice and reasoning will reach some ears and perhaps touch some understandings and move some selfish hearts that are buttoned up very closely and hedged around by over much respectability and comfortable prosperity."—Chicago Tribune.

"The writer does his work in a way remarkable alike for its directness, its common sense, its impartiality, its lucidity and its force. He has no theories to support; he deals with facts as he finds them; he fortifies his assertions by arrays of demonstrative statistics. The work is among the best of the kind if it is not the best that we have seen. While it is scarcely possible for it to be put in the hands of all our wage-workers, we wish it could be read by every one of them."—Chicago Interior.

Sing the Reform
Into the Hearts of the People

One of the most popular books against lodgery is the latest compilation of

George W. Clark,

The Minstrel of Reform:

A forty-page book of soul-stirring, conscience-awakening songs, appropriate for lectures, conventions and the home circle. What can add more to the interest of a meeting than a song well sung? What means will more quickly overthrow the power of the secret lodges than to sing the truth into the popular conscience?

Get this little work and use it for God and home and country. Forty pages.

PERSECUTION

By the Roman Catholic Church.

A Moral Mystery how any Friend of Religious Liberty could Consent to "Hand over Ireland to Parnellite Rule."

By Rev. John Lee, A. M., B. D.

General Viscount Wolseley: "Interesting."
Chicago Inter-Ocean: "A searching review."
Christian Cynosure: "It deserves a wide circulation at the present time."
Bishop Coxe, Protestant Episcopal, of Western New York: "Most useful publication; a logical sequel to 'Our Country,' by Josiah Strong."
Emile De Laveleye of Belgium, the great publicist: "I have read with the greatest interest your answer to Cardinal Manning. I think Rome's encroachments in the United States ought to be carefully watched and resisted."
Rev. C. C. McCabe, D. D.: "It is a useful book and ought to have a wide sale. You are dealing with a question which will soon dominate every other in American politics. The Assassin of Nations is in our midst and is approaching the Temple of Liberty with stealthy tread. The people of this country will understand the Belfast frenzy some day better than they do now."
The Right Hon. Lord Robert Montague: "I have read it with the greatest pleasure, and with amazement at the intimate acquaintance with the acts of Romanism in our midst which you have evinced. I only wish that, instead of publishing your pamphlet in Chicago, you had sown it broadcast over England, Scotland and Ireland."

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

CHICAGO.

Besides the late great Fat Stock and Horse Show, the eighteenth annual meeting of the Bee-keepers' Union was lately held here. The discussions were of great interest to those concerned.

August Hetzke, a German, whipped his step-son, a boy of twelve or thirteen years, to death with a heavy leather strap. The circumstances show the greatest atrocity. The father was a drunken brute, and is under arrest.

GENERAL.

At a somewhat exciting local election in St. Louis for members of the City School Board the issue was on the question of continuing to teach the German language and certain "fancy studies" in the public schools. The candidates in favor of abolishing the teaching of those branches were elected.

Judge C. B. Grant of Detroit, Mich., called a meeting of saloon-keepers Wednesday and read to them the liquor laws. He told them the acts were passed to be obeyed in his district, and said offenders would be dealt with strictly in accordance with the letter.

It is expected that 3,000 employes will walk out of the breweries in Milwaukee, Wis., because of a circular to be issued to them, informing them their union will not longer be recognized, because it has broken its agreement with the breweries.

The statue of the Puritan, erected at Springfield, Mass., in honor of Deacon Samuel Chapin, was dedicated Thanksgiving Day with simple ceremonies.

The trial of Johann Most was begun Wednesday at New York, and the State rested after proving that Most made a threatening speech, concluding with the words, "I am an anarchist! Rise, anarchy! Long may it live!" A reporter testified that he "did not take notes at the meeting because he did not want to be carried out dead."

One hundred and fifty-three inmates of the Soldiers' Home at Bath, near Buffalo, N. Y., have been indicted for voting at the last election.

Prohibition in Atlanta and Fulton county, Ga., was defeated by a small majority Saturday.

Engineer Markham and his fireman were attacked by a panther Sunday morning between Artell and Minden on the Burlington and Missouri Road. The men had left the locomotive to repair a wheel, when the animal sprang upon them and severely lacerated both before being dispatched with a bullet. The animal measured six feet and weighed over 200 pounds.

Fire last week Monday at Mound City, Ill., destroyed thirty-five buildings, including two hotels, the Mayor's residence, the Patrial office and three dry goods stores. A negro has been arrested for causing the conflagration by setting fire to an unoccupied hotel.

Reports of forest and prairie fires came from all directions in the South and Southwest early last week with accounts of great destruction of property. The bottom lands of the Okawa and the Big Muddy rivers in Southwestern Illinois and the prairies in many parts of the same section of the State were ablaze, and outhouses, fences, farming machinery, outstanding crops and whole forests and in some cases residences were destroyed. In Southeastern Missouri and in Arkansas, between the Iron Mountain Railway and and the Mississippi river the swamps and lowlands were almost burned out, and the whole country was so filled with smoke that the people were almost stifled. As far west as Hot Springs fires devastated farms and burned residences, barns and fences; and the little town of Mayflower, in Franklin county, barely escaped total destruction. On the east side of the Mississippi river, in Washington and Bolivar counties, Mississippi, nineteen cotton gins, besides much other valuable property, has been destroyed.

To the great relief of the people of Southern Illinois, a heavy rainfall set in throughout that region Wednesday.

Henry Lockwood and wife, residing near Marion, Ind., left their three children, the youngest 18 months and the oldest 8 years, in the house alone Saturday night. When the parents returned Sunday the babe was frozen to death and the others were frost bitten.

A bloody fight took place Sunday between whites and blacks at Jellico, Ky., in which three men were killed and a number wounded. Whisky was the cause of the fight, but the combatants, having tasted blood, are eager for another fight, and last Monday the little town was full of armed men.

A panic prevails at Bellaire, Ohio, owing to the prevalence of incendiary fires. Five buildings were fired during the past week and the hose of the department was cut while extinguishing one of the blazes, practically crippling it for the present.

The trains due in Pueblo, Colo., Saturday night were blockaded by heavy snow drifts near Dodge City, Kan. The storm was very severe in that vicinity, and many telegraph poles were broken down by the wind.

While playing on the ice on Rock Creek, Morrison, Ill., Saturday, three children—Georgie, Charlie and Lillie White — were drowned. Charlie, the youngest of the three, broke through the ice with his sled, and in attempting to rescue him Georgie and Lillie both went down. All three were dead when taken from the water an hour and a half later.

The town of Doniphan, fourteen miles north of Hastings, Neb., was partly wiped out by fire Saturday morning. It is claimed that burglars entered the Post-office, blew the safe open, and to cover the robbery fired the building. Seven brick buildings were burned to the ground.

In a collision of Baltimore and Ohio freight trains near Cochrane's Mills, Pa., Friday forenoon, three men were killed and five others wounded, two of whom may not survive. Both trains were completely wrecked.

A New Orleans special of Wednesday says: The striking sugar hands at Thibedeaux, La, about five o'clock this morning fired upon the white pickets who were guarding the place. The white men returned the fire and a brisk battle ensued, in which twenty-five negroes are said to have been killed and two white men wounded. Additional troops will probably be sent to the scene at once.

The negro Hudson, who caused the destructive fire at Mound City, Ill., last Monday, has implicated Mrs. Lawler, a former landlady of the house in which the fire started, stating that she gave him $15 to set the fire. Mrs. Lawler, who denies the negro's story, has been placed under arrest.

At a crossing at West Newton, Mass., Thursday, a team attached to a carriage was run down by a train. William and Charles Hannon were killed, Joseph Burke was fatally injured, and Patrick D. Gorman was badly bruised. The horses had to be shot.

FOREIGN.

The German Reichstag was opened in Berlin November 24 Minister Von Boetticher read the speech from the throne. The National Gazette, commenting on the speech, says it hopes that the effects of the peaceful policy, of which the message treats, may be multiplied as the session proceeds and that more explicit statements made in the Reichstag regarding Germany's foreign relations may establish the fact that the European situation is growing clearer. The Reichstag sent a brief message of respect and sympathy to the Crown Prince.

A Bogota (United States of Colombia) paper states that thousands of Colombians in certain districts are annually stolen and sold into slavery of the vilest character, and that sometimes combats take place among the kidnappers and the natives in which hundreds are slain and their bodies left unburied.

The peace arbitration delegates, who have returned to London, speak highly of their reception in America and express themselves as hopeful of good results from their visit. They say they found the old jealousies giving way to a generous interest in English affairs.

A mysterious disease is said to be claiming many victims at Posoya, in Chili. The victims are first taken with pains in the stomach, followed by a flow of blood from the mouth, and sometimes from the eyes and ears.

THE CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE,

The CYNOSURE represents the Christian movement against the Secret Lodge System; discusses fairly and fearlessly the various movements of the lodge as they appear to public view, and reveals the secret machinery of corruption in politics, courts, and social and religious circles.
There are in the United States
Some 200 different Lodges,
With 2,000 000 members,
Costing $20,000,000 yearly.
This mighty world power confronts the church and seeks to rule and ruin every Christian Reform.
No Christian Reform Movement of the day is so necessary, yet so unpopular and beset with difficulties, as that which would remove the dark pall of oaths, dark-lantern meetings, secret signs, mysterious and pagan worship about altars condemned by the Word of the Living God.
No other paper gives the best of its correspondence and editorial strength to this vitally important reform. The CYNOSURE should be your paper in addition to any other you may take.
Because it is the representative of the reform against the Lodge, with ablest arguments, biographical and historical sketches, letters from lecturers, seceders and sufferers from lodge persecution. The ablest writers on this subject from all denominations and all parts of the country contribute. Special departments for letters from our metropolitan centers, on the relation of secret orders to current events.
The CYNOSURE began its twentieth volume September 22, 1887, with features of special and popular interest.
TERMS: $2.00 per year; strictly in advance, $1.50. Special terms to clubs. Send for sample copy.

FIFTEEN SHARES TAKEN.

Let it be always remembered that the fund for the 1,000 copies of the Cynosure to colored pastors is being raised for the best of reasons. No other investment has produced so great and beneficent results, as:

1. The Good Will Association of Baptist churches at Mobile.

2. The resolution of the St. Marion Baptist Association, Arkansas, to rid their churches of secretism.

3. The vote against the lodges by the Louisiana State Baptist Convention.

4. The leavening of the Texas Baptist Convention.

5. The founding of schools at Memphis and New Iberia, which are opposed to secretism.

Other strong reasons might be added, which show that the N. C. A. has probably not before offered so good an investment for the donations of the friends of reform.

We are glad to report this week that fifteen shares of $15 each have been taken for this fund. The good sense of the Cynosure readers appreciates such facts, and they are ready to respond. A thousand copies of the paper to as many colored pastors, would be the best New Year's gift of the season. Let the good word go around, and all who can contribute less or more, send on to the N. C. A. Treasurer at the earliest opportunity. Such a gift will return a thousand fold into the bosom of the giver.

At a meeting of Republicans in Detroit last week, Senator Palmer of Michigan created a great sensation by announcing his conviction that the party was ready by a strong majority to adopt State prohibition, and in six years would adopt it as a national issne. His colleague, Stockbridge, agrees with him, and so do other Michigan Congressmen. Senator Palmer is an influential man in his party and his views are of the highest importance.

The celebrated Freemason, Captain Howgate, whose plundering of government funds a few years since is well remembered, has so far kept in hiding, and his bondsmen have been called on to settle. Howgate stole $133,700, but his bail was very Masonically and ridiculously small—only $12,000. Let the people charge this matter up against the Masonic lodge against the day wheu we must reckon with it.

The lodges cannot forgive Dr. Pentecost for rebuking them at Amesbury. Our readers have noted a former comment on this subject, and will read at more length from Dr. Pentecost himself on the third page of this number. From Amesbury he went to Augusta, Maine, the home of Mr. Blaine, who, though not a Freemason, has never cared to tell his supporters why he refrains from taking a step so popular among politicians. But in Augusta an outcry is raised that Mr. Pentecost is making too much money for a revivalist. This is very like a lodge howl. Freemasonry, which is robbing the Christian church on every hand of means, reputation, virtue and religion, could find no other charge to bring, doubtless,—like a pickpocket raising a cry of "Stop thief," in the streets. The Tompkins Avenue church in Brooklyn paid Dr. Pentecost $8,000 yearly. He resigned such a place for revival work where he may get one-third that amount.

Michigan, Tennessee, Texas, Oregon—in all, the prohibitory amendment has been defeated, but in in Washington we have a victory that makes good our loss. When Judge Harlan arose in the Supreme Court on Monday and read a long, elaborate and practically unanimous opinion sustaining the judgment of the Kansas courts, it was an hour for the land to sing Hallelujah. The constitutionality of the Kansas law is thus affirmed, and the decision against compensating liquor dealers and manufacturers for property rendered worthless by the police laws of a State is made the law of the land. This is a VICTORY. It will not greatly effect Kansas for liquordom was not worth much in that State, but for Illinois, Kentucky, Tennessee, and many other States, where tens of millions are invested in the traffic it is of utmost importance. A contrary decision would have burdened the prohibitory movement and crushed it down to earth. The Supreme Court has been reported as evenly divided on this question, and the result is, therefore, more glorious. Praise the Lord!

The Flea, the Mosquito, the Scandal, Lucifer, John the Baker, the Liar, the Green Bird, the Perfume, the Syringe, the Piston are the names of some of the Mexican papers translated, given by a missionary of the American Board in that country to a friend in this city. The case of a prominent Catholic organ is also mentioned, which professes to be published to give instruction in religion; but its columns are so filled with news of bull-fights, theaters, and such like amusements, that scarce a corner is left for the Catholic church proper. We have in this slight view a striking revelation of a demoralized people. With the priests to control the lower classes and the lodge the higher, the condition of Mexico cannot be regarded as any better than the Moslem nations.

By adopting Mr. Sankey as his helper in gospel work fifteen years ago, Mr. Moody married the singer with the exhorter in revival work, and the bond has seemed to be inseparable. The names of Bliss, Sankey, McGranahan, Herald, Excell, Towner, are as well known as Moody, Whittle, Munhall, Pentecost, Jones or Needham; and the style of their music, yielding to a popular taste instead of leading it, has swung to an extreme over against the rather severe and unadorned tunes of years ago. But in the meeting begun the other day in Pittsburgh, Mr. Moody found a new condition of things, and, accepting it, is as successful as ever. The Psalm-singing people of Pittsburgh are so numerous that their convictions have to be respected, and for the first time, at least in this country, a successful use of the Psalms in meter has been attempted in a revival service. It is pleasant to note this mark of reaction. Let it spread to other cities.

Cardinal Gibbons of Baltimore, in a late North American Review, covertly assailed the public school system, linking it with Mormonism and ballot-box stuffing, as containing a danger that should be guarded against. Mr. Jeremiah Quin, for years principal of one of the schools of Chicago, and a Catholic, replies in the December Review. Though respectful to his Cardinal he dissents from his views, but would have the school entirely secular. As this is the pretended reason for Catholic objection it puts the school system between the mill-stones. But it is left for Bishop Cleary of Kingston, Canada, to introduce the latest argument against the common school. In a public address at Napanee he delivered himself in these words: "Modesty is not one of the things taught in our public schools. On the contrary, girls at these schools learn to be boisterous, immodest, screaming, kicking creatures, such as were never seen among Pagans. Our public schools are destroyers of modesty, an abomination, and a disgrace. All female modesty is destroyed in the girls that attend them, and they become rude, screeching females, who kick their heels, flirt their skirts, and stare into the faces of men with a boldness that must bring the blush of shame to the cheek of any modest man." Orangemen and all have joined in a general shout of indignation, and the Bishop will probably be instructed by Cardinal Taschereau to explain that he meant something else by what he said. It is too late, however, for him to explain away the fact that the Romish church is unalterably hostile to the public school system, and will use every means to destroy it.

WHO SLEW ALL THESE?

THE RESPONSIBILITY OF THE LOUISIANA MASSACRE.

BY REV. H. H. HINMAN.

The recent (Nov. 22nd) shooting of twenty-seven men at Thibodeaux, Louisiana, in which two white men were wounded and twenty-five Negroes killed, constitutes one of the bloodiest dramas this unhappy region has seen since the great civil war. No class of laborers has been more quiet, peaceable and patient than the Negroes of the sugar plantations. Heretofore their relations to their employers have, on the whole, been not unsatisfactory. It is true the wages paid were small, from 75 cents to $1.25 per day, with nsually free rent of a small house and vegetable garden. This is more than the average of the wages paid in the South. Considering the disabilities of the average sugar planter, it is not unreasonably small.

Until the present season the relation of employers and employes has been peaceful. During the past year the Knights of Labor organized bodies of these laborers. In all cases the headquarters have been in New Orleans, and the controlling influences the white Knights of that city. In the height of the sugar season strikes were ordered at Terre Bonne and other places. Riots ensued. Laborers were shot and strikers evicted; troops were called out and more Negroes were shot. At last it was supposed that the trouble was ended, and the troops were sent home.

About November 15th I was in the vicinity of Thibodeaux. The work of cutting and grinding cane was going on, but great numbers of the colored people were idle. Their labor was in demand, and when asked why they did not go to work they said they were afraid. Many were living in churches and some were without any shelter. Threats were made of the destruction of property, and a home guard was organized. According to report this guard was, on the 22nd, fired into by colored strikers, and two men were wounded. They returned fire and killed twenty-five of their assailants. It is quite probable that many others were wounded, and that inconceivable misery was inflicted on this poor people. The responsibility for this great calamity rests not on the colored people. Their most intelligent and upright representatives greatly deplore the conflict, and have no sympathy with those who ordered the strike. Rev. Daniel Clay, son of the great Henry Clay, who has spent many years in the immediate neighborhood of this sad affair, and is thoroughly familiar with the previous and present condition of the people, greatly deplores the organization of the Knights of Labor as one of the worst calamities of his people.

Nor are the colored strikers the ones who are mostly to blame. They have suffered themselves to be deceived by false promises. They have been made to believe that they could secure their demands, and that in the meantime they would be guaranteed a support. Their passions have been appealed to, and a race conflict has been excited. Not they, but their seducers and deceivers are mainly to blame. On the order of the Knights of Labor and its kindred systems of darkness rests the guilt of all this blood. It is not by race antagonism that the rights of the Negro are to be vindicated. The colored laborer has no greater enemy than the man who encourages him in deeds of intimidation and violence. Deplorable as is the condition of many of these people, and appealing as it does to the moral sensibilities of all who regard the welfare of humanity, yet the remedy is to be found in cultivating peaceful relations; in maintaining the supremacy of the civil law, and avoiding all things which are likely to occasion strife.

NATIONAL REFORM.

BY REV. J. M. FOSTER.

The National Reform Association was organized in 1864. The president is Hon. Felix R. Brunot of Pittsburgh. Among the vice-presidents are such men as Joseph Cook, Boston Monday lecturer; Rev. Dr. Seeley, president of Amherst College; Dr. Scovel, president of Wooster University; Dr. Payne, president of Wesleyan University, Delaware, Ohio; Dr. Blanchard, late president of Wheaton College; Judge Hagans, Cincinnati; Dr. Herrick Johnson, Chicago, and Dr. T. D. Cuyler, Brooklyn. Rev. T. P. Stevenson, D. D., editor of the Christian Statesman, Philadelphia, is corresponding secretary; Rev. D. McAllister, L.L.D., of Pittsburgh, is treasurer. The Association has four district secretaries in the field who give all their time to the work, Revs. Mills, Gault, Weir and Foster, and four who give one-fourth time, Revs. Coleman, Wylie, Leiper and Johnston. These men go from place to place, holding meetings, preaching in the several churches, addressing colleges and theological seminaries, and writing articles for the press, and so awaken the public conscience to the necessity of moral reformation.

The work at present is agitation in the lines of Sabbath reform, reform in our Divorce Legislation, Temperance reformation, etc. The object of the Association is to conserve the Christian features of this government and place our nation in its proper relation to the authority and law of God. It is assumed that this is a Christian nation—Christian in origin, history and life.

The Pilgrim Fathers before landing on Plymouth Rock, while in the cabin of the Mayflower, drafted a constitution of government. That constitution began, "In the name of God, Amen. For the glory of God and the maintenance of the Christian faith," etc. All the colonial charters and compacts recognized Almighty God and the supremacy of his law in civil affairs. In the Declaration of Independence there is a distinct acknowledment of a superintending Providence in national matters. In thirty-four out of thirty-eight State constitutions there is a clear and explicit acknowledgment of the Higher Powers in government. In all the inaugural addresses of our Presidents, save one, there is a recognition of the obligation of all nations in general, and of ours in particular, to the Governor among the nations. And then the chaplaincies in our armies and navies in the Congressional and Legislative Halls, the Bible in our public schools and reformatory institutions, the oath in our courts of justice, the oath administered to civil officers, the laws making blasphemy and profanity punishable offences, the laws protecting the Christian Sabbath, the laws guarding the ordinance of Christian marriage, etc., these are but the details of the great leading fact that Christianity is the common law in the land; in other words, this is a Christian nation.

Writers distinguish between a nation and its government. The nation is the creature of God, born in his Providence, and responsible to him for its character and conduct. Now, our proposition is, A Christian nation ought to have a Christian government.

1. Because the authority of the state comes from God. There are only two theories respecting civil government: the infidel theory, viz., that the state is only a wise human institution; and the Christian theory, viz., that it is an ordinance of God. The first is usually based upon the social compact. This idea was conceived in the mind of the atheist, Hobbes of Malmsbury. Denying the existence of any fixed standard of right, and consequently that there is any such thing as virtue or vice, this speculative philosopher resolved all laws into one, the will of the legislature. In our Constitution it takes a little different form, the will of the people. The second is the true theory. The state is a divine institution. It is that settled order of things that is manifestly in harmony with the divine will. It has its necessity in man's nature, for "man is a political being," and its authority in God's Word, "The powers that be are ordained of God." It is clothed with authority and powers which transcend all human institutions, and so becomes the heaven-ordained and heaven-commissioned agent representing the divine authority among men. In the 82nd Psalm rulers are called gods, i. e., they represent God in the world. In the 13th chapter of Romans rulers are called God's ministers; they act in his name and by his authority. The state is the arm of Jehovah administering the affairs of the divine government among the nations of earth. It is, therefore, evident that obedience to just and legal authority is obedience not to man but to God. Rebellion against just and legal authority is rebellion not against man but against God. Patriotism is not a mere sentiment, but a duty to God. Rebellion is not a mere mistaken political sentiment but a resisting the authority of God. "And they that resist shall receive condemnation to themselves."

2. Because the laws of the state come from God. The phrase of Hooker is too sublime ever to become trite, "Law has its seat in the bosom of God and its voice in the harmony of the world." There were two thoughts that filled the mind of Kant with ever-increasing admiration and delight, "the starry heavens above us and God's law within us." Blackstone says, "Any law that contravenes a known law of God is no law at all." All laws come from God, say the wisest of the Grecian and Roman sages, Cicero, Seneca and others. Minos, the law-giver of Crete, claimed to be the son of Jupiter and to have received his laws from his reputed father. Lycurgus, the lawgiver of Crete, claimed as authority for the laws which he gave the oracle at Delphi the god Apollo; and Numa claimed as authority for his laws the nymph Egeria. The Emperor of China is looked upon as the vice-gerent of heaven. Every year he observes a three-days' fast in seclusion. Then coming forth in his royal robes he marches with bands and banners to the temple, and while the sacrifice is being offered, he rolls himself in the dust and utters words most disparaging to himself but most honoring to God, indicating that as the head of the nation he recognizes his responsibility to the God of heaven. Yonder in Thibet the Grand Lama is the incarnation of deity. In this capacity he dispenses civil offices by consecration just as the Pope of Rome did in Europe for several centuries. These facts clearly indicate that there is an ineradicable conviction in the human soul that laws will not bind the conscience unless they be derived from God. There is a deep philosophy underlying politics. Though the fact is so often lost sight of, civil government is under law to God as immutable as the laws of gravitation.

3. Because the nation is a moral person responsible to God for its character and conduct. A nation is not like a cup of sand held together by external pressure. It is an organism. It has a unity and a continuity running through the generations. It has reason, will and conscience. It contracts debts and may not repudiate. Milton says, "A nation ought to be one huge Christian personage, as big and compact in virtue as in body." A nation has a life and is sensitive as the most wary man. Touch a single member of a nation and all is commotion. Think of the thrill our nation experienced when Sumter was fired upon! A nation has a soul. "What I admire most in a nation is its soul," says Hyacinthe. Moral principles constitute the soul of a nation and so long as they are preserved the nation will live, for "the eternal years of God are hers." What is more common in Scriptures than "ungodly nation," "hypocritical nation," "wicked nation," and "holy nation," "righteous nation," "godly nation." The lesson of history is that righteousness in national character and uprightness in national conduct secured the divine blessing; but wickedness in national character and life made her obnoxious to the divine judgments.

The National Reform Association is calling this nation to a recognition of God as Sovereign, Christ as King and the Bible as the supreme law, in her national charter.

OUR EVER PRESENT HELP.

BY ANNA HOLYOKE HOWARD.

"Our help is in the name of the Lord." Psalm 124: 8.

We look to thee, most gracious Lord,
With prayerful, steadfast eye.
Our trust, dear Lord, is in thy Word;
Oh, hear thy children's cry!

How long, O Lord! How long shall sin
And Satan ride apace?
How long, O Lord! shall evil win,
And triumph in the race?

Arouse thy slumbering church, O Lord,
To hear the groans and cries
That daily, from ten thousand hearts,
In intercession rise.

Direct us, Lord, and send us might,
When Satan's hosts assail.
Thou only canst defend the right;
With thee we must prevail.

ANARCHY AND CHRISTIANITY.

BY D. P. MATHEWS.

At the next Boston municipal election the probability is that the majority of the voters will do just what they have been doing for many years, cast license bombs at mothers, wives and children, the explosion of which is more far-reaching in destruction, both physically and spiritually, than the dynamite of the Chicago anarchists; and yet these same voters, even as they cast their ballots of sorrow and death, will piously express satisfaction that the Chicago monsters, who, in their fanaticism, hesitated not to endanger the lives of innocent people, have received just retribution. Bah! there is more anarchy in the casting of a license vote than the throwing of a dynamite bomb. The nation is safer amid the explosions of the latter, than in the drowning flood of the former.

The average anarchist, I believe, is honest, no matter how deluded he may be. I believe his intentions toward the human race are good,—good as he understands good. He desires to dispel the grievance of the race. His greatest fault is impatience, yet aggravated by capital, we can hardly wonder at this. He has declared war against capital and monopoly, and resorts to tactics which he considers most efficacious. He thinks he fights from principle, and is willing to sacrifice his life. His argument for throwing bombs is this: In destroying a few, millions will be emancipated from the thralldom of capital—millions spared the pangs of slow starvation and abject misery. Many of them have been taught this from their childhood, at their mother's knee. We cannot justly classify them as common murderers. That the press, both secular and religious, that the masses, and even the clergy of every denomination condemn the platform of anarchism, is not a positive argument against the rottenness of every plank. Disagreeable as they may be, facts will not down, and he who tries to smother them is a moral murderer. Before attempting to destroy anything which apparently contains error, we should put it through a process of analyzation, separating its composite elements, labelling error as error, and truth as truth. The prevailing criticism of anarchy, however, is synthetic rather than analytic. Both the good and the bad elements are indiscriminatingly amalgamated and branded as error, in big, burning capitals. To say that the anarchists are altogether in error, altogether a bad lot, is doing just this.

The newspapers, and nearly all ardent temperance advocates assert that anarchy is hatched in the beer saloon. Suppose whisky is a good incubator, is not the process of incubation of less importance than the creation of the embryo egg? Where does the egg come from which is hatched in the whisky hennery? Who lays it? We must go elsewhere than the saloon in order to get a correct reply. A great mistake we Americans are making in condemning, in trying to eradicate an effect rather than the cause. Cause will produce effect as fast as we can destroy it. Nestling among the statutes of this nation are myriads of anarchical eggs which must be smashed, or they will be hatched by our Linggs and Parsons. We have our choice of breaking the eggs or killing the chickens.

The Chicago anarchists simply did in a wrong way what all good people, to some extent, should do in a right way. Water can never rise above its own level. These men were worldlings, and, therefore, while the principle of their ultimatum was, doubtless, good, like a vessel on the waters of their impracticable ideas, it could not rise higher than the tide of their own unregenerate natures. Do I astound you, dear reader, as a correspondent of the Cynosure, when I say there was principle in the bombs flung in the streets of Chicago? But it was principle misplaced—placed in the wrong instrument, that is all. It is impossible that these principles which oppose tyranny, in any form, be not thrown as bombs. They will be thrown so long as oppression exists, either charged with dynamite or pure Christianity and moral legislation. The question simply is, who shall throw them—how shall they be thrown? I am not indorsing the Chicago version of anarchy; even were I disposed to do so, the Cynosure is the last vehicle I would expect to convey to the public such an indorsement. No, I am not indorsing it; I am simply giving it a few impartial glances.

At first glance it certainly appears repulsive; a second, careful scrutiny does not fail to perceive its hideousness, error, passion, and may be worse, yet truth and justice are also seen confined in this horrid environment. I could not be a Parsons anarchist; there is a sword on his hip. I am a Christian, yet, paradoxical as it may seem, I am an anarchist—but in regard to bad law, only; and the sword proceedeth from the mouth, and not the scabbard. Is the Christian under law? Nay, he is free from the law. The law, no matter how good it may be, is for evil doers, only. God is under no moral law. As a child of God, the Christian is under no law. The Spirit of God actuates every thought, every act. He will respect the the law of man so long as it is in harmony with the Spirit of God. He must be anarchical to all else. He has the mind of Christ. The Chicago anarchist set up his own perverted reason as a criterion, and all law, good and bad, whether human or divine, which disagreed, or came in collision therewith, he sought to overthrow. Unlike the Parsons anarchist, the Christian, though free from the law, believes in law as a regulator of the vicious, and a protection for the innocent. Under these considerations, law is indispensible. Although Christianity is in a sense anarchical, it is a glorified anarchy. As such it was anarchical to the laws of Judaism. The Chicago anarchists wished to throw off the dominion of law. Christianity is simply an evolution of the spirit of the law from out its crustaceous envelope into a new condition. Instead of being written on paper or engraved in stone, it has become an element of the heart. The anarchist desires what he is not prepared to receive in his present state.

Christianity is also sanctified communism. Every man in Christ is not to think of his own welfare, but that of his neighbor. Satan is holding an air castle of happiness before these poor souls, tired of human misgovernment, sick of sin and knowing it not. It is Christianity they want. But blind leaders of the blind they are groping in the dark. They need our prayers more than our censures. Convert these same anarchists—these same Spies, Linggs and Parsons, and they would ornament the cause of Christ; these impulsive men, who breathe only destruction, would become the Pauls and Peters of the modern church. They are made of that stock.

Should we for a moment admit that the doctrines of anarchism contain more or less truth, let us not forget that no matter how lofty their sentiments, they can never be a success in this world. Human nature will not permit it. Only the righteous can live without law; only the righteous can do as they please, and please to do right. Only the righteous can be true communists, because only the righteous can love one another as they love themselves. Only the translated righteous can attain that condition of purity where there is "no marrying nor giving in marriage." Though Paul and Christ were anarchists, communists and socialists, they were not of a mundane, sensual kind, but of an heavenly, a divine. What they destroyed they replaced with something better, more lasting—eternal. The happiness sought by the Chicago anarchists was for time and not eternity; that of the Jerusalem anarchists was for both.

And now, dear editors of American journalism, both secular and religious, instead of dipping your pens in the inkstand of hard utterances, which will only the more exasperate, dip them in the ink of love, pity and compassion, that the heaving breasts and throbbing temples of these excited souls may be soothed and quieted. And you, representatives of the Agonizer of Gethsemane, instead of your Sinaitic denunciations, down on your knees and wrestle in prayer for these, your misled brethren—the anarchists.

Boston, Mass.

SECRET SOCIETIES AND THE CHURCH.

A prominent business man in a city where we have been recently holding evangelistic services justified himself to his pastor for not having attended the meetings and cast in his influence with the work by saying that his business crowded him to such an extent that he could spare but one evening in the week, and that he had to give to his "lodge," meaning his Masonic lodge. In the same city is a pastor whose church is associated with the other churches in the work (at least nominally). We had been in the city preaching for two weeks and had never yet met that pastor. When we did meet him we expressed our pleasure at seeing him and remarked that we had missed him from the meetings thus far. He replied: "Yes, I am sorry not to have been present, but the truth is I am engaged upon a book which I am very anxious to finish, and after working hard on it all day I am too tired to come out to the meetings at night. "I am sorry you are so engaged," we replied, "for we need the help of every man and especially of every pastor in this battle. What, may I ask, is the book you are writing?" "It is a historical work on the first introduction of Masonry into this country; a most fascinating and interesting study, I assure you." We were so dumbfounded at this that we hastily expressed our wish that all ministers of the Gospel would abandon that order and devote themselves to the work of the Gospel and to the establishment of the work of Jesus Christ.

We may have spoken unadvisedly with our lips; but with these two examples before us, the one of a leading business man who could not spare time from his lodge to even attend one service of the Gospel meetings, and the other a pastor who could not spare one evening to join with his and other churches in a special work of grace, because he was engaged in writing a history of Masonry, we began to think that there was some incongruity between Masonry and Christianity. No wonder we have found it difficult to arouse great interest among unconverted and careless men in spiritual things, in a town of ten thousand inhabitants where there are four times as many secret societies as there are churches, every one of them to a great extent patronized and supported by professed Christians, both ministers and laymen. "Come out from among them and be ye separate, saith the Lord."—Geo. F. Pentecost in Words and Weapons.

THE ABOLITION OF TITLES.

A "plan of campaign" has been arranged in England looking to the abolition of titles. The movers in this crusade are Radicals, who belong to a farmers alliance. If the reader consider the awful devotion with which the average Englishman loves his lord, it may be seen how hopeless is the task which the farmers have undertaken. There are no lords among farmers. The need of the hour, therefore, is for the mice to bell the cat. The hold caste has secured on the English people will defy the propaganda of any farmer or other sort of non-titularly subjects. The nobility of the three realms are the support of the throne. Through the respect felt for a duke the proper reverence for the crown itself is maintained. Even Gladstone, lover of the people, half democrat, created more lords than any Tory premier of modern times.

Great is the awe of the average Englishman when he is honored with the patronage of his betters. That awe is so marked that we catch it like the cholera. There is a large district in the Eastern States that is now infected with this contagion. There are indications that it will sooner or later devastate Chicago. The Constitution of the United States was supposed to be a perfect prophylactic against this foreign effeteness, but that highly respected organic chart has failed completely in its office. One may therefore expect little from this new movement. Instead of escaping from his own thralldom, the non-titled Britisher has gotten many Americans into the habit of mind which he has now set out to deplore.—Herald.

WHY CHRIST IS NOT RECOGNIZED IN OUR NATIONAL CONSTITUTION.

The opposition to the formal recognition of Christ as "King of Kings, and Lord of Lords," as developed in the popular objection to the acknowledgment of God in our National Constitution is an effect and has its cause in something. The cause may be ascribed to false teaching, or want of proper intelligence, or both. No Bible reader who realizes the nature of Christ's kingly office, power and authority, as therein distinctly taught, ought for a moment to make serious or determined opposition to such acknowledgment of his divine claims, especially in a land where the people are so largely Christian in their religious sentiments. Is is not to be feared that much of this opposition comes from the kingdom of darkness, over which the god of this world holds sway? The devil has entrenched himself in America behind barred doors and in secret conclaves, out of which Christ is excluded, and in whose pagan prayers and heathen worship the very name of Christ is omitted, even to the mutilating of passages of Scripture in their prayers by the omission of that sacred name altogether.

We would like to know if any person ever heard of a secret lodge, by formal resolution, or otherwise, giving expression to its approval of the religious amendment. We never heard of a secret order endorsing the acknowledgment of God in a fundamental national law, the federal Constitution.

Did you, reader? If so, please tell us when and where such an anomalous thing ever happened. Anti-Christ is the name that should be written over the entrance door of every oath-bound secret lodge. The secret chamber is "where Satan's seat is." There he wields despotic sway and sits on the throne of a "kingdom that is full of darkness."

It would be most unreasonable to expect that Satan should share the glory of sovereignty with Christ, his rival. Hence in the dark lantern dens that are dignified with names suggestive of "the sweet charities," and whose officers are bedizened with high-sounding titles of royalty, there is a well-defined, a settled and studious opposition to giving to Christ the honors and titles due to him as King of kings, and Lord of lords.—Sandy Lake News.

LIQUOR ON THE CONGO.

The following memorial has been prepared for presentation to the Fiftieth Congress, at the opening of the session in December next:

To the United States Senate and House of Representatives:

Your memorialists, the Board of Managers of the National Temperance Society, respectfully invite your attention to the great devastation now being caused among the native races of Africa by the introduction among them, by American and other traders, of intoxicating liquors; to the fact that America is estimated to have sent to the West Coast of Africa alone, in 1884–5, an aggregate of 921,412 gallons of spirits; that the wholesale demoralization and ruin thus resulting from strong drink is a great injury to legitimate commerce in our relations with Africa, as well as disastrous to the temporal and spiritual wellbeing of an untutored people, whom philanthropic and Christian men and women of our own country seek to civilize and Christianize; and we hereby earnestly ask you, in the exercise of the authority vested in you by the Constitution of the United States, "to regulate commerce with foreign nations" [Article I, Section 8], promptly to adopt appropriate and effective measures for the discouragement and suppression of this wasteful and destructive African exportation of intoxicating liquors by American citizens.

TRAVELING FREEMASONS were those who left Italy at the revival of art and the development of church building, and spread all over the world, establishing guilds of Freemasons, and erecting those gems of architectural grace and strength on which non-Masonic writers have agreed as to their existence, and asserted their association; but it was not until recently that this truer theory of Masonic history was either realized or welcomed. But when we seek to connect our speculative order with these traveling Masons, who have left their tracks on many a monastery wall and many an enduring stone, we feel that we have still a chasm to pass which it may be doubtful if we shall ever bridge over with certain and incontestable evidence. Still such a view seems to us the most rational and the most historical, inasmuch as their constitutions are ours, their marks are ours, their emblems are ours. But we must not lose sight that the lapse of time has made great changes in any such condition of affairs, and that it is perhaps after all the safest to say, that while the speculative Grand Lodge of 1717 is the continuation of the operative Grand Assembly, the mighty changes from an operative to a speculative Brotherhood has necessitated alterations and additions to the original plan, many and great. Our Freemasonry to-day is an improved version of the improved Freemasonry of the revival of 1717.—Kenning's Masonic Cyclopædia.

Our government is in partnership with the greatest of criminals, and is, therefore, responsible for all the consequences that flow from this criminal combination.

EDUCATIONAL.

—Prof. Henry Drummond, the famous scientist of Edinburgh (Scotland) University, author of "Natural Law in the Spiritual World," is mentioned for the Presidency of Princeton College, to succeed Dr. McCosh.

—At a special meeting of the Board of Regents of the Smithsonian Institution held in Washington last week Prof. S. P. Langley was elected Secretary of the institution, to succeed the late Prof. S. F. Baird.

—There are now over six hundred institutions in this country which call themselves colleges. Of this number there are about three hundred and fifty which have students in the regular college course. Four of these are Universalists, nine Episcopal, fifteen Congregational,thirty-three Presbyterian,thirty-seven Baptist, thirty-seven Roman Catholic, forty-nine Methodist,sixteen Lutheran, six Reformed, and seven United Brethren. Seventy-six are non-denominational,and the remaining are shared by a number of smaller denominations. There are probably not less than 35,000 to 40,000 persons pursuing the college course. Of these at least one-half are not practical Christians and make no pretension to Christianity.

—The trustees of the Peabody Education Fund held their twenty-sixth annual meeting recently in New York. According to the secretary's report the fund amounts to $2,000,000, and the income therefrom $70,000. The income is distributed as follows: Scholarship, $22,800; Normal schools. $13,000; institutes, $11,700; public schools, $13 000; Normal College at Nashville, $9,500. The States now receiving money from the fund are Alabama, Arkansas, Georgia, Louisiana, North Carolina, South Carolina, Tennessee, Texas, Virginia, and West Virginia. Reports show very favorable results. The scholarships are allotted as follows: Alabama, 13; Arkansas, 10; Georgia, 14; Louisiana, 8; North Carolina, 14; South Carolina, 10; Tennessee, 14; Texas, 9; Virginia, 14; West Virginia, 8. The scholarships are $200 each.

—From the annual report of John B. Riley, superintendent of Indian schools, to the Secretary of the Interior,it appears that the aggregate expenditure by the Government for the education of Indian children during the year was $1,095,379, of which $719,833 was expended on account of the government boarding-schools,and $308,299 for the support and education of pupils at contract boarding-schools, most of which are under control of religious denominations, as the chief items. The whole number of Indian children between the ages of 6 and 16 years is 39,821; of this number 14,932, or about 37½ per cent attended school some portion of the year. The proportion of children attending school varies widely at different agencies. Where schools have been established for several years, with accommodations for a considerable proportion of the pupils, the prejudices exhibited by the Indians against education have largely disappeared. A uniform system of text-books and study, and the teaching of English only are recommended.

—At the meeting of the Board of Regents of the Michigan University at Ann Arbor, the other day, President Angell stated that the appropriation by the Legislature for the past two years had amounted to $155,000. Out of 1,406 students, as the president had ascertained, the parents of 502 were farmers; 171, merchants, ninety-three lawyers; eighty-three, physicians; fifty-two, manufacturers; fifty-four, mechanics, and fifty-one clergymen. President Angell estimates that as many as forty-five per cent belonged to the class who gained their living by manual toil. The sons and daughters of the rich, he said, do not form a very large percentage of the whole number. His report closed with grateful mention of the efforts made by the churches for the spiritual culture of the students. It may be added, that the churches will also make "grateful mention" of whatever efforts are known to be made by the University itself for the spiritual culture of its students. This meeting of the Board of Regents was opened with the reading of Scripture and prayer by President Angell.

—The celebration of the twenty-fifth anniversary of the foundation of the Gustavus Adolphus College of St. Peter, Minn., together with the exercises dedicating the new music and business hall, took place Nov. 2 and 3. The city was filled with Scandinavians from all parts of Iowa, Minnesota, Dakota, Kansas, Nebraska, Wisconsin and Illinois. The school was first established at Red Wing., Minn., in 1862, and afterward removed to Carver, from which place it was moved to St. Peter, its present location. From one scholar in 1862, it has now become an institution that numbers 300 students and a faculty of eighteen members. The festivities were attended by thousands and were held in the large Swedish church. The services were opened by Rev. George W. Sandt, of Augustana College, Rock Island, Ill., in an address on "The Guardian of Liberty." In the evening Rev. C. A. Evald, pastor of the Emmanual church, Chicago, delivered a long address in the Swedish language. A chorus of nearly a hundred voices, under the direction of Prof. Norman, of Boston, furnished the music. Addresses by Gov. McGill, Secretary of State Mattson, and Congressman Lind, of Minnesota, were heard on the second day.

A middle-aged man once came before the examining committee of the church of which I was pastor, with this strange experience. He had wandered away from God, despised religion, hated the church, and thrown away his Bible. For years he had not been to church. In the very worst of this period of wandering he chanced to visit his father's brother, a grand old Christian. On the morning after his arrival, out of polite deference to the family, he stayed in the room during family worship. When his uncle began to read the chapter, the tone of voice called back, through its remarkable resemblance, his own father's voice. It was even more marked during the prayer. The godless man seemed to be again kneeling at prayer—as a child in his own home, with father, mother, brothers and sisters on their knees beside him. After leaving his uncle's roof, that voice remained sounding in his memory. Ultimately it was the direct means of his conversion.—S. Winchester Adriance in Am. Magazine.

Nothing is doing more to spoil the holy song service of the sanctuary than the pretentious choir music so common in our churches to-day. This is not only so in the large cities where the congregations have come to accept the service of the choirs (many of whom are utterly godless) to do their praising for them; but we have been pained to find it a growing curse in the country churches. The people do not sing if there are quartette choirs. Any method of worship that tends to stop the voluntary impulse to holy experimental song on the part of the worshipers is a stumbling-block in the way of spiritual life. —Geo. F. Pentecost in Words and Weapons.

REFORM NEWS.

FROM MISSISSIPPI COUNTRY.

A Y. M. C. A. WRONGLY NAMED.—ENDORSEMENT OF THE AMERICAN MISSIONARY AGENT.

MERIDIAN, Miss., Nov. 29, 1887.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—My Thanksgiving was at Jackson, Miss. This familiar and time-honored festival has gotten only a precarious foothold among the masses of the people of the South. Nevertheless it is one of the coming institutions. Like the free public school system,society will ere long cheerfully accept it. I attended services in the Congregational church and heard an excellent sermon by Pastor Harris, after which I was asked to make remarks. At night I preached in the A. M. E. church and expected a full house. There were a few present, including all of the colored ministers. The rest of the people were at the circus, which was in progress and had greater attractions than a Gospel sermon.

Jackson is under local option, and the law seems well enforced so far as sales are concerned, but there seems to be a considerable jug trade from other towns. One firm offers to send to Jackson whisky, beer or wine without charge for jugs. The best class of the people,both white and colored, sustain the law. A leading business man said that trade had increased since the law came in force, and the Sword and Shield enumerates several enterprises begun since the law took effect. It says "If this is ruin, we want more of it."

I went into the rooms of the Y. M. C. A. where I found an elderly man in charge of the reading room. He said it was but little patronized. I found on the table a paper in the whisky interest,and strongly denunciatory of prohibition and the Supreme Court. I inferred that the Y. M. C. A. allowed a good deal of latitude in the reading it provided, and so I introduced the Cynosure and briefly explained its character and objects. When I asked if they would like to have it sent to them, I was told by the man in charge that he thought it would be very distasteful. He was a Mason and so were most of their friends. As to the paper, it was "full of falsehoods." He could "see them on every page. I asked him to point out one. He did not, but said Masonry bound its members to the purest and highest morality and that no one could be a Mason unless he was a good Christian. After listening to a good deal of similar talk I remembered the admonition about "casting pearls," etc., and left.

I went out to Jackson College,the excellent school established by the Baptist Home Missionary Society. In the fine new building I found more than two hundred students under the care of Pres. Ayers, assisted by eight teachers. There is no primary department and the course of instruction seems largely one of Biblical study. There is certainly here a fine body of young men and women. By invitation I addressed them on the secret lodge system, and was followed by able remarks from the president, giving his experience and judgment of the matter. He has been a lifelong Anti-mason,and was chosen to preach the funeral sermon of Elder J. D. Stearns.

Friday night I went to Tougaloo University,seven miles north of Jackson. I was most kindly received and entertained. This is one of the most flourishing schools of the American Missionary Association, and was never so prosperous as now. It is a little world by itself. Its four large buildings with one or two separate dwellings constitute with their occupants the entire community. The workshops and the large farm give employment and industrial education to all the young men. The management of the farm is in the hands of Prof. Bishop, who is an enthusiast in his profession of practical and scientific farming. Perhaps there is nothing that the colored young men of the South need to know more than this. One of the things he has demonstrated is the practicability of the dairy business in this State. This he has done by improved breeds of cattle and utilizing the Southern grasses. Pres. Woodworth, who takes the place of Pres. Pope (now transferred to the mountain work in Tennessee) was a number of years a Congregational pastor in Connecticut and seems well fitted for his work.

On Saturday night I was invited to address the students on the secret society question and had an excellent hearing. My remarks were heartily endorsed by the president,and also by Secretary Baird of the A. M. A., who, together with Superintendent Ryder, was on a visit to the institution. They both gave able and timely addresses on Sabbath afternoon and evening.

On Monday morning I left for Jackson and at 6 P. M. started for Meridian reaching here 10 P. M. This is one of the most flourishing towns in the State, and is having a season of unusual prosperity. Next spring they vote on local option and feel confident of carrying it in the county. I have been too unwell since I came here to do any reform work,but am sure that there is both occasion and opportunity.

H. H. HINMAN.

THE CAUSE PROSPERS IN IOWA.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—After Bro. Coe left me I went to Washington and spent a little time in canvassing for the Cynosure, and for subscriptions to the State work. Rev. J. N. Laughead, Hugh McClausland, W. A. Stewart, and others, gave subscriptions and donations.

Leaving Washington I returned to Salem in time to attend the Salem Quarterly Meeting of the Friends' church. I preached at the select meeting for ministers, elders and overseers on Friday; and at 11 A. M. on the Sabbath; and with others spoke again in the evening. At this quarterly meeting I was invited to preach and lecture at the preparative and monthly meetings of the Salem Quarterly Meeting. A plan of appointments was arranged and published in pursuance of which I went first to West Grove, where I preached and lectured. I next preached and lectured at Oak Ridge. Here, as at West Grove, there was a good audience of attentive listeners. The clerk and moderator of the quarterly meeting were present and seemed deeply interested. When it became apparent that my purpose was to demonstrate that the worship of the Masonic lodge is false and Satanic, a Mason present seemed deeply exercised.

"Will you tell us what god the Masons pray to?" he cried.

"I will make that clear as I proceed," I replied. I then called attention to the fact that Satan is the god of this world. That as the dogs under the table eat what is rejected by the children, so Satan receives the worship that is rejected by the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ. I showed that in the ritual of Freemasonry there is a studied rejection of our Lord Jesus Christ, as the one Mediator between God and men;that in rejecting Christ,the one only way to God, they had cut themselves off from access to the Father. The being, then, whom they really had access to was Satan, who receives all false worship. The conclusion was irresistible, that the devil is the being really worshiped in the lodge. This conclusion was confirmed by a reference to the fact that the prophets of the Old Testament declare the false worship of their times to have been devil worship; and the Apostle Paul affirms that the false worshipers of his day worshiped devils. Moreover, Paul teaches that those who worship devils come into fellowship with devils.

Does any one think that one who is in fellowship with devils, is also in fellowship with the Father and with Jesus Christ? Does not reason, as well as revelation, teach that "ye cannot drink the cup of the Lord and the cup of devils?" that "ye cannot be a partaker of the Lord's table and the table of devils?"

After the congregation was dismissed, my Masonic friend, who had desired to know what god the lodge worshiped, called the congregation to order and told them they could get all the Masonry the lecturer had, at any bookstore for 25 cents. I immediately called the attention of the congregation to the fact that last winter I saw a circular at Winfield that had been sent out by a Masonic publishing house, intended only for the eyes of craftsmen, in which the fact was deplored that many Masons were using the exposes of Masonry that were in the hands of those who are not Masons, to post themselves so as to become bright Masons—fit to officer a lodge; and the circular further said that in many lodges they were working Masonry by these books that are in the hands of Anti-masons; and the craft was warned that if they continued to work Masonry in the lodge by the books that are in the hands of the Anti-masons, it would eventually, when the fact became known, work the destruction of the order. Now, said I, if our Masonic friend desires to build up and perpetuate Masonry, he is unwise in calling attention to these books; for it will lead young Masons to purchase them, and finding that they contain Masonry just as they received it in the lodge, they will study the books so as to become bright Masons;and when elected to office in the lodge they will work Masonry by Ronayne's and Doesburg's exposes, the very thing that according to the Masonic circular referred to will eventually work the destruction of the order.

The meeting closed as the one at West Grove had done before, with the truth triumphant. There can be no concord between Christ and Belial. Why, then, should those who persist in the worship of devils in the lodge, be retained in the fellowship of the church? It is an abomination in the sight of God for a church to go into partnership with the lodge, as the M. E. church did here in Salem. They jointly built a house of worship; the lower story to be used by the church for the worship of God, and the upper story to be used as a lodge room by the Masons. Surely these dear brethren would not have gone into partnership with the lodge if they had understood the real nature of its worship. May we not address them in love, as the Apostle did the Jews? "Brethren, I wot that through ignorance ye did it."

A PHOTOGRAPH OF GOOD TEMPLARISM.

After the lecture at Oak Ridge, I went to Chestnut Hill, and preached in the Friends' meetinghouse at 11 A. M. on the Sabbath. From Chestnut Hill I went to Pilot Grove, and preached in the Baptist church at 7 P. M. of the same Sabbath. On Monday night I lectured on the Religious Character of the Secret Lodge System, in the Baptist church of Pilot Grove.

The pastor of the M. E. church, who is not a member of any secret society, was present. In showing Freemasonry to be a Satanic conspiracy to supplant Christ, and subvert Christianity by substituting deistical infidelity, I spoke of the taking of Christ's name out of the Scripture readings, in the Royal Arch work. At the conclusion of my lecture, the M. E. pastor announced that he would, at some future time, preach a sermon on secret societies,and intimated that he might differ with me on some points; but, referring to the high-handed outrage committed by Royal Arch Masonry in expunging the name of Christ from their Scriptural readings, he said, "Cursed be the order that will take away the name of Christ from the Word of God." Surely a more high-handed insult was never offered to the God of the Bible. There was a good attendance and excellent order and attention both to the sermon and lecture delivered at Pilot Grove.

On Tuesday I returned to Chestnut Hill and lectured there in the evening. One young man was so interested that he expressed the desire that I would give them a series of lectures on the lodge system. The next night I lectured in the Friends' meeting house in Salem. A Mason who was present seemed deeply exercised in spirit while I unfolded the pagan-infidel character of the religion of Freemasonry.

From Salem I went to the Valley meeting house and preached one night. They had once a flourishing Friends' meeting here; but by removals and other causes it has fallen into decay and been "laid down." At this meeting I met Charles McMillan, also Jonathan Frazier, who in other days has been active in the Gospel ministry. Before his eyes were opened to perceive the danger to be apprehended from the secret society system, his zeal for temperance led him to nnite with secret temperance orders. He first joined the Sons of Temperance and continued a zealons member nntil the lodge room was used for card-playing, when he became disgusted and left that order. But when a Good Templar lodge was organized, hoping thereby to promote the cause of temperance, he joined that order. Finding that they were accomplishing but little real temperance work, he proposed that they hold some open meetings. His suggestion was followed,and by this Scriptural and rational method they succeeded in arousing the community and received large accessions to their lodge membership. The trnth had so taken hold upon their consciences in the open meetings that many of them came to the lodge as sinners would go to an inquiry room, deeply impressed with their sinful and lost condition; bnt there, instead of being pointed to Christ and prayed with as penitents, they were simply initiated as Good Templars. The result was disastrous. Not being joined to Christ by faith, and saved by grace, there was no permanent reformation. The "un-reconstructed" drinkers, being in the majority, elected officers of their own kind and thus gained control of the lodge. The result was a resolution was passed to appropriate the money that had accumulated in the treasnry from the former rapid accession of members to the purchase of intoxicating liquors to be drunk by the lodge.

Again Jonathan became disgusted and left the lodge. Since then he has become convinced that in a free government like ours good objects can be better promoted by open than by secret methods, and hence it is wrong for good men for the promotion of good objects to adopt those methods that are only necessary to be adopted by bad men for the promotion of unlawful objects. It is a pity that other men, who have not had the experience of my friend shonld not have acquired the same good sense in some other school.

From the Grand Valley I returned to Salem,where James Comer, B. Binford and S. B. McMillan gave subscriptions to the Iowa Association. The Sabbath following I preached at 11 A. M. at the Cedar Creek Friends' meeting house. On Saturday night I was entertained by Alfred Trueblood, the clerk of the Salem Quarterly Meeting.

Sabbath night I preached in the Friends' church at Oak Ridge. Here, as also at the Valley meeting house, the desire was expressed that I should tarry and hold a series of Gospel meetings with them. But the next morning I took my departure and turned my face towards Chicago to be present, according to the appointment of the State Convention, at the coming conference of Prohibitionists.

Within a short time past I have been enabled to send in twenty new subscriptions to the Cynosure.

CORRESPONDENCE.

DR. MINER AND THE ANARCHISTS.

BOSTON, Dec. 2, 1887.

EDITOR OF THE CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE:—In your issue of Nov. 24, your Boston correspondent, unintentionally, no doubt, does me no small measure of injustice. My topic was "The Manufacture of Anarchists." I did not discuss the justice or injustice of the fate of the anarchists of Chicago, and of course did not express agreement in opinion with Parsons. I did not undertake to determine the limit of injustice, where revolution becomes justifiable, if it does so at any point. I did show that the very essence of anarchism is often wrought into law. This is true wherever injustice, tyranny and corruption are embodied in law. Against such law it is not strange that there should be outbreaks. I expressly guarded my hearers, however, against assuming that I was speaking of the Chicago anarchists.

In my allusions to St. Paul at Ephesus, I denied that St. Paul was an anarchist or the cause of anarchy; he was but the occasion. The real source of the anarchy was the superstition of the Ephesians who worshiped the goddess Diana, and the iniqnitous gains of Demetrius and his fellow craftsmen whose traffic was based on that superstition. Panl simply hurled at those errors and iniquities the truth that "they be no gods which are made with hands"—a very different thing from throwing bombs. The statement that "many made hasty retreat," is not true. Three persons, and no more, went out. One was a deacon of the chnrch, who was ill, his wife accompanying him; the other was a stranger. There was no commotion whatever. The Boston papers generally reported me correctly. The Globe gave a most erroneous report,and afterward corrected it. The speaker had the audience entirely at his fingers' ends.

A. A. MINER.

SOUND ADVICE FOR POLITICAL ACTION.

[The following letter from the president of the New York Association, who has been welcomed as a leader among ns, was read at the meeting for consnltation in the N. C. A. bnilding, connected with the Prohibition Conference:]

DALE, N. Y., Nov. 21, 1887.

1. By no means give np the American party. We have to-day all the organization we ever had. Voting for St. John did not dissolve ns. Parties often adopt other parties' candidates and elect them, as two parties elected S. P. Chase to the Senate. This did not dissolve them. One was the Democratic party, the other became the Repnblican partv.

2. Let every American who voted for St. John in 1884 attend the Prohibition Conference in Chicago, November 30th inst., and by private conference with Prof. A. A. Hopkins, Dr. Jutkins, and others, agree to resolve, in snbstance, "That the National Prohibition party and W. C. T. U. are open, not secret parties; and while thankfnl for the co-operation and votes of secret temperance lodges, we think a national party should not be secret in whole or in part." If the Chicago Conference agrees to the above, or something tantamonnt to it, and agrees on candidates clean of the lodge. I am in favor of acting and voting with them throughout.

3. If they refuse, I am in favor of pntting an American ticket in the field and voting it; adopting such of the Prohibition party's candidates as are clean of the lodge.

As to candidates, I think, as now advised, Gen. Fisk and Fred.S. Donglas would be the best nomination, but Gen. O. O. Howard would be a good choice, and there are others. I think the Negro vote shonld be represented in the ticket. The Negro has got to the polls now, and to nominate one would be to strike with Providence, who "chooses the weak things to confonnd the mighty."

I think immediately after the Chicago Conference every possible effort should be put forth for the New Orleans Convention, Feb. 17th prox. I hope Dr. Stratton's committee will meet at once and act. Yours for Christ and reform, F. W. CAPWELL.

BALLOTS AND BRIBES.

ROCHESTER, N. Y., Nov. 28, 1887.

EDITOR CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE:—In an article in the North American Review for December Edgar J. Levey describes what he saw in the last election in New York city. The polls were opened at 6 A. M. Before this a large number of men collected at the polling place and formed a line. "My cnriosity was at once excited to see who the zealons citizens were who were so anxions to exercise the 'priceless boon of citizenship' that they had arisen almost before daybreak in order to avail themselves of the privilege. On approaching I saw that they held their ballots tightly clenched in their right hands, which were elevated at right angles with their bodies, and that they took good care to keep them in this position until the polls opened.

"In a few minntes the voting began. As soon as each man voted he passed out and filed into the side door of a bar room, located near by. I entered and saw a well-known ward 'heeler' pass a five dollar bill into each voter's hand, with no effort at concealment. The whole transaction from first to last had quite the air of a common business transaction."

"In the colored district west of Sixth avenue and south of Thirty-fonrth street, the answer given by the colored workers was always the same in its general tenor: 'There is too much money against us,' said one of them. 'My best friends come to me today and say that they would like to vote the Republican ticket, but they have been offered four dollars for their votes, and that is too great an inducement for them to withstand. '—— (mentioning the name of a man who keeps an infamous colored 'dive' in the vicinity) has had $1,000 placed in his hands with which to carry this district, and he seems to be spending most of it.' While we were talking a man shambled np to us and deliberately asked ns in so many words, 'how much we would give for his vote.' This was the uniform experience I met with in going from one election district to another. The price for votes varied from two to five dollars, but in two instances I heard of as mnch as ten dollars having been given for a vote. From personal observation, and from the statements of friends whose experience agreed with mine, there can be no doubt that about a quarter of a million of dollars was spent in this city for illegal purposes—an average of three hundred dollars for each election district."

The writer does not put it too strongly when he adds, "It may be safely said, without any attempt to palliate their crime, that the anarchists lately hanged in Chicago have not so sinned against society as have the political leaders who make such a thing as free choice in elections an impossiblity."

Last Sabbath morning I preached in the Sterling Reformed Presbyterian church. Rev. T. J. Allen was pastor of this congregation for thirteen years. Having resigned last June they have called a licentiate, Mr. French, who comes to enter upon the discharge of his duties this week. In the evening Mr. John Hunter drove me to Oswego, ten miles away, where I preached in the M. E. church, Rev. Brown, pastor. This is a large church with a seating capacity of 800. It was well filled; and the close attention given throughout indicated very clearly that their sympathies were with us. Three young men came forward and asked me to refer them to documents to read upon the Immigration Problem. An elder said, "You told the truth to-night. We must come to that or the nation will perish." Several expressed their approval by a long and vigorous handshaking. A colored lady who has been a member of the congregation for sixty years, the oldest member in it, said, "That is the gospel of the kingdom." National Reform will have a future in Oswego. Judge Harman assured me that the cause had many friends in the city.

It began raining during service, and grew worse all the way home. A heavy gale set in from the lake and it turned quite cold, so that the ride was very unpleasant. A friend stopping at Mr. Hunter's by the name of Perry, has been for some time associated with the Chicago Times. He requested me to write an article on National Reform and he would have it printed in his paper. Accordingly I prepared what will make a column.

Monday morning I came into Rochester and met with the city ministers in their weekly conference. They kindly invited me to address them, Rev. Dr. Sankey making the motion.

The time has come for emphasizing the moral accountability and responsibility of the nation. The nation lives through the generations. Israel was the same nation through her judges and kings; Rome the same through her kings, emperors, decemvirs, military tribunes, consuls and dictators; and France through her imperial, monarchical and Republican forms of government. The nation has a character for good or evil. Even the Romans could stigmatize the Carthaginians with the epithet, "Punic faith," and the embittered could speak in loathing terms of "perfidious Albion." The nation is a moral person, having reason, will and conscience, and capable of rights and obligations. It contracts debts and may not repudiate. It enters into treaties. The nation's bad character and wicked conduct makes it obnoxious to the divine judgments. Amalek was exterminated because they smote Israel. Egypt worshiped beasts and became the basest of kingdoms. Rome was honeycombed with corruption, and she was crushed beneath a succession of calamities and judgments. Our nation sinned in slavery, and the war of the Rebellion was the penalty. It still ignores the King of kings, and the panic of '73, the grasshopper plague, fires in city and forest, and the slaying of our Christian President Garfield testify to the divine displeasure. "Think ye that those eighteen men upon whom the tower of Siloam fell and slew them were sinners above all that dwell in Jerusalem? I tell you, nay; but except ye repent, ye shall all likewise perish."

For the last thirteen years Canada has had the Cook liquor law which allows only one saloon to so many inhabitants. It is fast exterminating the drink system. The Voice has declared in favor of such a measure as a means to the end—prohibition.

J. M. FOSTER.

EXPOSITIONS IN SOUTHEASTERN AFRICA.

BETHANY ZULU MISSION,
NEAR ESTCOURT, Natal, Oct. 7th, 1887.

Editor Cynosure,

DEAR BROTHER IN CHRIST:—Some months since you kindly mailed me some books on the character and claims of Freemasonry. Since that time I have loaned them to several persons to read, who loaned them to others, who were Freemasons, asking, "Are these books true?" These Masons without exception declared the books to be true expositions, and gave it as their opinion that the authors were kicked out of the lodge, etc.

Some time after this Bro. T. B. Arnold sent me Ronayne's "Hand Book," which I also loaned. The first Mason who read it said, "Yes, that book is all true." The second said, "That book has brightened me up." No. 3 said, "I must see the loaner of it and try to buy one,for my friends won't believe Masonry can be revealed unless I show them this book." No. 4 said, "A person reading that book could enter a Masonic lodge without much difficulty."

Again I sent forth this messenger of light; but like Noah's dove it has not returned. I intend sending to T. B. Arnold for a few copies to be brought out by missionaries.

I do not know of a lodge within sixty miles of here, but several have asked me to get them a book. I presume this is the first circulation of Anti-masonic literature in Natal, yet it is none too soon, for once,when away from home I met a Christian brother who said he had "proved Masonry to be a humbug and had kept clear of them for years;" yet he thought his oath was his honor, etc. Wishing you God's blessing on your work, I remain yours in Jesus,

ROBERT SHEMELD.

PITH AND POINT.

"BLESSED ARE YE WHEN MEN SHALL PERSECUTE YOU."

I am scattering the tracts sent me "broadcast." Since our position has become known against secret orders and drunkenness, we have suffered loss financially. We had one building burned (a great loss to us), our stock has suffered violence, and in our condition financially we have had stern want to stare us in the face, for opposing these evils. I earnestly request every reader of this paper to pray for us that we may not falter, but stand firm for the right, and starve if need be, rather than sanction the secret workings of the lodge power. Those that have plenty of this world's goods don't know what it is to fight these "orders" and suffer want as a result, but we do; pray for us.—L. M. HOYT, Ware, Mass.

THE BEST.

I never heard of the Christian Cynosure until a few days ago a gentleman (Robert Smith) gave me a copy containing the best article, by Mr. Milligan, on the change of the Sabbath that I have ever read.—REV. J. B. RIDEOUT, Navarra Mills, Cal.

WHAT PROHIBITION PROHIBITS IN WEST VIRGINIA.

The question of prohibition is also before us, and though there are some points of principle I do not yet quite endorse, I shall surely vote for it, as I did for local option four years ago. That has done immense good here. We could never have a meeting of any kind when liquor was sold in this place but fights and bloodshed resulted. In these four years of prohibition there has not been one fight! So if the Prohibition party put up a ticket, the undersigned will do all in his power for it.—G. H.

Bro. Geo. W. Clark, of Detroit, sends us the above, and says the writer is a well-bred Englishman, has been a teacher in the highest schools of the Episcopal church, has been a dear lover of his toddy and an ardent supporter of the Democratic party.

BIBLE LESSON.

STUDIES IN THE NEW TESTAMENT.

LESSON XII.—Dec. 18.—Other Parables.—Matt. 13: 31-33, 44-52.

GOLDEN TEXT.—So shall it be at the end of the world: the angels shall come forth, and sever the wicked from among the just.—Matt. 13: 49.

[Open the Bible and read the lesson.]

From Peloubet's Notes.

THE PARABLE OF THE MUSTARD SEED.—Vers. 31, 32. This parable, like most others respecting the kingdom of God, has a double reference—general and individual.

1. In the general sense the insignificant beginnings of the kingdom are set forth; the little babe cast in the manger at Bethlehem; the man of sorrows, with no place to lay his head; the Crucified One; or again the hundred and twenty names who were the seed of the church after the Lord had ascended; then we have the kingdom of God waxing onward and spreading its branches here and there, and different nations coming into it.—Alford. Daniel uses the growth of the tree to typify that of an earthly kingdom, Dan. 4: 10-12; Ezekiel to symbolize that of the kingdom of God, Ezek. 17: 22-24; compare Ps. 80: 8-11. This is the point to which the Lord calls especial attention, not to the greatness of the mustard tree in itself, but its greatness as compared with the seed from whence it springs; for what he would teach his disciples was not (merely) that his kingdom should be glorious, but that it should be glorious despite its weak and slight and despised beginnings.—Trench. "As it then was, it was smaller than any sect or party in Palestine, or Greece, or Italy. It was sown in God's field of the world, but it was to grow till it became greater than any sect or school, a tree among the trees of the forest, a kingdom among other kingdoms—a great organized society; and the birds of the air, i.e., the systems of thought, institutions, and the like, of other races, were to find refuge under its protection. The branches refer to the various divisions and portions of his kingdom in different countries and in different methods of work, all filled with his one life; and in the soul to the various faculties it controls, the various directions of religious development, in thought, feeling, work.—Alexander. The church gives shade and shelter to the weary, the wandering, the oppressed.

2. The individual application points to the small beginnings of divine grace; a word, a thought, a passing sentence, may prove to be the little seed which eventually fills and shadows the whole heart and being, and calls all thoughts, all passions, all delights, to come and shelter under it.—Alford. It gives hope to every Christian worker who plants but small seeds, and must leave time to develop the tree; to every Christian soul, who must expect his religious life to be in its beginning an instantaneous planting of the seed of grace, but in its development a gradual growth.—Abbott. The idea of growth involves not only internal development, but also accretion from without, through food, air, water, etc.—G. W. Clark.

THE PARABLE OF THE LEAVEN.—Ver. 33. This parable applies to the kingdom of heaven in the world. The kingdom of heaven, when divinely introduced into the mass of the human race, seemed for a season to be hidden. It was hidden. It did not attract observation. It does not, even yet, so far as its real spiritual essence is concerned, attract much observation. But it is operating; and it will continue to operate, silently, penetratively, diffusively, transmutatively, assimilatively, till the whole mass of mankind shall be brought under its converting influence. Then shall the kingdoms of this world be the kingdom of the King of kings, the kingdom of heaven.—Morison.

Note 1. That the leaven which transforms the world is placed in it from without. It is the gift of God, not a product evolved from man's own soul. It brings new life with it.

2. It is silent and hidden in its operation especially at first, and is often very near to victory when to those without it seems to have been a failure.

3. It is continually working upon that which is next to it; it works from particle to particle, from individual to individual. "Each true Christian, leavened by Christianity, operates as leaven upon his neighbor."

4. It transforms into its own nature that with which it comes in contact.

5. It proceeds from the interior outward.

6. It has a miraculous power of increase. A little living, active, consecrated Christianity has a measureless transforming power. Christianity has already leavened the governments, the commerce, the business, the social customs of all peoples with whom it has come in contact.

7. This is a prophecy of the final triumph of Christianity.—P.

This parable is illustrated in the history of every Christian soul; for Christ is hidden in the soul, and becomes the secret source of its life; to him it gradually becomes conformed; he is unrecognized by the world, though the sweetness and life produced by his presence is perceived; and he gradually and silently pervades the whole being, until the whole is leavened.—Abbott. In these words is a promise and an assurance that the word of life, received into any single heart, shall not there cease its effectual working till it has brought the whole man in obedience to it, so that he shall be a new creature in Christ Jesus.

THE PARABLE OF THE HIDDEN TREASURE.—Ver. 44. 1. This parable illustrates the priceless value of the blessings of the kingdom. 2. The man finding the treasure unexpectedly, represents the fortuitous discoverer of truth; one who stumbles, as it were, upon the truth, or to whom the truth comes with awakening or convincing power suddenly or unexpectedly.—Clark. 3. Many persons never suspect that this treasure is in existence, or, if they admit that it is, they never think that it is so very near to them as it really is. Hence, many never find it at all. In truth, they never seek for it.—Morison. 4. This treasure is represented as being bought. For though in a sense the kingdom of heaven never can be bought with money, yet there is a sense in which it costs the possessor much. Without effort, without giving up many dear and pleasant things, no one can enjoy the kingdom of heaven. 5 He that would possess this treasure must prize it above all other things; he must give up everything that is inconsistent with it, "even as a man," says Trench, "would willingly fling down pebbles and mosses, which hitherto he had been gathering, and with which he had filled his hands, if pearls and precious stones were offered him in their stead."—P.

THE PARABLE OF THE PEARL OF GREAT PRICE.—Vers. 45, 46. The grand design of this parable is to show the earnestness and whole-heartedness with which salvation must be sought. Its center of comparison is found in the merchant selling all he had and buying the pearl. The merchant represents the sincere inquirer after truth; the goodly pearls, wisdom, knowledge, philosophy, religious truth, things with which to satisfy the cravings of man's higher spiritual nature; the pearl of great price, the kingdom of God in the heart, which may be expressed by eternal life, or by the knowledge of God, and of Jesus Christ whom he has sent (John 17: 3) or by Christ, who is to be received and formed in the heart, Col. 1: 27. The selling all and buying the pearl represents giving up all to Christ, who takes up his abode in the heart, and gives eternal life. Compare Prov. 2: 3-8; 23: 23; Rev. 3: 18.—G. W. Clark.

THE PARABLE OF THE NET.—Vers. 47-50. The sea is the world; out of it, by unseen but invisible influences, all humanity, good and evil, large and small, old and young, are drawn steadily, and despite their forebodings and struggles to escape, to the shore of eternity. Not until that shore is reached can the kingdom of God be fully disclosed; then the angels, who come with Christ in his glory to judge the world (Matt. 25: 31), separate the good from the bad, gathering the former into the many mansions (vessels), and casting the latter away.—Abbott.

SECRET SOCIETIES CONDEMNED.

BY GREAT MEN IN THE STATE.

George Washington, in a letter written a year before his death: "I preside over no lodge, nor have I been in one more than once or twice during the last thirty years."

President Millard Fillmore, J. C. Spencer and others: "The Masonic fraternity tramples upon our rights, defeats the administration of justice, and bids defiance to every government which it cannot control."

Chief Justice John Marshall: "The institution of Masonry ought to be abandoned as one capable of much evil and incapable of producing any good which might not be effected by safe and open means."

John Quincy Adams: "I am prepared to complete the demonstration before God and man, that the Masonic oaths, obligations and penalties cannot by any possibility be reconciled to the laws of morality, of Christianity, or of the land."

General A. W. Riley:—I hold that the difference between the Christian and a heathen religion is, that one has morality and the other has not. And when our churches refuse to speak of such subjects as slavery, liquor-selling and secret societies, they are becoming heathen religions; that is, religions without morals.

Charles Francis Adams: "Every man who takes a Masonic oath forbids himself from divulging any criminal act, unless it might be murder or treason, that may be communicated to him under the seal of fraternal bond, even though such concealment were to prove a burden upon his conscience and a violation of his bounden duty to society and to his God."

Charles Sumner: "I find two powers here in Washington in harmony, and both are antagonistical to our free institutions, and tend to centralization and anarchy—Freemasonry and Slavery; and they must both be destroyed if our country is to be the home of the free, as our ancestors designed it."

Disraeli, Lord Beaconsfield; In conducting the governments of the world there are not only sovereigns and ministers, but secret orders to be considered, which have agents everywhere—reckless agents, who countenance assassination, and, if necessary, can produce a massacre."

General J. W. Phelps:—All secret organizations are links of one and the same chain which binds men to evil and not to good. The Masonic lodge is the parent source from which all similar modern organizations have emanated and this lodge is now in active operation in every city and considerable village of the country swaying our parties and churches; filling our offices, secular and divine, with its partisans; shaping our political destinies; and teaching a spurious and corrupting morality subversive both of the Christian religion and of free institutions.

Thurlow Weed: "I now look back through an interval of fifty-six years with a conscious sense of having been governed through the Anti-masonic excitement by a sincere desire, first to vindicate the violated laws of my country, and next to arrest the great power and dangerous influences of secret societies."

A. M. Sullivan, Irish Leader: I had not studied in vain the history of secret, oath-bound associations. I regarded them with horror. I knew all that could be said as to their advantages in revolutionizing a country, but even in the firmest and best of hands they had a direct tendency to demoralization and are often on the whole more perilous to society than open tyranny."

Hon. Edward Blake, leader in Canadian Parliament, March, 1884: "I am not in favor of State recognition of any secret societies. I have never joined one, though many of my best friends are members of secret societies. But I believe the tendency of secrecy itself to be injurious. I believe that it brings with it the possibility of evil; I believe that it involves a certain amount of sacrifice of individuality and independence, and gives very great facilities for the misleading of members by designing leaders—very great and mischievous facilities for that purpose." "I believe that a great deal of the trouble, social and political, that has occurred in those countries [Europe and America] is due to secret societies."

Charles Francis Adams: "A more perfect agent for the devising and execution of conspiracies against church and state could scarcely have been conceived."

Thaddeus Stevens: "By Freemasonry, trial by jury is transformed into an engine of despotism and Masonic fraud."

Judge Pliny Merrick (a seceded Mason): —If ever a Chapter or a lodge shall establish laws in conflict with those of the state the Masonic requisition is obedience to the lodge and conflict with the state; and if a member hesitates at this humiliating obedience, his heart must be "torn from his bosom," his "vitals plucked from his body," and Masonic vengeance, not satisfied with this bloody immolation, denies a resting place to the motionless remains, but they are to be "burnt to ashes and scattered to the winds."

Samuel C. Pomeroy, in an address, 1883:—"There may be a broad distinction between the good and the bad in secret societies, but as they all alike have oath-bound obligations to complete oblivion of all they do or say, I have no means of judging the good from the bad. So I turn away from them all to the great Teacher who said, "In secret have I said nothing."

Judge Daniel H. Whitney, (renouncing Mason): While professed ministers of the Gospel and members of churches are permitted to associate themselves with these organizations, the task to apply a remedy will be a hopeless one; and just so long will the declaration made to me not long since by a high Mason and a worthy man prove true, that "a Masonic lodge is the strangest medley of priests and murderers—deacons and whoremasters—church members and gamblers—decent men and loafers—drunkards and rowdies, that the All Seeing-Eye ever looked down upon."

Hon. Samuel Dexter, in an open letter to the Grand Master of Mass., 1798: "If there be no very important reason for upholding Masonry at a moment like the present, there is a reason against it. The system of the destroyers of human virtue and happiness is to undermine in the dark the castle that cannot be carried by storm. Secret agency has overthrown all the republics of Europe, and an extended, secret, leveling, self-created society, without any valuable object of pursuit, and embracing bad characters as well as good, cannot be the subject of approbation of an anxious patriot."

William H. Seward: "Before I would place my hand between the hands of other men in a secret lodge, order, class, or council, and, bending on my knee before them, enter into combination with them for any object, personal or political, good or bad, I would pray to God that that hand and that knee might be paralyzed, and that I might become an object of pity and even the mockery of my fellowmen."

Wendell Phillips: "I wish you success most heartily in your efforts to arouse the community to the danger of secret societies. They are a great evil; entirely out of place in a republic, and no patriot should join or uphold them. Considering the great forces which threaten the welfare of the nation in the next thirty years, and how readily and efficiently they can use any secret organizations, such should not be allowed to exist."

George Washington's Farewell Address: "The very idea of the power and the right of the people to establish government presupposes the duty of every individual to obey the established government. All obstructions to the execution of the laws, all combinations and associations, under whatever plausible character, with the real design to direct, control, counteract, or awe the regular deliberation and action of the constituted authorities, are destructive of this fundamental principle, and of fatal tendency."

Daniel Webster: "All secret associations, the members of which take upon themselves extraordinary obligations to one another, and are bound together by secret oaths, are naturally sources of jealousy and just alarm to others; are especially unfavorable to harmony and mutual confidence among men living together under popular institutions, and are dangerous to the general cause of civil liberty and just government. Under the influence of this conviction I heartily approved the law, lately enacted in the State of which I am a citizen, for abolishing all such oaths and obligations."

THE CHURCHES VS. LODGERY.

The following denominations are committed by vote of their legislative assemblies or by constitution to a separation from secret lodge worship:

Adventists (Seventh-day.)

Baptists—Primitive, Seventh-day and Scandinavian.

Brethren (Dunkers or German Baptists.)

Christian Reformed Church.

Church of God (Northern Indiana Eldership.)

Congregational—The State Associations of Illinois and Iowa have adopted resolutions against the lodge.

Disciples (in part.)

Friends.

Lutherans—Norwegian, Danish, Swedish and Synodical Conferences.

Mennonites.

Methodists—Free and Wesleyan.

Methodist Protestant (Minnesota Conference.)

Moravians.

Plymouth Brethren.

Presbyterian—Associate, Reformed and United.

Reformed Church (Holland Branch.)

United Brethren in Christ.

Individual churches in some of these denominations should be excepted, in part of them even a considerable portion.

The following local churches have, as a pledge to disfellowship and oppose lodge worship, given their names to the following list as

THE ASSOCIATED CHURCHES OF CHRIST.

THE NEW ORLEANS CONVENTION FEBRUARY 17 TO 20, 1888.

MORMON STATEHOOD.

"We do not feel sure," says the American, "that this movement for (Mormon) statehood did not originate right here in Washington. A Mormon bishop is reported as saying that a bargain had been struck with the Democratic party for the admission of Utah."

Stephen A. Douglas was made a Mason in Springfield lodge, No. 26, in 1840, the year of the revival of the lodge after its prostration by the Morgan discussions. He was already widely known as "The Little Giant," and leader of the Illinois Democracy. He had then been five years in the Legislature. The Hard-Cider campaign elected Harrison that year; and Douglas, though Vermont-born, and educated there and in Canandaigua, New York, where lodge-villainy and murder were put under a shower of sunbeams, started into life boldly avowing the United States Presidency as his goal. He saw the lodge and slavery overthrow Adams and elect Jackson in 1828. And, though he finished his education in Canandaigua in sight of the jail where Morgan was taken out and murdered by Masons; and though the Vermont and New York lodges were all turned inside out, Douglas was made a Mason in Springfield, Ill., in 1840—five years after he entered the Illinois Legislature. He procured a charter for Nauvoo which made Joseph Smith mayor, judge and legislator; and Smith received a revelation that Douglas was the greatest man living. Parties were so evenly balanced that this made Illinois Democratic till Gov. Bissell in 1856, sixteen years later.

If it is true that a new league is formed between Democrats and Mormons, nothing will save the nation but the success of an American Prohibition party, as the anti-slavery party saved us from utter ruin by the pro-slavery pro-Mormon party which brought on secession and rebellion; and such may prove to be the fact.

The Washington Star professed to be independent; but it is said that its owners have a controlling interest in the Republican and Post, so as to be sure of Government patronage whichever party is up; and the Star comes out fully pro-Mormon, which neither of the old parties now dare venture. If a second secret league really exists between leading Democrats and Mormons, as the Star's conversion to Mormonism intimates, nothing can save us but the blessing of God on a reform party.

THE ANARCHISTS: THEIR DOCTRINES AND PUNISHMENT.

A letter from a respected Kansas friend, N. B. Blanton, expresses his deep regret at the general approval of the death sentence visited upon the Chicago anarchists; and, adopting the view of our beloved Quaker brethren, objects to capital punishment. We cannot begin a discussion of that question at present, and will only say that the law of God to the race as represented in Noah (Genesis 9: 5 and 6) is sufficient basis, we believe, for our laws which make death the penalty for murder. The Chicago anarchists were hung for that crime, they having been proven guilty of conspiracy to murder which resulted in the death of seven policemen and the wounding of fifty-nine others.

Our valued correspondent in Boston has raised some general questions respecting the aims of the anarchists and their relation to law, which appear on another page, and were suggested by his letter of two weeks since reporting a sermon by Dr. A. A. Miner of that city. Dr. Miner, it will be remembered, was first introduced to our readers in an able address on prohibition at the N. C. A. Washington Convention in 1883. We have a double pleasure in printing on the fifth page his own correction of the report of his sermon: since it in the first place rights an injustice unintentionally done him by the Cynosure and our correspondent; and, second, it gives us quite a different view of his opinions of anarchy, and such as we should have judged he would maintain.

While this iron is hot on the anvil we wish to help give it proper shape.

1. It is a misconception to class Christianity and anarchy together as if they were in any way related or had anything in common. Anarchy is a state of society where there is no law but the law of the strongest, which is the law of devils; when individuals, says Webster, "do as they please with impunity." Or, if we take a definition from themselves, a witness in the Most trial in New York the other day gives this: "Anarchy means that the people shall rule, not the government. It means that government shall be done away with; that there shall be no government, but every man shall be free to do what he desires. The laws shall be those of common sense. A man's only punishment is to be himself. His conscience will be his punishment." Most himself when testifying stated his views thus: "We do not fight against any particular government. We do not especially fight the government of the United States. We are opposed to government as such; we think that the power held by the government should be abolished." Anarchy has its interpretation, also, in that festival of horrors, the French Revolution of the last century; in the Paris Commune of 1870; in the New York draft riots of 1863; and in some degree in many of our railroad centers in the railroad strike and rioting of 1877. It will not do to confound such results with the effect of Christian teaching.

2. There is danger of so confusing terms as to create a public sympathy for revolting sentiments which have led men possessed of them into deepest crimes, and a seeming approval for the nihilism of Bakunin or the savagery of Most. To speak of Christ or Paul as anarchists or sympathizing with the principles of anarchists shows that these principles are not understood—otherwise the comparison would be rank blasphemy, and a libel on religion. Christ came to fulfill law; to do his Father's will; his life was the most perfect example of obedience to the highest law. He commanded obedience to Rome; and in his own life his implacable enemies could find no flaw of unlawful action. From Paul we learn the highest authority and source of human government. But anarchy is atheism. It neither has regard for God, nor for law, human or divine.

3. Because anarchists make the cause of the poor a pretext for preaching their evil philosophy, for throwing bombs, firing cities with petroleum, or dancing with heads on pikes—that is no proof that compassion for the oppressed is a part of anarchy. Such virtues belong to the true religion only. They never sprung from anarchy, nor were fostered by it; nor was ever by it an oppressor justly punished, or a wrong fairly righted. For virtue and justice and charity we must look to Christ. No anarchist lodge, any more than a Masonic lodge, originated these principles, or can truly practice them. Masonry pretends to sublime charity and instruction in righteousness; but such pretensions make that order, as old Dr. Aydelotte (once a member) said, "a lie all over." Like the hypocrite of Pollock,

> "Who stole the livery of the court of heaven
> To serve the devil in,"— such man-invented, devil-controlled systems for the professed salvation of mankind are a gross deception.

4. We say that the Christian is free from law. He is free from no law only in proportion to his obedience to higher law. The true Christian confirms all just law and honors the Law-giver. He is as far removed from the desolating principles of anarchy as heaven from hell. If he lives under evil laws which he cannot under God obey, he does not therefore destroy government. Christianity is the bulwark of just government, and such a government ours hopes to be, and is nearest that perfect standard of any on earth. Let us not allow anarchists to overthrow it, nor call Satan into our councils to help mend it.

THE PROHIBITION CONFERENCE.

Seldom, if ever, have the Prohibition leaders been greeted by an audience so immense and enthusiastic as greeted them at the close of the Prohibition Conference last Thursday evening in this city. Its size was measured by the capacity of the hall, which holds some 5,000, and its zeal reached the $6,000 mark when money was asked to carry on the campaign.

The meeting of the National Committee of the party on Wednesday was attended by fifty-three members from twenty-five States and the District of Columbia. Their meeting was called in a small room, but hundreds of men and women equally interested in the result of their deliberations wished to be present; so, after singing, "All Hail the Power of Jesus' Name," and prayer by Rev. Dr. Leonard of Ohio, the Committee adjourned in the large hall of the building. An attempt was made to throw the meeting open to general participation by allowing all Prohibitionists to sit as advisory members of the Committee to share in its debates, but wiser counsels prevailed.

The treasurer of the Committee, Samuel D. Hastings of Madison, Wisconsin, reported the receipt of $8,646.46 since the last meeting, which was during the campaign of 1884. Of this $1,000 was from our oat-meal friend, Schumacher of Akron, Ohio. To A. J. Jutkins, corresponding secretary, was paid $4,225 for salary and expenses during this time, and $1,000 to Gov. John P. St. John for his campaign expenses.

On motion of Rev. W. W. Satterlee of Minnesota the date of the nominating convention was fixed for Wednesday, June 6th, 1888. The place of meeting called out the representatives of half a dozen cities, but the question was postponed for the election of a chairman, which was the most important business of the day. Samuel Dickie of Michigan, A. A. Hopkins of New York and T. C. Richmond of Wisconsin were nominated, Miss Willard making a strong speech for the former, who received 30 of the 44 votes and was conducted to the platform amid a perfect ovation.

In executive session the Committee resolved on Indianapolis for the National Convention. The question of representation was a more difficult one to settle, because some States were not organized, and in some the vote had varied greatly. The final decision, that every Congressional district should have two delegates and every organized State four delegates at large, met with some opposition and more in the Conference, but the reasons for it were too strong to be overthrown by ranting, ad captandum speeches by the crowd outside the Committee.

The memorial services during the evening of Wednesday was addressed at length by Miss Willard, who spoke strongly for Mr. Finch, the late chairman of the National Committee. General Clinton B. Fisk and Dr. A. B. Leonard made brief and more moderate addresses.

The programme provided for the Conference of Thursday was quite successfully carried out. Dr. Leonard and Prof. Dickie opened upon the topic, "A Political Party with Prohibition its Chief Aim is the Only Way to Accomplish the Needed Reform." Dr. Leonard's speech was very able. "Party Organization and Finance" was the subject given to T. C. Richmond of Wisconsin, and as a Good Templar it was evidently a favorite one. His speech gave Mr. Chafin, a fellow Good Templar, an occasion to raise his voice against the "secret" action of the National Committee in the matter of representation at Indianapolis.

Mrs. Clara Hoffman of Missouri led on the topic, "High License—Is it a Step toward Prohibition?" She was ably followed by Rev. W. W. Satterlee of Minneapolis. Among the other speakers R. M. Harrison of Quincy, Ill., aroused much enthusiasm by his humorous characterization of the old parties. Prof. A. A. Hopkins presented a strong, well-digested argument on "The Prohibition Party Movement the Only True Solution of the Southern Problem." He defined this problem to be an effort to politically reconcile two races in one section so that ignorance and immorality in one shall not override morality and intelligence in the other. A number of speakers from the South had the privilege of speaking on this question, Cranfil of Texas, Walker of North Carolina, Coulson of Alabama, and others.

"The Proper Attitude of the Prohibition Party toward Woman Suffrage" was assigned Mrs. Mary A. Woodbridge. She assumed to address those who were opposed to the woman vote, and her arguments, while not having the merit of originality, were forcible and well presented. Dr. I. K. Funk of the New York Voice followed with a rousing short speech. This called out Miss Willard, but T. C. Richmond followed with a protest against the woman suffrage plank.

John L. Thomas of Maryland led the discussion on "The Relations of Labor to Capital," with a paper that showed careful and wide research.

The evening meeting was the great rally for multitude and enthusiasm. The addresses of General Fisk and Gov. St. John were cheered to the echo, and the singing of the Silver Lake Club was hardly less inspiring. The effort to raise $5,000 was more than successful, and the audience adjourned at 11 o'clock resolved more than ever that the liquor traffic must be put down.

During the day the editors of Prohibition papers, some twenty in number, met and completed an organization. All the leading papers of the party this side of the Rocky Mountains were represented, and the conference of their editors will help much to strengthen the prohibiton work in every part of the country.

NOMINATE A FREE MAN.

In response to an invitation for all anti-lodge Prohibitionists to meet in Carpenter Hall Wednesday afternoon a considerable nnmber were present from four or five States. Dr. F. M. Spencer, late president of Muskingum College, Ohio, was called on to preside and Secretary Stoddard made a statement of the object of the meeting and the results of his conferences with leading Prohibitionists. He had stated to them the position of American voters; that they demanded of candidates for rulers over the whole people that they should not be secretly pledged to a part in the lodge. In every case a favorable response was given to this proposition, and it was acknowledged reasonable and the least that could be asked by men of convictions against the secret orders. There was, perhaps, an exception in a Knight of Labor named Zimmerman, who is not, however, mnch of a leader ontside his lodge ring. Bro. Stoddard also mentioned the importance of the election in the Prohibition National Committee of a chairman to succeed Mr. J. B. Finch, lately deceased. There had been but two names considered in Prohibition circles, Prof. A. A. Hopkins of New York and Prof. Samuel A. Dickie of Michigan. But during the forenoon the Good Templars had pnt up a candidate, T. C. Richmond of Wisconsin, and members of the committee were apprehensive of a struggle with the secret society members in the afternoon.

After a season of prayer and consultation as to the best measures to be taken to influence the Conference and the party in favor of open work and men unpledged to secretism, a committee was appointed to draw up a memorial to be presented to the National Prohibition Commttee before their adjournment. So much time was occupied in suggesting instructions to the committee that they were unable to complete their report before next morning. As the Prohibition Committee unexpectedly held bnt a short meeting after this time, the memorial could not be presented, and a combination of circumstances prevented its being read to the Conference. It was read, however, by several members of the Committee, and its sentiments endorsed, and Gov. St. John approved of presenting it to the Conference. Had he been present in the afternoon of the Conference it would no doubt have been presented. The work of the meeting of consultation was not, however, lost, as an excellent beginning has been made for future meetings of the party, and we have the assurance of the best men in the party of their general agreement with the anti-secret Prohibitionists, both those who have acted with the American party and those who have not, in their proposal that no lodge men shall be nominated.

THE LODGES AT THE CONFERENCE.

The only public mention of the secret orders was when W. T. Mills, one of the speakers of the afternoon, made a boast of his Knight of Labor membership, and in the evening, when Thomas Moulding, a humble but sincere-looking little man, promised for the campaign $100 as head of the Grand Division of the Sons of Temperance for Illinois.

But had J. B. Finch been alive, the lodges would have had their own way in both Committee and Conference. And this was manifestly his purpose. He has confessed that his lodge conld not prosper about Chicago because of the testimony of the National Christian Association. He therefore called a meeting of Good Templars to meet here on Tuesday, Nov. 29th, to arrange their plans and maintain the supremacy which they held in his position as chairman of the National Prohibition Committee. This meeting had other objects for the public—the founding of a Good Templar life insurance society, and a reading course; the first to be a powerful agency in holding together the dissolving lodges of the order, though there is another temperance society of the kind open to all; the second would aid in the same way by drilling the weak members into stalwarts. But it afterward developed that there were other reasons not for the public; and Mr. Finch, remembering his experiences and defeats at Lake Bluff and Pittsburgh, had reason to expect in Chicago the necessity of a better-planned defense than he has hitherto made for his order. Perhaps we should say orders, since we learn from a Chicago gentleman of known probity and a seceded Mason, that he used often to meet Finch in the Masonic lodge at Plattsmouth, Nebraska. But within a year or two Mr. Finch has been understood to say he was not a Mason, and it is to be hoped that he had left that order though still a most devoted secretist.

The result of this lodge consultation at the Tremont House, Nov. 29th, appeared before both the Committee and the Conference. Two names only had been considered by the Prohibition leaders as likely to be presented for the chairmanship of the National Committee—Hopkins and Dickie. It was believed that neither of these gentlemen was favorable to lodge methods. The election was fixed for 3 P. M. of the 30th. But before noon the plan of the secretists began to develop. One member of the National Committee said with apprehension that there was trouble ahead. Another said they had a secret society fight in hand. The Good Templars had made their nomination of T. C. Richmond of Wisconsin, and no one knew what strength he might develop. This was the work of the secret caucus of the day before. The election, however, was a disappointment to Mr. Richmond. He had but two votes, while Dickie had 30 and Hopkins 12. The announcement of the vote was received with prolonged applause by the audience (for the Committee sat in open session), and was made nnanimous.

In the Conference Thursday morning, while Dr. Herrick Johnson was presiding, Mr. Chafin, of Waukesha, Wis., the head of the Good Templars of that State, made a violent attack upon the National Committee for their decision on the basis of representation for the nominating convention, accusing them of meeting in secret session, with closed doors, etc.—he, the head of a lodge, and just out of a contemptible secret caucus! An appeal to the record showed that the Committee was acting under instructions moved in the last National Convention by Chafin himself. Nevertheless, as his motion was a popular one, to make the basis of representation proportionate to the number of voters, it passed. There appeared to be a body of Wisconsin Good Templars about Chafin, who supported him with loud applause.

The Committee paid no attention to the resolution, and Chafin dnring the noon recess was making loud boasts of "the circus" they were to have in the afternoon. At the first opportunity he opened the fight on the National Committee, but Prof. Dickie, who was in the chair, so quietly and firmly "sat down" upon him that he was completely flattened, and no more was heard of the Good Templar knights thereafter.

These facts we hail as proof that the Prohibition party is not to be a tail to a lodge kite, nor the introduction to secretism which J. B. Finch proposed it should be. They prove also that the leaders of the party are sincere in their assurance of sympathy with the views of the anti-lodge voters.

THE LOS ANGELES CENSOR has put the Cynosure under great obligation by publishing an excellent advertisement of this paper in a place of especial prominence. This generous act is of more value when we remember that the Censor is the best Prohibition paper on the Pacific coast, and to our mind in some respects the best in the land. It was a pleasure that we were able, while in California last year, to often recommend the Censor to temperance men, and the Cynosure has more widely extended that notice. There have been few argnments and statements of fact which more clearly show the need of putting the temperance lodges under the ban than have appeared in the Censor. They are convincing to all candid minds that these orders are only a dead weight on the Prohibition movement; and that it cannot succeed under their leadership. It is a pleasure to again commend the Censor to all our Pacific-slope readers and to many in the States who contemplate a brief sojourn in California. Let no reader of this notice pass through Los Angeles without calling on the genial, trne-hearted Captain Wood, the Censor editor, in his office at 119 Main St. The friendly welcome you will get will linger in memory as one of the happy reminiscences of California.

—Bro. Hinman has reached Columbus, Mississippi, after visiting Meridian and other points. He is quite unwell from the effects of a severe cold, but seems not to be unable to travel, and we hope to learn of his entire recovery. As the time for the New Orleans meeting approaches, his labors among the colored churches become of more pressing importance.

—The Christian Conservator of Dayton, which ably speaks for the movement to maintain the position of the United Brethren church against lodge usurpation, has just doubled its size, and comes to us in eight pages instead of four. We hail this evidence of popular favor, and rejoice that the work of brethren Dillon and Floyd can present so evident a mark of success. For their assistant in the office they have wisely chosen a son of Bishop M. Wright, who has experience, zeal and piety, and whose work on the Conservator adds much to its value. May these brethren, and those who labor with them for the purity of the church, daily see the work of God prospering mightily in their hands.

PERSONAL MENTION.

—Bro. C. F. Hawley of the Iowa work is spending a few days with his family which lately returned from Minnesota to Wheaton. He goes back this week with $100 worth of books to scatter over the State.

—Rev. A. M. Hunt, pastor of the Baptist church in La Salle, Illinois, who has had some experience as a lecturer, has made a proposition to take the field for the N. C. A., and Secretary Stoddard is corresponding in hope to arrange the matter satisfactorily.

—Dr. F. M. Spencer, late president of Muskingnm College, attended the Prohibition Conference last week, and gave hearty assistance in the meeting of the anti-lodge supporters of prohibition on Wednesday afternoon. It was his first visit to the Cynosure office, and the agreeable impression he left makes us wish, not only for many future visits, bnt that the supporters of our reform throughout the country may make his acquaintance.

—Scores of Cynosure readers attended the prohibition meetings in Chicago last week. We would be glad to mention them all were there room, but when we say that among them were C. B. Knight, of Worcester, Mass., Mrs. Ames and Mrs. L. C. Andrews, of Wisconsin, Bro. Hawley and wife, of Iowa, Dr. Spencer, of Ohio, and brethren Jerome Howe, G. R. Milton, Alexander Thompson, and A. D. Freeman, of this State, a good idea of their representative character may be gained.

—A letter from Bro. A. D. Zaraphonithes tells us he is settled for the winter at No. 5, Winthrop Place, New York city. His wife and children are with him and all are in good health, though somewhat straitened in circumstances. He will spend part of the time lecturing and preaching, while acquiring some knowledge of several trades which will be of service to his work as missionary in Greece. At Montreal they had the satisfaction of making some friends for Mr. Sakellarios in Athens, in whose welfare they have a warm interest.

—A fine portrait of Senator Pomeroy adorns the last number of Munyon's Illustrated World, the organ of the Philadelphia American party. It accompanies his speech in that city. It is eloquent in the Senator's epigrammatic style and does not forget to speak firmly for Him "who in secret said nothing." It would have recommended Dr. Kirby's platform if there had been a recognition of the King of kings and of the principles he maintained which would overthrow the lodge. But that could hardly be expected when the movement is sustained by secret societies.

—The St. Croix (Wis.) Republican says of Bro. Gault's work at New Richmond: "Rev. M. A. Gault of the National Reform Association preached an able sermon in the Congregational church on Sabbath morning on the Bible in our common education; and in the evening he occupied the M. E pulpit, when he gave a comparative statement of the character of the United States of Israel and the United States of America. Both discourses were able and interesting. Mr. Gault is far above the lecturers usually employed and sent over the country by reformatory societies."

TO ALL STUDENTS

IN COLLEGES, THEOLOGICAL SEMINARIES AND ACADEMIES.

The Board of the National Christian Association desiring to arouse an interest among American students in the topics named below, have offered cash prizes for essays on the following topics:

"Secret Societies and the Labor Problem."

"The Relation of Secret Societies to the Temperance Cause."

For the best essay on each of these topics a premium of Twenty Dollars will be paid to its author: for the second in merit a premium of Ten Dollars.

This offer is made to students of both sexes in all the institutions named above, with the following limitations:

1. The length of the essays may not be more than 2 000 words, plainly written.

2. They must be mailed to the "Essay Committee, N. C. A. office, 221 West Madison St., Chicago," before May 1, 1888.

3. The name and address of each writer must be plainly written on a separate sheet accompanying the essay.

4. The Association to have the privilege of publishing as a tract, or in their paper, the Christian Cynosure, any or all the four prize essays; and any others which may seem desirable, if satisfactory arrangements can be made with their authors.

The committee of award have not yet been chosen.

THE HOME.

BE PATIENT WITH THE CHILDREN.

They are such tiny feet!
They have gone such a little way to meet
The years which are required to break
Their steps to evenness, and make Them go
More sure and slow.

They are such little hands!
Be kind—things are so new, and life but stands
A step beyond the doorway. All around
New day has found
Such tempting things to shine upon, and so
The hands are tempted oft, you know.

They are such fond, clear eyes
That widen to surprise
At every turn! They are so often held
To sun or showers—showers soon dispelled
By looking in our face.
Love asks for such, much grace.

They are such fair, frail gifts!
Uncertain as the rifts
Of light that lie along the sky—
They may not be here by and by;
Give them not love but more above,
And harder—patience with the love.

FAMILY WORSHIP.

By family worship we mean the formal gathering of the family together, morning or evening, or both, for the purpose of reading and hearing the Word of God read and uniting in prayer to him for blessing and thanksgiving. Where the father and head of the family is a Christian, he is the family priest, and naturally reads the Bible with or without comment and leads the rest of the family in petition to God. Sometimes when the father and head of the family is not a Christian, the mother takes the lead in this household worship; but such instances are rare. The large probabilities are that where the father is not a Christian there will be no family altar.

This custom is not based on any specific commandment, but it is as legitimate an outgrowth of the work of the Spirit as private prayer is. The inestimable blessing of family prayer cannot be told in words. That house and home is almost sure of unbroken blessing where God is so honored and sought after. On the other hand the prayerless household can hardly expect blessing from God in like measure with the praying family. Private and closet prayer can no more supply the place of family prayer than can family prayer be a substitute for closet prayer.

There is much reason to fear that this good old custom is losing ground among American Christians. Recent inquiries instituted by a pastor of one of our largest and most influential churches revealed the fact that not half the families in which the father and head of the house was a professing Christian, were blessed with a family altar. The reasons assigned by those heads of families who did not maintain a family altar were various, though the most of them could be classified under this head, "We have not the time." Think of it! not time to tarry together ten or fifteen minutes, after or before breakfast, to thank God for the mercies of the day and night past, and to implore his presence and blessing during the present day, and to make special petition for special need and to commit the whole family to his love and care. Yet these Christians who have no time always take time to eat their breakfasts, which, of the two, in the long run, would be by far the least important. Another reason given by a representative of a class alleges that "it is impossible to assemble the family in the morning for prayers. Some are always late; and after breakfast children must get off to school and older ones to business. In the evening it is worse still; callers drop in, or appointments for other things press and the family is scattered." Still others declare that they cannot conduct prayers even in presence of their own families. They were never "brought up" that way, or they "have no gifts," etc. Or, having gone so long without a family altar it is difficult to take it up now. It is not necessary to enumerate other reasons though many others are given. Under these three heads the majority of the cases where there is no family worship may be classified.

To these we would say in all kindness and with deep conviction:

First. It would be better to lose an hour at business every day than to lose the fifteen or twenty minutes usually devoted to the reading of a portion of God's Word in presence of the assembled family, and the united prayer of the whole household in thanksgiving for mercies past and for blessing upon the opening day.

Second. It would be better to be unpunctual in every other matter than in coming to family prayers. The habit of late breakfasts, and lying in bed until the last minute and beyond before arising and making ready for the day, is not only a bad one in itself, but it has done much more to break down God's altars in his households than any other one indulgence. Every Christian father and head of a family ought to be inflexible in this one rule, that at the appointed time every member of the family shall be present, when possible, at the time when God's Word is read and his throne of grace supplicated. A little firmness on this point will soon bring the whole household into line and into prompt attendance.

We know from experience some of the difficulties that encompass this household worship, especially where there is a large family, some of whom go to business and some to school. We know how difficult it is to assemble the family before breakfast, and how much more difficult still it is to hold them together after breakfast. Nevertheless, it is the first duty of every Christian parent to rescue this sacred and blessed hour from the greedy grasp of the busy and time-driving demon of our day. Depend upon it, the Christian man who neglects his family altar will in the end pay dearly for it, both in the matter of his own spiritual life, and, most likely, in the spiritual ruin of his children.—Words and Weapons.

THE CHILD AT THE FAMILY ALTAR.

1. Every Christian household should be gathered together daily at family worship. We might say, here is the most important means of Christian culture. It is the every-day church. The effect of this chain of influences on a child's life it is impossible to estimate. However little he realizes what is going on, merely enduring it with listlessness or impatience, he is learning. Thousands owe their salvation directly to it. We forget the vividness with which after-days will bring all this back. The sound of the voice, the picture of the complete family always there, the touching recollection how one by one there came the vacant chairs, the scraps of what was read catching the attention for a moment—all this makes up the most precious of the soul's memories. Every day it comes; even the toddling youngster of a year expects it.

2. But let us make it as cheerful and pleasant as possible. Family worship should be adapted to the child, not the parent. If the parent shall "become as a little child," in prayer, through this service, he himself will "enter the kingdom of heaven." Of course it should not be of tedious length. Do not have a chapter of eighty verses read. Food is a good thing, but we do not, therefore, need to cram it down long after they have had all they can possibly digest.

Anything should be introduced as auxiliary which may make the Bible an intensely interesting book. A father once told me that, beginning the Old Testament, he purchased a large map, pasted it on cardboard, and hung it in the dining room. Every day at the hour of worship the places were pointed out. The children followed Abraham to Haran, to Canaan, to Egypt, and back again. When the Book of Esther had been completed, they begged their father to begin over again. Thus the Holy Land became a homeland to each; its valleys and lakes, and rivers and places as familiar as their own county.

Let the prayer be brief, and simple, and yet grandly broad. I think my own great interest in missions began in the hearing my father pray for the missionaries. Then every morning we children were mentioned. We knew how ardent was the longing for our salvation. The chidren carry these things in mind. Be simple. Use words that they can understand. There would be more practical, simple, and brief prayers in the prayer meeting if they were so at family worship.

3. Give the children something to do. Stopping over night in Maine at a brother clergyman's home, the morning brought me an ideal picture of family worship. There were seven or eight children. Every child that could read at all had a Bible. To one was the regular duty of distributing the Bibles, and to another the hymn books. All took part in reading. Then came the hymn, the mother playing the piano, the father singing bass, the guest taking tenor, the children piping up their shrill sopranos, with the mother leading, and the oldest boy taking the alto. Then followed the prayer, concluding with the Lord's Prayer. in which all joined. The variety, the brevity, the simplicity filled each child with hearty interest delightful to witness. There is no diviner sight on earth than a large Christian family at home worship.

Give each child something to do. As soon as each has learned to spell out a few words, let him have a Bible, and with your assistance stumble through a verse. Family worship of this sort tends to proficiency in reading, and especially in reading aloud. It is sad to hear some young men try to read the Bible aloud. They have gone into business, and yet cannot read decently. It could not possibly have been so, had all the children read at family worship.

If possible, have singing. In any case, close with the Lord's Prayer. The children will listen more intently to the parent's prayer, to know when to join in the closing part. With many busy men the morning devotions take place at the breakfast table. Each child comes to the table with a verse to repeat. All being seated, each repeats his or her verse, then all heads are bowed, while the father offers a brief prayer, concluding with the Lord's Prayer. No family is too busy for at least this, and it ministers to the memory, storing the mind with Scripture. The more formal worship may be held in the evening.

The Sabbath worship should be most precious. Beside all else, it is in my own home the time of a tiny prayer meeting. Every member offers a short petition, down to the little fellow who says, "Dear Jesus, help me to be a dood boy to-day."

Why will any Christian father let a day go by without establishing this blessed service, even if he has to get his wife to read, and nothing more follows but the united repeating of the prayer? And if the father is gone, mother, begin to teach that oldest boy his place! The son of a widow in my congregation was converted a year ago. Although only fourteen, the very next day his mother put the Bible in his hand, and he has since been the priest of the household. And when we hear his prayers in prayer meeting, we know why they are so acceptable and scriptural. God fill this whole land with family altars!—S. Winchester Adriance in Am. Magazine.

DOROTHY ANN'S SERMON.

There was great rejoicing among the little ones at the farm when it was understood that Cousin Hetty, who lived in the city, was coming to make a long visit. She was not very strong, so mamma said, and they must all be careful to be very kind and polite, and to see that she always had the best of everything.

The little lassie came, and they were delighted with everything about her, fron her pretty fair curls and white face, so different from their sun-browned ones, to her dainty dresses and French boots. There could be no doubt that her manners were quite equal to her appearance, so Jessie and Tom and Polly resolved to be upon their best behavior all the time.

"Will you come out into the garden?" said Jessie. "There are lots of currants and a few raspberries ripe. There will be lots of raspberries next week, though."

Such a garden as that! None of your little seven-by-nine scraps, but a full acre of everything which could be found in a liberal, old-fashioned, country garden.

A broad walk through the middle of it was bordered by beds of bright-colored flowers, with rows of hollyhocks and sunflowers at the end. Honeysuckles and morning-glories climbed over the fences, and in a shady corner grew such pansies as the children believed only mamma knew how to raise.

Miss Hetty tried the fruit and said, "I don't like currants; they're sour. I like only raspberries."

It had been supposed that each one would eat a great many currants and a very few raspberries. But on hearing this the others offered her all the raspberries they could find, and were rather surprised to see that she took them without seeming to think whether they liked them, too. She kept calling for more, and, when Tom scratched his face and Polly tore her sleeve pushing through the bushes in search of them, very quietly ate all they had, without so much as a thank-you. Then she declared the berries were not half ripe, and not fit to eat.

"Mamma don't wish us to pick the pansies unless she is with us," ventured Jessie, as Hetty began gathering them freely, "because she has some choice ones she wants to keep for seed."

"I like choice pansies, too," said Hetty, with a scowl on her pretty face.

They went to the swing, where Hetty grumbled when the others wanted to take a turn. Then to the croquet-ground, where things went smoothly so long as Hetty was on the winning side; but if the play went against her she grew sober, then sulky, and finally threw down her mallet and refused to finish the game.

Long before tea time Jessie and Tom and Polly began to wonder if it was so very delightful a thing after all to have a cousin from the city to visit them; and before the first week was gone everybody on the place had fully decided that it was not.

Hetty could be very sweet and pleasant while things were exactly to her liking, but unless she could have her own way in everything her frowns and complaints were ready at a moment's notice. She had never been taught to take any thought for others, and her little cousins found it very hard to endure all her whims and ill humors. They were very dutifully anxious to heed all mamma's reminders that it was their place to give up to their guest, but she herself could not help seeing that Hetty made sore demands upon their patience.

One day there was a picnic, to which all the children looked forward for days, and for which great preparations were made. When all were ready to go it was discovered that Hetty was wearing a pair of thin slippers.

"Oh, my dear," said mamma, "you must put on your thick shoes. There will be rough ground and perhaps damp places to go over to-day."

Hetty had made up her mind to wear those slippers and was not inclined to change it, or them, but was still quite determined to go to the picnic. So she said, "Then I believe I won't go."

The other children were as wofully dismayed as she had expected them to be.

"O, Hetty!" cried Jessie, "you must not stay at home. It's lovely out there—wild flowers and vine swings"—

"And a creek where we fish and wade and sail boats," said Tom.

"And such good things in the basket," whispered Polly.

"Hurry, dear," said her aunt coaxingly. "We are all waiting, you see."

"Don't wait,"said Hetty,"I'd rather stay at home." She went to her room,much enjoying the commotion she was making. From the back of it she could look out of the window and see what was going on. The children got into the big spring wagon and sat looking up at her windows. Then her aunt came out and called cheerily up to her, "Come, Hetty, we've got a good seat for you."

"And I'm to have the whip, and I'll let you have it half the time,"shouted Tom.

Hetty came to the window and said, "Thank you, Aunt Emily, but I'd rather not go;" and then watched again from the back of the room, wondering what they would do next in the way of urging her.

Aunt Emily got in, and to Hetty's great astonishment the wagon was driven away. What could it mean? They surely would never, never think of such a thing as going without her. They must be going to turn back for her—perhaps they were doing an errand first. But there was a little misgiving at her heart as she slowly walked down to the kitchen and asked Dorothy Ann,the maid,"Where are they all gone?"

"Why, to the picnic, of course! Seems to me I'd a gone, too, if I'd been you."

"Gone without me?" Hetty stood in blank amazement for a few moments, then flung herself down on the floor and screamed.

At the first howl Dorothy Ann quietly took a chair, folded her arms,and sat looking at Hetty as if she were some very interesting natural curiosity. And Hetty screamed louder and kicked until her bronze slippers were as badly off as if they had gone through half a dozen picnics. And the louder she screamed and the harder she kicked the straighter Dorothy Ann looked at her.

It was very perplexing for Hetty. She had never kicked and screamed before without everybody being frightened for fear she would injure herself, and coaxing and petting her, and offering her everything she wanted, including her own way, if she would only stop. But here was Dorothy Ann looking as if she would not mind if it lasted all day, and not a soul anywhere near to do any coaxing. Hetty did not know what to do next.

At last, when her throat ached and her face was red and her whole self very badly tumbled, she sat upon the floor and looked at Dorothy Ann. And then Dorothy Ann spoke.

"You're a nice child, now ain't you?"

It was not spoken sneeringly or in anger. Dorothy Ann was a pleasant-faced, hard-working woman,older than Aunt Emily, and her words always had weight in the family. After a pause she went on in a slow, carnest way: "You're a nice child, I say! Don't you think it's nice to be a makin' yourself a trouble and a torment with your cross, crabbed, cantankerous ways? Don't you think it's nice to come where folks is all glad to see you and their hearts just warm and a runnin' over with kind feelin's to you, and little ones that's always a-givin' up to you, and you just for all the world like a buzzin' wasp or a stingin' nettle or a prickly chestnut burr that everybody is glad to get away from or drop out of their hands? Don't you think it's nice to keep them children all rasped up with your tantrums, and to keep your aunt in a fret all the time between her wish to do everything that's kind by you, tellin' her children to do the same likewise,and you a-goin' on like all possessed?"

Hetty stared up at Dorothy Ann, bewildered at words the like of which she had never heard before, and slowly through her mind came the idea that the next thing for her to do was to feel very angry.

"How dare you talk so to me?" she cried. "Mamma won't let you." But Dorothy Ann noticed her anger as little as she had her screams.

"If you go on so to your mamma, don't she think it's nice to have a little girl to buy pretty things for and to take good care of, and then to have her a snappin' and a snarlin' and a scowlin', and a makin' people wherever she goes wish she was a thousand miles away? Don't you think she's proud of havin' such a child?

"Don't you think it's nice to see your pretty blue eyes all red, and your forehead all crumpled up so you might iron it out,and your mouth that was made to smile and laugh all puckered? Don't you know there's wolves a looking out of your eyes when there ought to be lambs and doves? Don't you know the words you speak are like so many snakes and toads a droppin' out of your mouth? And what do you suppose"—Dorothy Ann's voice grew solemn—"the good Lord thinks when he looks at that little heart of yourn that he give you to keep full of sweetness and loving kindness, and to make you a comfort instead of a trial to folks—what does he think, do you s'pose,when he sees it all blotted and stained up with all sorts of hateful thoughts?"

Hetty had never taken her eyes from Dorothy Ann's face, and now as she seemed to have said her say and went back to her work as if nothing had happened, it came over her very strongly that the next thing for her to do was to feel very much ashamed. With a little sob or two she got off the floor and went out and lay down under an apple tree. There Dorothy Ann found her, an hour later, fast asleep.

"Poor little creature! She's tired herself clean out." Dorothy Ann had for some days been "bilin' over for a chance to speak her mind," and having now had it felt very kindly disposed. She slipped a cushion under the poor little rumpled head, and when dinner time came Hetty found a dainty pudding, just big enough for her,baked on purpose. And during the long afternoon Dorothy Ann told funny old stories and let her make molasses candy to pass away the time.

"I do declare, I'm most afraid to see Hetty!" said Tom, as the picnic party drew near home. And the other members of it felt so too.

But Hetty was subdued, and as days went on every one was amazed at the change in her. And nobody could ever guess how it came about for she never told of Dorothy Ann's sermon. I wish all spoiled children could hear such a one;don't you?—Congregationalist.

TEMPERANCE.

HOME TRAINING AND TEMPERANCE WORK.

"When I cannot learn from each lesson that I give, more than any pupil in the class, I shall give up teaching," said a successful teacher and author of text-books.

And the faithful mother, in at least the first half dozen years of her baby's life, will learn more lessons than she teaches the child.

Very likely she has said to herself, in view of some of her husband's peculiarities, "Oh, that I might have had a part in your early training!"

Perhaps when she sees the same traits in her boy, she repeats the wish. But as the years go on, and she sees, not only her own peculiarities in the child, but also the defects of her character in his training, she may say in self-abasement, "Oh, that I could begin life again! I might have done more to improve my mind; I might have trained my body and made it stronger. I could have corrected and moulded my unbalanced temperament; and my children would have been the better for these self-improvements. We are not fit to have our children unless we have prepared ourselves for the trust."

But if children are already ours before we realize the part that our character will play in their destiny, we can only do our best with the material that we have. Every child has both good and evil in his nature, and which we will draw out, depends largely upon ourselves.

We may not, as it is said, learn a language easily after we are twenty, and we may not be what we might have been morally. But we can train our children the more faithfully because of realizing our own short comings.

An important part in the mother's work, is the training and educating of healthy bodies. In rightly developing the physical nature of her children, she is doing much to develop their moral nature. "A sound mind in a sound body," is a trite saying. Those in charge of inebriate asylums, regard intemperance as a bodily and mental, as a moral disease; and they think the matter of diet of great importance. The regimen laid down is—"meat only once a day, and then beef or mutton preferable, boiled or roasted, never fried or highly seasoned, and never allowed to include pork in any form; much fruit, vegetables and grains, but no pastry. In short, nothing that demands unnatural labor of the digestive organs, or that creates unnatural thirst.

Though the remark that "Youth is the time for improvement," is a common one, it may be doubted if we realize how much more plastic the mind is in childhood, than later on in life. Early impressions have a security of hold upon the mind, greater than those received in mature years. That a provincial accent or common errors in language are seldom eradicated after one has grown to maturity, prove this.

That moral training which has for its end the building up of a sound moral character in our children, will not only be an element of temperance work, but it must of necessity have temperance work as an element. If we have right principles ourselves, it is easy to teach our children right principles of action. But to train them to act from these principles, requires exhaustless patience and willpower on their part as on our own. Not until it is easier for them to do right than it is to do wrong, is our training successful. Moral attainment, like intellectual and artistic, is the result of doing over and over again the things that we ought to do, and resisting again and again the temptation to do the things that we ought not to do. Repeated acts become habits, and habits form character.

"But," says some disheartened mother, "it is easy enough to write what is good to do, but it seems, sometimes, as though no other evil has so many allied powers as that of intemperance. Often the hard lot or evil surroundings and companions, of inherited tendency and parental example, of poverty and ill health, rises up against one. And, when all these things are to be met, even a mother can do little to conquer them."

Indeed, she can do much. The inspiration of a real life, filled with that heroism which conquers circumstances to win success, is better than any paper upon ethics. But a few days ago we folded for their last rest the hands of a mother, the story of whose determined and successful struggle with adverse circumstances would cheer the faintest hearted. She was left without father or mother at an early age, and when only eighteen she married a man who became intemperate. The care and much of the support of a family of ten children devolved upon her. So faithfully did she train these children, that they all grew to be much above the average citizen in ability and usefulness. The father ended his life in an insane asylum, while the old age of the mother was blest and cheered by her loving children, all of whom survive her, though she died at the age of eighty-five. She abhorred alcohol and it was not until the last years of her life that she could be induced to take medicine containing it. She set an unfaltering example in those virtues that she wished her children to possess. The poverty of the family early taught the children to be producers instead of consumers. The hard work and plain fare made them strong, and gave them the ability to win their way in the world.

In connection with this family, one thing bearing upon the subject of heredity might be mentioned. Though these children have too much principle to indulge in the use of alcoholic liquors, the three youngest are subject to severe congestive headaches, and a son of one of them is an inmate of an insane asylum. The family think that his brain trouble may be the result of an injury to the head, received when he was a child, however.

The thought that is now given to the subject of heredity, while it spurs some to nobler living for their children's sake, may have the effect of discouraging others. I know a thoughtful minister, who, with a tact not easily imitated, discourages the somewhat common practice of speaking of the advantages of having been born and reared in Christian families. He thinks it disheartening to others less fortunate, besides having a tendency to make people forget the power of God by whose help all can be re-created, morally, spiritually, and, in a measure, physically.

By His help, the force of habit, that may be such a foe to mankind, is the brick upon brick by which moral and spiritual upbuilding shall be accomplished. —National W. C. T. U. Bulletin.

RELIGIOUS NEWS.

SPECIAL NOTICE.—A special session of the "South Kansas Conference," will be held, D. V., at Olathe, Kan., Dec. 22, 1887, commencing at 10 A. M. All who have an interest in the prosperity of this new conference, in the cause of God, are earnestly requested to attend. Let delegates be appointed, and come, with all ministers who desire our future success. J. A. RICHARDS, Pres.
J. C. BERNHARD, Sec.

—Rev. Dr. George F. Pentecost is now engaged in evangelistic work in Augusta, Me., which is expected to continue for several weeks.

—The United Presbyterian Conference, opposed to the introduction of the organ, at its session at Dayton, Ohio, elected the Rev. D. D. Little, of Allegheny City, president for the ensuing year.

—About fifty Harvard undergraduates propose to organize a series of meetings in Boston for the benefit of those not ordinarily reached by religious organizations. They will be aided by the preachers to the University.

—The First Reformed Presbyterian congregation of New York dedicated a new church edifice on November 20, at 39 West 119th street. This is the fourth time they have changed their home since their organization in 1794, when they occupied a building in Chambers street opposite the City Hall Park. The pastor, Rev. J. C. K. Milligan, is the third pastor in succession since 1794, having served twenty-nine years. The cost of the new church is $50,000, nearly all paid.

—A series of meetings was held in Philadelphia, November 7 and 8, under the auspices of the Central Committee of the Philadelphia Evangelistic Union. Among the speakers at the opening session was Theodore Cuyler, D. D., whose subject was "Face-to-Face Work for Christ." The meetings were largely attended.

—It is believed that Rev. George R. Rogers, of Brooks Station, Ky., is the oldest minister in active service in the United States. Though ninety-six years old he frequently rides his horse to Louisville and return—a distance of twenty-six miles. He served through the war of 1812 and draws a pension for that service.

—A London dispatch says a number of Baptist churches and clergymen will follow Mr. Spurgeon's example by withdrawing from the Baptist Union. The directors of the Pastor's College will convoke a conference to consider joint action on the secessions. The Nottingham Tabernacle has passed a resolution of sympathy with Mr. Spurgeon.

—A General Conference of all evangelical missions in Mexico is to be held in the City of Mexico, from January 31 to February 3, 1888.

—The work among the coolies from India and China employed on the sugar estates in Mauritius is carried on by four English and four Indian clergymen. The Christian adherents exceed two thousand.

—The Sultan of Turkey has approved thirty-two editions of the Scriptures in Arabic, and 290 of the 300 publications of the Protestant press at Beirut. This authorization gives them unrestricted sale throughout the Empire.

—The unwise order of the Interior Department, prohibiting the teaching of Indians in their native tongue, threatens to produce disastrous results in some of the schools of the American Missionary Association. Several of the institutions it is feared will be closed, and a number of others seriously crippled.

—According to the Year-book of the United Brethren church for 1888 the statistics for the year are as follows: Number of churches, 4,396—increase, 64; itinerant preachers, 1,566; members, 195,278—increase, 10,175; Sunday-schools, 3,478; scholars, 206,088—increase, 26,359; teachers and officers in Sunday schools, 30,051—increase, 1,504; church buildings and expenses, $319,058.63—increase, $67,583.34; total for missions, $64,464 57. The increase in the membership of the church in the last three years aggregates 28,955.

—Extensive preparations are being made by the Presbyterian Board of Indian Schools to educate the Indians of Arizona. At Tuscon they are building an $8,000 school house. Fifty acres of land have been bought on the Santa Cruz river, where the young Indians will be instructed in farming, and another building to cost $6,000 will soon be erected, where 150 pupils can be accommodated.

—The union Gospel meetings under the leadership of Dr. L. D. Munhall and Professor Towner and wife were opened at the Doan Music Hall, some 3,000 people being present. Rev. Wm. Johnson, the retiring pastor of the Tabernacle church meeting in the hall, conducted devotional exercises and announced that Dr. Munhall was delayed yet by the Columbus meeting. Frank W. Smith, the evangelist, spoke the first evening.

—The Spirit of Missions states that "the Chinese governor of the large island of Formosa, in starting a college, has chosen a missionary to inaugurate and organize the institution. Such a step would have been regarded as a miracle one generation ago."

—Rev. William Clyde, late Presbyterian pastor at Chehalis, Washington Territory, has lately removed to Lafayette, Yamhill county, Oregon.

—Seventeen missionaries and seven children have lately sailed from New York to reinforce Bishop Taylor's African mission.

—The students of Princeton University and Theological Seminary have each resolved to support a foreign missionary. The former have raised $1,600 and the latter have $600, with the prospect of more.

—In fifty years the communicants in the missions of the London Missionary Society have increased from 6,615 to 70,561, and the native preachers from 451 to 7,168.

—A three weeks' revival meeting was lately held in Evanston, Ill., conducted by C. H. Yatman, a young man from Newark, N. J. All denominations joined heartily in the work. The different pastors have lists of over 200 names of persons who have expressed a desire to be Christians.

—The Chicago Avenue (Moody church) Sabbath-school is in a very prosperous condition under the superintendence of J. M. Hitchcock of the Y. M. C. A. Employment Bureau. The attendance last Sabbath was the largest of the season, there being 1,751 persons present.

—Ying Lee, a remarkably bright Chinese laundryman of Hartford, Conn, has decided, at Evangelist Moody's earnest invitation, to enter the Mount Hermon School, and prepare for the ministry.

—Rev. J. H. Smyth, pastor of the Second Reformed church, New York, recently preached on infidelity, and in his sermon gave an illustration of the punishment which befell thirty-six infidels in Newburg many years ago who formed themselves into a society. One of the hearers of the sermon was G. B. Taylor, a lawyer, president of the Orange County Musical Association, and tenor singer in the Rev. Mr. Smyth's church choir. On returning home he set about investigating the matter. The society was formed half a century ago. Then a block where now a Presbyterian and a Methodist church stand was a pond of water. Near this was an old tree with a hollow trunk. In this they baptized a cat and gave communion bread and wine to a dog. Mr. Taylor's investigations show that the minister's statement that within a year from the time when the sacrilege was committed the entire membership of the society was exterminated, is true. Seven members killed themselves and five were killed in railroad accidents.—Sandy Lake News.

—The Moody meetings in Pittsburgh, in successful operation, are the theme of general conversation. The evangelist seems to be quite as popular a preacher as ever. It is hoped and believed he will be the means of reviving a deeper interest in the church worship of the Smoky City. There is great need of revival there, for the standard of general piety, morality and religion, is not as good as it once was. Happily, Mr. Moody is opposed to secret societies, and will give them no countenance. They are as cold spiritually as so many icebergs, and chill the life out of any church where they are allowed to enter. Essentially selfish, self-seeking and unevangelical, it will be a happy day for Christianity in this country when she sets her foot on them and crushes these deadly vipers to death. Mr. Moody demonstrates that a man does not need to belong to any secret order to be a successful preacher.—Sandy Lake News.

LITERATURE.

THE TALMUD: What it is, and what it knows about Jesus and his followers. By Rev. Bernhard Pick, Ph. D. Pp. 147. Price, 50 cents. John B. Alden, New York.

Renan, the French infidel whose life of Jesus was so widely read twenty years ago, thought the New Testament could only be understood by the light of the Talmud, as Freemasons pretend that the Bible is best understood and read by the dark-lantern light of their lodge. The author of this volume, however, proves that many things in the Talmud can only be understood by the light of the New Testament and the history of the church. The book shows first what the Talmud is by giving a brief history of Jewish traditionalism of which the Talmud is the culmination, which Milman calls "that wonderful monument of human industry, human wisdom and human folly." The Edinburgh Review says of the Talmud that it may "compete with the Constitutions of Loyola for the right to be considered the most irresistible organ ever forged for the subjugation of the human will." The second part refers to what the Talmud has to say about Jesus, the Gospels and Christian customs. The study of Jewish traditions and man-invented rites, which Christ so emphatically condemned as making void the law of his Father, and turning the worship of the Jews into vanity, is made most interesting by the aid of this volume. A full index assists the student greatly.

Among the beautiful suggestions for the approaching gift season are the ragged-edge booklets of Frank E. Housh & Co., of Brattleboro, Vt., publishers of the Woman's Magazine. They seem to take all hearts: "Childhood Songs," for the children; "Love Songs," for the youths and maidens; "Mother Songs," and "Songs for the Night," for anybody, but particularly adapted for those along in years. These are beautiful selections, beautifully printed, and the price is 25 cents.

The leading article in the American Magazine for December, "Christ Ideals in American Art," by Wm H. Ingersoll, is replete with descriptions and illustrations showing how our leading painters and sculptors have represented the ideal Christ. A very interesting account is also given of the origin and history of this ideal, which, according to early traditions, may be traced to a portrait taken in the lifetime of Jesus. Charles Gayarre tells, with a wealth of anecdote, how various means of amusement were provided for rich and poor fifty years ago, in a quarter of New Orleans that seems then to have been devoted—at least in the holiday season—to the Genius of Pleasure. Salmon fishing in the Cascapedia river is described in an illustrated article. Lords Dufferin, Lorne and Lansdowne, as well as the Princess Louise, angled in this stream; but visitors from the United States, among whom was the late President Arthur, caught its biggest fish. In another illustrated article, Z. L White has a pleasant sketch of the discoverer of natural gas at Findlay. O., to whom the people of that place should certainly erect a monument. Dr. Hutchinson writes the Health notes, and Jenny June the paper on Household Art, which are not the least valuable part of the magazine.

Demorest's Magazine had such an advertisement at the Prohibition Conference last week as might make a rival turn green with envy, when the publisher was called to the front and made a few remarks indicating his intense hatred of the drink traffic. But there is no rival. For a fashion magazine to be leading in the prohibition ranks is unique. But the magazine is not all for fashions, and we are glad to say that the other departments are of more value.

Babyhood, the magazine for mothers, begins with the December issue its fourth volume. It contains an article by Dr. Chapin on contagious diseases of children, which will be found especially helpful, giving, as it does, the first symptoms of such diseases as scarlet fever, measles, diphtheria, small-pox, chicken-pox, whooping cough and mumps. The extended article on the prevention and cure of stuttering in children is also particularly valuable. A dozen contributors, among them Rev. Drs. John Hall and Wm. M. Taylor, discuss the question, "Ought Santa Claus to be Abolished?"

The Swiss Cross for December is out. This magazine shows young people how to collect facts, and how to use them when collected. It is well illustrated. The articles are good, and will add to the reader's stock of ideas, and lead him to think. There is no nonsense about the Swiss Cross. It is safe, pure, healthful reading, and we should feel much encouraged as to the future of our nation could we know that all the boys and girls of our land read it. There would be less of a desire to ape the silly frivolities of Madam Fashion, and more sound common sense, than we find to-day. $1.50 per year; New York.

In the American Garden for December are notable facts for greenhouse and conservatory owners. W. A. Manda of the Harvard Botanic Garden writes of "Orchids for Beginners." Directions are given for rose culture in the window garden. Charles Barnard, one of the Century editors, and a noted writer on industrial topics, has a highly interesting account of his successful vegetable gardening in a village houselot, of special value to professional men and mechanics, on the score of both health and economy. School gardening, the adornment of school house grounds and the teaching of gardening at school, has become a feature of the magazine.

Professor Shields, of Princeton, will have in the December Century another article on Church union, in which he will review all the recent Century "Open Letters" on Christian unity, and further explain his proposition with relation to "The United Churches of the United States."

The London Illustrated News (American edition) is giving thousands of readers most graphic views of the riots in London and the disturbances in Ireland. The holiday number of the News is one of the best ever issued. Beside the finely illustrated number, four fine colored pictures, copies of paintings by Millais and others, are included, the price of all being 50 cts.

LODGE NOTES.

The crowd of people who had assembled at Armory Hall, Kansas City, Friday night, with the intention of participating in the K. of L. grand ball, were swindled. The ball had been gotten up by two smooth strangers, who sold the tickets quite generally throughout the city. The crowd present waited for over two hours before becoming aware of the fraud.

There are 653 lodges of Masons in 18 principal cities of the world, in an aggregate population of over 13,000,000—an average of one Mason to every 276 persons. Sixteen cities of the United States, with a population of 7,000 000, have 527 lodges, with a membership of about 61,-000—an average of one Mason to every 114 of the population.—Canadian Craftsman.

Emanuel Swedenborg, the religious mystic, the son of a Lutheran Bishop, established a Masonic rite called after his name, consisting of six degrees, viz., Apprentice, Fellow Craft, Master, Theosophite, Blue Brother(!), Red Brother. Gustavus III. established the "Swedish Rite," composed of twelve degrees. Masonry in Sweden is now said to be protected by the government

Last Friday was held the fourth annual ball of Arthur Lodge 98, of the Loyal Orange Institution. That the dances had been named by Orangemen was evident, some of the names being "Orange Lily," "Boyne Water," "Protestant Boys," "Enniskillen," "United We Stand," "Orange and Blue" and "No Surrender." Arthur Lodge is one of six lodges of Orangemen in this city and has a membership of nearly one hundred.

An effort is being made in New York to form an anti-anarchistic society to oppose the anarchists and socialists in their endeavor to overthrow the existing order of government. Cards for signatures are being widely distributed, and signers to them are numerous. At the present rate the organization will have a membership of at least 10,000 before the end of this week. There are five reasons set forth on the card for the necessity of such a society: To restrict and regulate immigration; to increase the period of naturalization to fourteen years' residence; the extension and protection of the American free school system; American lands for Americans; no public funds for sectarian uses.

In the current issue of the Journal of United Labor Mr. Powderly has an article on the present troubles among the Knights of Labor. He says those who are determined on seceding and propose to form a new order out of the wreck of the old one have little knowledge of the trials and dangers to be encountered in such an undertaking. He feels that the amount of energy necessary to successfully accomplish such a work would make the Knights of Labor invincible. All who aspire to office, he says, cannot be successful, and if these seceders should build up a new order they would "do so only to find at their elbows men who, like themselves, will stop at nothing mean or low to compass their ends."

The Facts Stated.

HON. THURLOW WEED ON THE MORGAN ABDUCTION.

This is a sixteen page pamphlet comprising a letter written by Mr. Weed, and read at the unveiling of the monument erected to the memory of Capt. William Morgan. The frontispiece is an engraving of the monument. It is a history of the unlawful seizure and confinement of Morgan in the Canandaigua jail, his subsequent conveyance by Freemason to Fort Niagara, and drowning in Lake Ontario. He not only subscribes his NAME to the letter, but ATTACHES HIS AFFIDAVIT to it.

In closing his letter he writes: I now look back through an interval of fifty-six years with a conscious sense of having been governed through the "Anti-Masonic excitement" by a sincere desire, first, to vindicate the violated laws of my country, and next, to arrest the great power and dangerous influences of "secret societies."

The pamphlet is well worth perusing, and is doubtless the last historical article which this great journalist and politician wrote. [Chicago, National Christian Association.] Single copy, 5 cents.

THE BROKEN SEAL;

Or Personal Reminiscences of the Abduction and Murder of Capt. Wm. Morgan.
By Samuel D. Greene.

One of the most interesting books ever published. In cloth, 75 cents; per dozen, $7.50. Paper covers, 40 cents; per dozen, $3.50.

This deeply interesting narative shows what Masonry has done and is capable of doing in the Courts, and how had men control the good men in the lodge and protect their own members when guilty of great crimes. For sale at 221 W. MADISON ST., CHICAGO, by THE NATIONAL CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION.

BATAVIA CONVENTION PAMPHLET.

A Staggering Blow!

Such was to Freemasonry the great NATIONAL CONVENTION held in BATAVIA, N. Y., September 1882. It gave the world

Thurlow Weed's Great Letter

On the abduction and murder of WILLIAM MORGAN in 1826, which has been the most widely published of any Anti-masonic document. The dedication of a noble granite monument to the memory of Morgan, and the able and eloquent addresses of the Convention make this a most valuable pamphlet.

SEE WHY.

It contains—
1. Portrait of Morgan.
2. Portrait of Thurlow Weed.
3. Fine picture of the Monument.
4. The great letter of Thurlow Weed and his affidavit—almost the last public act of his life.
5. Address by J. E. Roy, D.D.
6. The monument oration by Pres. C. A. Blanchard.
7. Addresses on "Christian Politics" by Pres. J. Blanchard, on the Character of Freemasonry by Prof. E. D. Bailey, on the "Freedmen and Secret Societies" by Rev. H. H. Hinman; and very interesting personal and historical reminiscences.

BEREA EVANGELIST,

A monthly journal whose aim it is to advance

CHRISTIANITY

and to help break down everything that hinders its spread.

It teaches that men need to be converted to the personal Christ, and not simply to a system of truth, and that there must be implanted in them a divine life as well as a correct belief. The seeks to show that the division of Christians into sects is a great wrong, and a very serious obstacle to the advancement of the Redeemer's kingdom, and it seeks to show Christians how they may be one in Christ, and to persuade and help them thus to unite. The

EVANGELIST

also opposes Intemperance, Secret Societies, Worldliness and the spirit of Caste, and aims to "war a good warfare" against all wrong.

NATIONAL SUICIDE,
AND
ITS PREVENTION.

BY OSCAR F. LUMRY, PH. D.

Prof. Lumry's book, "National Suicide and Its Remedy," will be read with profit even by those who do not accept its doctrine, that taking interest for money loaned, one or more per cent, is sin, taking something for nothing. For, as Goldsmith said of his Vicar of Wakefield,

E'en his failings lean to virtue's side.

—Cynosure.

Dr. Lumry is a man of ideas and never fails to make his readers understand just what they are. Every sentiment he writes has such an air of honesty that it will in a measure disarm those who read to criticise. It is a good book to set people to thinking, whether they believe his theories or not. The book is well worth a careful reading and study.—Inter Ocean.

On all the points named they differ radically from those which prevail in the organization of society. Either they are true or false. It is a curious fact that all of them have been stigmatized as crazy, and yet nearly all of them have been for some years steadily gaining the adherence of men of intellectual ability.—Times.

OF
A Happy Life.
28th THOUSAND.

Baptist Commendation.

"We are delighted with this book. It reaches to the very core of Christian experience, and is eminently experimental in its teachings. It meets the doubts and difficulties of conscientious seekers after the bread and water of life, but whose efforts result only in alternate failure and victory. The author, without claiming to be a theologian, sends out the results of a happy and rich experience to help others into a happy Christian life."—Baptist Weekly.

Presbyterian Endorsement.

"The book is so truly and reverentially devout in its spirit that it disarms criticism. It contains so much that is sound and practical, so much that, if heeded, will make our lives better, happier and more useful, that the intelligent reader who really wishes to lead a life 'hid with Christ in God' can scarcely fail to derive profit from its perusal."—Interior.

Methodist Word of Praise.

"We have not for years read a book with more light and profit. It is not a theological book. No effort is made to change the theological views of any one. The author has a rich experience, and tells it in a plain and delightful manner."—Christian Advocate.

United Brethren's Approval.

"We have seldom met with a more interesting volume, abounding throughout with apt illustrations; we have failed to find a dry line from title-page to finis."—Religious Telescope.

Congregational Comment

"It contains much clear, pungent reasoning and interesting incident. It is a practical and experimental lesson taught out of God's word, and is worthy of universal circulation."—Church Union.

FARM NOTES.

WINTER KILLING OF FRUIT TREES.

There is a wide difference in the hardiness of different varieties of fruit trees. Some varieties endure severe freezing better than others. A variety that lives one winter may die the next, because of the changes surrounding it; and so a tender variety may live, when one naturally more hardy dies. Sudden changes often work disastrously. This was seen in the winter of 1853–4 in a belt of country extending from New York to Michigan. Quince trees and pear trees on quince stocks were greatly injured by rapid successions of very warm and intensely cold weather. The result was, that nearly all the trees that were not sheltered were destroyed, or so weakened that they continued to die till late in the summer.

The warmth had promoted sap circulation, and the sap, suddenly freezing, formed little crystals in the wood, which lacerated the fibres by every motion of the swaying trees. This cause may be supplemented by such a freezing and thawing of the limbs and branches as dries the life out of them. In all such cases the injury to trees will be in proportion to the exposure, and so the protection of good wind-breaks is of great importance. In that memorable season of such widespread loss, those trees that chanced to be sheltered from the winds escaped. It was also observed that the loss was not so great with trees on clayey soil that shed off the water, as on sandy soil that was filled with water.

A wise precaution against winter-killing in sections where there is danger, is not to cultivate late in the season. The culture that stimulates a late growth of soft wood that does not ripen before the severity of winter sets in is to be avoided. The immature wood is easily injured, the cells are ruptured by freezing and thawing, and the disorganized cells in spring are no longer able to perform their office. Secure an easy growth of wood that will ripen in time to be ready for all changes of weather, and you will have comparative security.—American Agriculturist.

UTILIZING COARSE FODDER.

Corn fodder, straw, and even marsh hay at times, are the sole dependence for feeding. In such cases these inferior fodders may be made up by the addition of the richer foods which can be purchased and used at such a profit as will be satisfactory to the dairyman. And in feeding these coarser fodders, the use of roots with them will be found exceedingly valuable. The succulent roots being almost wholly digestible, aid very much in the digestion of the coarser fodder; and for winter feeding a supply of mangels or sugar beets will be indispensable for the most profit. In a similar way the use of malt sprouts steeped in water, which makes a sweet semi liquid pulp of an agreeable odor and taste, mixed with cut straw and corn fodder, has been found to keep up the yield of milk; and with a slight increase in the mixed meal, or ground grain food, to prevent any deficiency in the yield of butter. Well cured corn fodder, or the stalks of the corn crop, cut before frost, or as soon as the grain has been glazed and stacked so as to preserve the greenness and sweetness of the leaves, has yielded, with the addition of a peck of sliced roots, as much and as good butter as that made from the best of clover hay.—American Agriculturist.

STORING VEGETABLES IN LEAVES.—A Maine farmer says that he has found the best method of storing vegetables for table use to be to pack them in dry leaves in barrels. He has had beets thus packed come out the succeeding August as crisp and fresh as when taken from the ground. It is quite as effective as to pack them in sand, the usual way, as well as easier and much more cleanly."

PROTECT THE ROSE BUSHES.—This should not be neglected by those who have choice plants. All of the Tea, Noisette and most of the Bourbon class of roses need protection if left out during the winter; indeed all roses would be better for a light covering. This may be done by hilling up with earth; or, better, by strewing leaves or straw lightly over the plants, and securing them with evergreen branches. Oftentimes the latter are in themselves sufficient.

THE SECRET ORDERS OF WESTERN AFRICA.

BY J. AUGUSTUS COLE, OF SHAINGAY, WEST AFRICA.

Bishop Flickinger of the U. B. church says that, "This volume will well repay a careful reading not only for its discussion and exposition of these societies, but because it gives much valuable information respecting other institutions of that great continent."

J. Augustus Cole, the author of this pamphlet is a native of Western Africa, and is of pure negro blood. He has given much time and care to the investigation of the secret societies and heathen customs of Western Africa. He joined several of the secret orders for the purpose of obtaining full and correct information regarding their nature and operation. His culture and superior powers of discrimination render what he has written most complete and reliable.

PERSECUTION

By the Roman Catholic Church.

A Moral Mystery how any Friend of Religious Liberty could Consent to "Hand over Ireland to Parnellite Rule."

By Rev. John Lee, A. M., B. D.

General Viscount Wolseley: "Interesting."
Chicago Inter-Ocean: "A searching review."
Christian Cynosure: "It deserves a wide circulation at the present time."
Bishop Coxe, Protestant Episcopal, of Western New York: "Most useful publication; a logical sequel to 'Our Country,' by Josiah Strong."
Emile De Laveleye of Belgium, the great publicist: "I have read with the greatest interest your answer to Cardinal Manning. I think Rome's encroachments in the United States ought to be carefully watched and resisted."
Rev. C. C. McCabe, D. D.: "It is a useful book and ought to have a wide sale. You are dealing with a question which will soon dominate every other in American politics. The Assassin of Nations is in our midst and is approaching the Temple of Liberty with stealthy tread. The people of this country will understand the Belfast frenzy some day better than they do now."
The Right Hon. Lord Robert Montague: "I have read it with the greatest pleasure, and with amazement at the intimate acquaintance with the acts of Romanism in our midst which you have evinced. I only wish that, instead of publishing your pamphlet in Chicago, you had sown it broadcast over England, Scotland and Ireland."

Talks ON THE Labor Troubles,

BY REV. C. C. BROWN.

The Danger—The Laborer's Grievance—The Laborer's Foe—The Laborer's Fallacy—The Laborer's Hope—Mind and Muscle—Co-Laborers.

TIMELY TALKS ON AN IMPORTANT SUBJECT.

The Papers Say of this Book:

"It is well to remind the world of the great law of human brotherhood, but how to make the 'more general application of it?' 'Aye, there's the rub!' Our author contributes his mite in that direction, and his voice and reasoning will reach some ears and perhaps touch some understandings and move some selfish hearts that are buttoned up very closely and hedged around by over much respectability and comfortable prosperity."—Chicago Tribune.

"The writer does his work in a way remarkable alike for its directness, its common sense, its impartiality, its lucidity and its force. He has no theories to support; he deals with facts as he finds them; he fortifies his assertions by arrays of demonstrative statistics. The work is among the best of the kind if it is not the best that we have seen. While it is scarcely possible for it to be put in the hands of all our wage-workers, we wish it could be read by every one of them."—Chicago Interior.

HOME AND HEALTH.

THE SPARE ROOM.

The winter is at hand. The country parson has before him the horror of the icy bed and fireless room. Who has not shivered there, and "wished for the day?" It's the new preacher who is destined for martyrdom. The old one knows the "homes." He goes there only in August. Alas, even then there may be a plague which makes him long for the freezing seasons of snows!

We have known the head of a family to lead his minister, an old man with thin blood, and aches in his bones, away from the roaring fireplace of his own chamber to an apartment of arctic temperature, and to sheets akin to slabs of ice. There was a fireplace, while chips and wood lay in heaps down stairs. The host said: "You will soon be in bed, so it ain't worth while to kindle a fire." The wretched victim of this inhumanity was in ague and suffered untold horrors before sunrise.

It is not too much to say that the foundation of ailments lasting and tormenting for years have been laid in these polar atmospheres. Health once impaired is not easily restored. It is a sacred duty to shun guest-chambers where Boreas holds high carnival, and rheumatism, neuralgia and lumbago, like Siberian wolves, rend the tendons and gnaw the bones. It is far better to hear the complaint of "not visiting his people" than be in agony for years from indifference to common comforts.

Suffer a word of exhortation. Preachers at home sleep in an air warm all day. The change to a room where a feeble blaze on a cold hearthstone is struggling for life, is a shivering contrast. The fire should be kindled an hour before bedtime. The cover ought to be thrown open to give the sheets a touch of the higher temperature. There should be extra blankets within reach, on the foot of the bed. Bed-clothing, if not watched, will get damp. Putting a guest between chilling and moist sheets is a crime against health, man and God. Rather let him go to a Negro cabin, where he may lie before a log fire and turn as he needs heat. —Richmond Christian Advocate.

CARE OF FROZEN PLANTS.

When by any mishap the plants, whether in parlor or greenhouse, become frozen, either at once remove them (taking care not to touch the leaves) to some place warm enough to be just above the point of freezing; or, if there are too many to do that, get up the fire as rapidly as possible, and raise the temperature. The usual advice is to sprinkle the leaves and shade the plants from the sun. We have never found either remedy of any avail with frozen plants, and the sprinkling is often a serious injury if done before the temperature is above the freezing point. In our experience with thousands of frozen plants, we have tried all manner of expedients, and found no better method than to get them out of the freezing atmosphere as quickly as possible; and we have also found that the damage is in proportion to the succulent condition of the plant and the intensity of the freezing. Just what degree of cold plants in any given condition can endure without injury, we are unable to state. Plants are often frozen so that the leaves hang down, but when thawed out are found to be not at all injured. At another time the same low temperature acting on the same kind of plants may kill them outright if they happen to be growing more thriftily, and are full of sap. Much depends on the temperature at which plants have been growing. When the frost is penetrating into a greenhouse or room in which plants are kept, and the heating arrangements are inadequate to keep it out, the best thing to do is to cover the plants with paper (newspapers) or sheeting. Thus protected, most plants will be enabled to resist four or five degrees of frost. Paper is rather better than sheeting for this purpose.—Peter Henderson in American Agriculturist.

—To make pumpkin butter, cook your pumpkin thoroughly, rub through colander, measure or weigh equal quantities of pulp and sugar; place in preserving kettle, boil carefully until thick; it should keep a round up appearance when dropped on a plate and look leathery; any seasoning you like; I use allspice. I make mine one half apples, and use dark brown sugar, sometimes half molasses; to buy sugar is as cheap. Allspice and dark sugar make it dark, which I like. If you seal it up it won't require so much sugar or cooking.

KEROSENE AND DIPHTHERIA.

A well-known doctor says that the fumes of kerosene, when a lamp is turned low, are likely to cause diphtheria. The New York board of health a few years ago decided that to this, more than any other cause, the prevalence of this disease was to be attributed. This is given as accounting for the fact that diphtheria generally begins to spread with the advent of short days and long nights. Children dislike to go to bed in the dark, and the kind mother lets the lamp remain in the bedroom, usually turning down the flame, so that the light shall not keep the child awake. Many bedrooms are thus semi-lighted all night, and the windows being closed, or raised but slightly, the atmospheric condition is simply deathly. A turned-down kerosene lamp is a magazine of deadly gas that the healthiest lungs cannot safely be exposed to.—Peoria Transcript.

POPULAR COMMENTARIES

In the critical biblical literature of the century few books have been so unqualifiedly endorsed as

Jamieson, Fausset & Brown's Commentary

On the Old and New Testaments. It has been tried, tested and proven, during one of the most active periods ever known in biblical research. That it has not been found wanting is evident in the still unabated demand. At considerable outlay we have issued a new edition of this valuable work in clear type, attractively bound, and at a price much lower than any complete commentary ever before issued.

In Extra Fine English Cloth, sprinkled edge, the full set, (4 vols.).....$ 8.00
In Half Morocco, the full set, (4 vols.)..... 10 00

"The BEST condensed Commentary on the whole Bible is the Commentary on the Old and New Testaments, by Jamieson, Fausset & Brown. It contains notes of the choicest and richest character on all parts of the Holy Bible. It is the cream of the commentaries carefully collected by three eminent scholars. Its critical introduction to each book of Scripture, its eminently practical notes, its numerous pictorial illustrations, commend it strongly to the Sunday-school worker and to the clergyman. Then it is such a marvel of cheapness."—Rev. J. H. Vincent, D. D., in "Aids to Bible Study."

The leading clergymen and college professors of the country unite with Dr. Vincent in placing this commentary in the first rank of all biblical aids.

IN THE COILS;
— OR —
The Coming Conflict.

A NEW AND STRANGE STORY BASED ON STARTLING FACTS, VIVIDLY PORTRAYING A MYSTERIOUS AND DANGEROUS POWER AT WORK IN THE GOVERNMENT, THE CHURCH, AND THE HOME.

"All will agree that this is a powerfully written story."—Evangelist, (Chicago, Ills.)

"A book which we trust may have a wide circulation."—National Baptist, (Philadelphia.)

"So intensely interesting did I find it that it was hard to pause until the last sentence was read. This work places the author high among the writers of fiction."—W. W. Barr, D. D. in Christian Instructor, (Philadelphia.)

"Unless we are greatly mistaken, the work will do more to awaken the American church and people to the evils of Freemasonry than any other book recently published."—Evangelical Repository.

"The book will create a sensation in Masonic circles, and evoke criticism of a most relentless character. The courage of the author in attacking such a rock-rooted bulwark as Freemasonry is something to admire, Fanatic though he be."—Nebraska Watchman.

"Light is needed on this subject and needed badly, and we welcome this contribution to the literature of anti-secretism, and cordially commend it to the favorable attention of our readers."—United Presbyterian, (Pittsburgh.)

"A charming work, fit to be classed with 'Uncle Tom's Cabin;' it is indeed less a work of fiction. The volume is as valuable as a work of reference as it is agreeable, truthful and useful. Our young folks will not leave the book, if they begin it, till they 'see how it turns out.'"—Cynosure, (Chicago, Ills.)

A Few Books of Special Worth
IN BIBLE STUDY.

THE LIFE OF CHRIST. By Rev. James Stalker, M.A. Arranged for study. 16mo, cloth, 60 cts.
This work is in truth "Multum in Parvo," containing within small compass a vast amount of most helpful teaching, so admirably arranged that the reader gathers with remarkable definiteness the whole revealed record of the life-work of our Lord in a nutshell of space and with a minimum of study.

THE GOSPEL ACCORDING TO MOSES, as Seen in the Tabernacle and Its Services. By Rev. George Rogers. New Edition, enlarged. Cloth, 75 cts.; paper, 50 cts.
The writer of this delightfully interesting work has opened up a rich vein of truth, and in a remarkably suggestive style has presented the typical teachings of the Tabernacle of Israel. The book is really fascinating.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

WASHINGTON.

Dispatches announced Saturday night that the Democrats in the Fiftieth Congress held a caucus and wound up with a rough and tumble fight. Carlisle was nominated for Speaker. The Republican members met in caucus and passed complimentary nominations for officers.

Mr. W. A. Frere, Supervising Architect of the Treasury, submitted his annual report to Secretary Fairchild yesterday. He says that there are under control of the Treasury Department more than 200 completed and occupied buildings, and that during the past year work of construction and repairs have been prosecuted upon sixty three buildings, of which number four have been completed, involving a total expenditure of $3,261,373.

The Fiftieth Congress was opened at noon Monday with a very full attendance of both houses. The private and public galleries were crowded to overflowing nearly an hour before noon. At noon, sharp, the House was called to order and the roll-call began. Then a red-whiskered, hatchet-faced man interrupted proceedings by singing the doxology. He was taken out, but not before he had finished. He is weak-minded. The desks of members were profusely decorated with flowers.

CHICAGO.

As a result of Judge Tuley's decision the wholesale liquor men will have to pay a license of $500, which will be collected without much ceremony in the future.

Judges McAllister and Moran, of the Appellate court have granted a supersedeas to the County Commissioner thieves yet in jail in this city. Just before retiring from the States Attorney's office to become judge, Grinnell nonsuited a number of the little boodlers, and the county board has settled with all but two or three others.

The long strike of the job printers is at an end, and has failed. Typographical Union No. 16, at a meeting held Sunday, declared that the strike for nine hours was at an end, and fixed the working day at ten hours, and the scale of wages at $18 a week. The strikers were ordered to return to their places. But the employing printers will hire no one who does not give up his secret labor lodge.

COUNTRY.

At Springfield, Ill., Friday, a license of incorporation was granted to the American Tariff Reform League, of Chicago. The object is to inaugurate a propaganda of tariff reform and establish branches throughout the United States. Among the incorporators are Postmaster Judd, and Judge Grinnell, of the anarchist trial.

A bronze statue of President Garfield was unveiled Thursday at Cincinnati, the militia and soldiers' societies taking part in the parade. Addresses were delivered by Congressman Ezra B. Taylor, Governor Foraker, and Hon. Samuel F. Hunt.

A sensation was caused in the Arensdorf trial at Sioux City, Iowa, Friday, by the testimony of Hon. Byron Webster, of Dubuque, United States Revenue Collector. He swore Arensdorf was not in the Shepherd House when Mr. Haddock was murdered. The defense had depended on proving an alibi by showing the defendant was at the saloon mentioned at the time of the assassination.

Workmen employed in digging a well on the farm of Robert Comeford, near Cerro Gordo, Ill., found a number of regularly made bricks in the blue clay, and at a depth of 48 feet. Mr. Comeford improved this farm from the raw prairie, and is positive that no bricks have ever been used in that vicinity. It is a matter of some curiosity as to how they got there.

A report that 2,000 Belgian miners have been engaged to come to this country to take the places of the Lehigh Valley strikers has caused great excitement among the latter, who threaten bloodshed should imported diggers invade their territory.

The party that will make the final surveys of the Nicaragua Canal sailed from New York Wednesday.

Some time ago a movement was set on foot at Macon, Ga., to raise by popular subscription a Jeff Davis fund. The project was heartily approved by the press and the people, and bid fair to be a great success, but it has now fallen through, a letter from Mrs. Davis being enough to squelch it.

Two Negroes were killed and many others were injured in a fight with whites at Cat Island, Ark, Thursday. The unfortunates had been arrested charged with insulting white women, and at the trial were shot down. It is said the Negroes are arming for revenge.

A fall of rock and earth in a quarry near Hummelstown, Pa., Tuesday evening, buried three men, whose bodies cannot be recovered for many weeks. Several workmen narrowly escaped.

Jake Sharp, the king of New York boodlers, is out on $40,000 bail, and New York is very skeptical of his ever being brought to a second trial. If he takes advantage of his present opportunities to get away to Europe, he can well afford to requite his bondsmen.

An attempt was made to assassinate Policeman Feeney, of Union Hill, N. J., Sunday, by means of a dynamite bomb. The missile was thrown through a saloon window, and exploded under a table at which the officer had been sitting an instant before The table and room were badly shattered, but the officer was uninjured. Feeney is the officer who broke up several anarchist meetings in New Jersey recently.

The Massachusetts Legislature is to be petitioned to incorporate the Postal Automatic Telegraph Company, having for its object the building of a line across the continent from New York to San Francisco.

The high level bridge across the Mississippi River at Dubuque, Iowa, was formally dedicated and opened Tuesday. The bridge is the only one over the Mississippi between St. Paul and Davenport high enough for steamers to pass beneath.

A tremendous flow of natural gas was struck Tuesday at Xenia, near Wabash, Ind. A blaze 60 feet high was issuing from a 3 inch pipe all night and the people were highly elated.

Tuesday night the jury at New York in the case of Johann Most, charged with making an incendiary speech, returned a verdict of guilty, notwithstanding that the judge's charge was in favor of the accused.

At St. Louis, Wednesday, Henry Jackson, Charles Evans, and Mrs. Jackson were arrested for burning James Wilson, 3 years old, to death. The accused practice voodoo rites, and admit they saw the bed burning before the fire alarm was given.

FOREIGN.

Coercion in Ireland is bearing fruit in the shape of apostles of violence, and a revolt in the Irish National League is threatened.

The town of Bisignano, in Calabria, sustained severe shocks of earthquake on Saturday by which twenty houses were destroyed and twenty persons killed.

Private information received at London from San Remo reports that there has been no decided improvement in the condition of Crown Prince Frederick William. His physicians are doing all they can to prolong his life under the disease, and admit that there is no chance of removing the disease except by an operation, leaving the chances of curing the patient small and chances of hastening his end very great.

M. Francois Sadi-Carnot was on Saturday elected president of the French Republic. While the triumph of this eminent engineer and financier occasions much surprise, it gives general satisfaction. He is one of the few French statesmen of the present day whose past history is absolutely unimpeachable, and whose political and private character is untarnished by any kind of blemish. There is no disorder in Paris, and the crisis is ended.

The election of Carnot to the presidency has tranquilized not only France, but Europe. The English and continental press approve it. It harmonizes most of the conflicting interests, and even contributes to remove the remaining irritation between Russia and Germany, for both are satisfied with it. The Novoe Vremya, of St. Petersburg, the semi-official journal, hardly dares speak otherwise than in accord with the government. It says the election is in every way fortunate.

ESTABLISHED 1868.

THE CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE,

The CYNOSURE represents the Christian movement against the Secret Lodge System; discusses fairly and fearlessly the various movements of the lodge as they appear to public view, and reveals the secret machinery of corruption in politics, courts, and social and religious circles.

There are in the United States
Some 200 different Lodges,
With 2,000 000 members,
Costing $20,000,000 yearly.

This mighty world power confronts the church and seeks to rule and ruin every Christian Reform.

No Christian Reform Movement of the day is so necessary, yet so unpopular and beset with difficulties, as that which would remove the dark pall of oaths, dark-lantern meetings, secret signs, mysterious and pagan worship about altars condemned by the Word of the Living God.

No other paper gives the best of its correspondence and editorial strength to this vitally important reform. The CYNOSURE should be your paper in addition to any other you may take.

Because it is the representative of the reform against the Lodge, with ablest arguments, biographical and historical sketches, letters from lecturers, seceders and sufferers from lodge persecution. The ablest writers on this subject from all denominations and all parts of the country contribute. Special departments for letters from our metropolitan centers, on the relation of secret orders to current events.

The CYNOSURE began its twentieth volume September 22, 1887, with features of special and popular interest.

TERMS: $2.00 per year; strictly in advance, $1.50. Special terms to clubs. Send for sample copy.

President Cleveland's message is unlike any similar document ever written. He bluntly tells Congress that the National finances "imperatively demand immediate and careful consideration;" that the surplus in the Treasury will by June next reach $140,000,000, an exaction upon the industries and necessities of the people which should be stopped. The message argues the case of tariff reduction,—not, indeed, by any original arguments, but plainly and forcibly so that the people can understand it; and from them he will have his reward in spite of the carping politicians in both old parties. The President has forced the battle upon them, and it will be fought out on this line.

Rev. Dr. French of Cincinnati, who attended the Evangelical Alliance meeting at Washington last week at the request of the N. C. A. Board, found the way quite effectually barred to a direct testimony against the lodge evil. There was no more room for Christ in the inn than there is for his truth, if unpopular, in our great Christian gatherings. But this does not matter only for those who deliberately refuse to hear the truth. Dr. French wrote hastily of his efforts and discouragements, and encouragements, also. No special privilege could be granted him, and the time was so generally taken up by the stated speakers on nearly every topic that open discussion was ruled out. We are glad to note, however, that Rev. J. M. Foster lecturer for the National Reform cause, and a correspondent whom our readers have learned to esteem, got in a short speech on the immigration question. His position, as outlined in his excellent report of the Conference, was the sound one, we believe, to which all political quacks must come at last, if they wish this vexed question settled righteously.

Arensdorf goes free. The jury last Friday returned a verdict of acquittal to the great disappointment of many, especially in Sioux City, who had looked for some sort of punishment to be visited upon a man believed to be guilty of an awful crime. The causes leading to this disappointment may never be clearly understood, but the prejudice of Judge Wakefield has been severely commented upon in the press reports. To the gratuitous insults offered by the lawyers of the defense he was deaf, but sharply petulant toward the prosecution. Such conduct would strongly affect a jury. The saloon men were confident of acquittal all along, but the citizens of Sioux City were generally believed to be of a contrary opinion. It is now doubtful if ever the murderer of Haddock is tried or punished. Let Iowa and the nation charge the crime up to the drink traffic and vow its death as a just revenge.

Dr. Joseph Parker of the London City Temple, and author of the "People's Commentary," has embarked for home. His visit to us was hailed and heralded. He departs amid disappointments and threats of law. He began with the Beecher Memorial, upon which was soon tagged the scandal that it was for reward. A truce was patched up, but Dr. Parker closed his final sermon before the Plymouth Church with an insult, repeating the Lord's prayer to the end of the sentence on forgiveness, then stopping short, he left the pulpit and the astonished people. In Chicago Dr. Parker took pains to slur the Congregational ministers for their objections to Mr. Beecher, and in a sermon complimented Darwinism and Freemasonry,—when Christ came "man touched man with a Masonic grip." It is not astonishing after these revelations of his character Dr. Parker found that he was not wanted, and after planning a six-months' lecture tour gave it up in as many weeks and went home.

Mr. Blaine is across an ocean. He is safe; and while he holds tobacco to be a necessity to ninety-five in a hundred Americans, and that we must have whisky and a whisky tax to keep off foreign invaders, we hope he will stay in foreign parts. If the Republican party wants such sentiments prevailing in the White House, the country should be done with it. We do not believe it does. We prefer to regard Mr. Blaine's remarks as a bit of slander. Our readers may see them on the 11th page. The versatile politician is aging. His judgment is forsaking him. To commend the filthy tobacco habit as necessary, when it killed Grant, and is banished from the schools at West Point and Annapolis, where the nation trains its young men to be its protectors, shows fatal weakness. So does the recommendation to build forts against foreign enemies by the patronage of a more terrible enemy than Hessians, Cossacks, Turks, Arabs, the Amazons of Dahomey, or the savages of Terra del Fuego all let loose at once upon us. Stay away, Mr. Blaine!

The expenses for the defense of the Chicago anarchists were raised by a society organized for the purpose, which has been perpetuated in order to erect a monument and raise a fund for the surviving relatives. They engaged Battery D for a grand ball last Saturday night and later. The labor lodges generally were invited to join and accepted, but when it came to the essential requisite of such a ball, the wine and beer, Mayor Roche stepped in and forbade the drinks. The anarchist remnant were wild. They threatened to have their liquor, mayor or no mayor. Their one friend in the Council took up the matter, but had the pleasure of voting alone. But the wholesome fear of law cooled the hot heads; but no beer, no ball. So the plan of a great ball was given up and the performance went on in several fragments in private and remote halls where they could dance and be drunk with no officer to interfere. If Chicago had no saloons, she would have no anarchists.

The comments on Mr. Moody's meetings in the South last winter because of the question of color may have done him some injustice. He is expecting to return to that Southern work this winter and is reported as saying that the trouble last year was due to the Negroes more than to the whites. Although usually there the whites worship in one building and the blacks in another, still, at the Moody meetings all were welcome and seats reserved for the blacks, but the colored people insisted that he should refuse to preach unless the white people would throw aside their life-long prejudices and allow them perfect equality as to seats and positions in church services. The committee offered to divide the churches, allowing the colored people one side and the whites the other half, but that would not do. They were bound to sit in the same seats with the whites, or not at all. "As I only stopped two or three days in a town," said Mr. Moody, "I could not stop and enter this fight of the races that has been going on for a century. I went to preach the Gospel as an evangelist, not as a reformer."

A Christian Conference, with special reference to the Lord Jesus Christ as Saviour, Sanctifier, Healer, and the Coming Lord, was held last week in this city. The meeting being largely under the control of Revs. John E. Cookman and A. B. Simpson of New York was devoted in large degree to the third topic, and the good effect of its work in other respects was largely lost sight of by the public. Among the addresses on Christ as our justification, Pres. C. A. Blanchard called attention to the fact that this work of grace, if it was true, would make men cease from sin, and leave no more place in them for tobacco, whisky, theater, dance-hall or lodge. This testimony was warmly received by the congregation, though Bishop Fallows and Dr. Fawcett sitting by were not happy under it. President Blanchard conducted the evening exercises of the same day which were somewhat informal, owing to the absence of Dr. Lorimer who was to make the address, but yet were practical and inspiring. The address of Mr. Blackstone of Oak Park on the Second Coming of Christ and its influence on missionary effort was interesting in statement and a powerful plea for the church to arouse from the slumber into which Satan has cast her by the stupefaction of worldliness. Mr. Blackstone has prepared a fine and costly set of maps and charts which he uses in frequent gratuitous lectures. He is equal to an ordinary missionary society in himself, and his address ought to be heard in every church in the land.

W. C. T. U. WORKERS AND THE LODGE.

BY REV. M. A. GAULT.

Mrs. Harvey Law, Secretary of the local W. C. T. U. at New Richmond, Wis., took a deep interest in our National Reform work when I lectured there, and like many in her situation, complains of friction between them and the Good Templars of the town. She spoke of receiving letters from W. C. T. U. headquarters, advising their Union to employ lecturers from the Knights of Labor, but she was not in favor of such affiliation. There are more women than we suppose in favor of an anti-secret department in W. C. T. U. work. I found Mrs. L. M. Wylie, of Alexandria, Minn., president of the Douglas Co. W. C. T. U., and also an officer of the State organization, and one of the best workers in the State. She is strongly opposed to secret organizations, and thinks it about time to openly oppose them in her town. She has the courage of her convictions, and often wields a vigorous pen in her local press.

Mrs. M. M. Bailey, of Shenandoah, Ia., is perhaps second to no W. C. T. U. worker in the State. She is president of the Page Co. Union, and is frequently called out to lecture in other counties, and has few superiors as a platform speaker. She is truly devoted to the Master's work, and is an honor to Wheaton College, from which she is a classical graduate. Being a Presbyterian, she believes in the perseverance of the saints, and practices it as well. She would decidedly favor an anti-secret department in W. C. T. U. work.

Mrs. M. E. McKee, wife of the Rev. D. McKee, of Clarinda, Iowa., is president of the Harlin W. C. T. U., and does not hesitate to speak out publicly, when occasion offers, against the evil of secret societies. This Union wrote and signed a strong protest last summer against the W. C. T. U. affiliating with such secret organizations as the Knights of Labor and Good Templars. It was written and sent to the Union Signal office, on the occasion of the Lake Bluff convention coquetting with the Knights, and permitting John B. Finch to make such a virulent attack upon the National Christian Association.

Another Iowa lady all aglow with zeal in W. C. T. U. work, is Miss Eva M. Shoutz, of Centerville, a graduate of the classical course of Monmouth College in 1884. She is in deep sympathy with the anti-secret reform, as well as radical prohibition. She has remarkable gifts as a public speaker, being an enthusiast in the study of elocution. Prof. R. O. Moon, teacher of Expression in the National School of Oratory in Philadelphia, says this of her: "I take great pleasure in expressing, in the form of a testimonial, my estimate of the competency and culture of Miss Eva M. Shoutz, as a public reader, and as a teacher of elocution. She is a graduate of the National School of Elocution and Oratory, in its most extended course, and was awarded the gold medal of the institution, by public competition, and therefore graduated with the highest honors of the school. Miss Shoutz is endowed naturally with a large degree of dramatic sympathy, and expressive power, which by study and discipline she has so carefully controlled as to acquire that rare and delightful faculty in public reading and speaking, viz., the power to move and thrill an audience by her performance, and to convey to them the very spirit and motive of her author." She was elected last year to the chair of Elocution in Monmouth College, but declined the honor.

Mrs. L. H. Plumb, the banker of Streator, Ill., will be remembered by all who attended the National Anti-secret Convention at Galesburg in 1881, by her convincing address on the relation of the lodge to the saloon. I spent a Sabbath with her last winter, and found she was wielding a powerful anti-secret influence in the National W. C. T. U., as an intimate friend and adviser of Miss Willard.

My object in singling out these noble women—and I might add many others—is that Miss Flagg and others of the W. C. T. U., who are looking toward establishing an anti-secret department, may know that they can rely upon these as strong helpers.

Why does the National Christian Association not make a greater effort to enlist women in this work? How easily it may be shown that secret societies are the enemies of the home, by imposing secret obligations which destroy the confidence and intimacy that should exist between husband and wife! How often, as Mrs. Plumb has shown, are drinking habits first acquired in the lodge! How much poverty and wretchedness has been inflicted upon the home by the strikes of laboring men, which would not be possible but for the lodge! And surely the work of the W. C. T. U., which instinctively brings women into conflict with every enemy of "God, home and native land," the secret lodge, one of the greatest of these enemies, should not be overlooked.

THE TWO PLANS OF SALVATION.

BY REV. C. F. HAWLEY.

In the Gospel salvation is by grace, received through faith. In Masonry salvation is assumed to be by works. Here is positive antagonism. God, in his Word, affirms that salvation is not of works.

Repentance, which, practically, is a turning from sin to God, is, according to the Gospel, essential to salvation. Masonry, by covenants that assume to be irrevocable, and hence perpetual, binds to sin, and hence utterly subverts the Gospel scheme of salvation from sin by our Lord Jesus Christ.

In the Gospel Christ is presented as the one mediator between God and men; as the one only way through which we can come to God; as the only name given under heaven or among men whereby we can be saved. Ancient Craft Masonry ignores and rejects Christ as the Mediator, as the way to God, as the only Saviour. In fact it is a system of organized deistical infidelity. Christ has no place in the Masonic confession of faith or in the ritual of worship. It is, therefore, a Satanic device to bind men to sin and separate them from God.

When God called Abraham pagan idolatry had nearly become the universal religion of this world. Judaism struggled with paganism for centuries, but only succeeded in keeping alive the knowledge of the true God. Christianity rapidly vanquished idolatry and bid fair as "a stone cut out without hands to become a great mountain and fill the whole earth." Satan, having failed to make paganism the "universal religion," instigated Mohammedanism, and with the scimitar undertook to make it the "universal religion" of the world. But finally in the clash of arms, the Moslem scimitar was broken, and Satan's ingenuity was taxed to invent some other system of religion through which to work to head off the divine purpose to make the religion of Christ the universal religion of this globe.

In 1717 the work was begun and in 1842 it was completed. A system of deistical infidelity was organized under the name of Ancient Craft Masonry; and already its teachers speak of it as "this universal religion." No open war is made on Christianity. Indeed, Christians are flattered into the belief that they can remain Christians and become Masons. But in becoming Masons they are required to ignore Christ in their confession of faith; to take covenants that bind to sin, and to engage in a Christless, and therefore false, worship. He who truly repents of his sins and believes in and obeys Christ, worships God. All the devotees of false religions worship devils. So taught the prophets and so taught the great Apostle.

Masonry is a false religion, antagonizing Christianity in principle, binding to sin and rejecting Christ. He who worships at Masonic altars, therefore, according to the Word of God, worships devils; and he who worships devils, according to the same infallible Word, comes into fellowship with devils; and he who is in fellowship with devils can not be in fellowship with the Father and with Jesus Christ.

Upon this point the Holy Ghost is explicit. He says, "Ye cannot drink the cup of the Lord and the cup of devils: ye cannot be a partaker of the Lord's table and the table of devils." God is a jealous God, and he will not tolerate spiritual whoredom in his people. He commands those who would be Christians not to be yoked with unbelievers. To those who have been beguiled into the carnal brotherhoods he commands, saying, "Come out from among them and be ye separate; touch not the unclean thing, and I will receive you, and will be a Father unto you and ye shall be my sons and daughters, saith the Lord Almighty."

It is the covenant that makes the Mason. It is the covenant that makes a man a member of any carnal brotherhod or secret society. God commands a separation so complete as not to touch the unclean thing. Obedience to this command would involve a renunciation of the covenant by which he was made a member of that carnal brotherhood so complete as not to hold himself bound thereby in a single point; for if he held himself bound in a single point, at that point he would touch the unclean thing. Separate yourself so entirely as not to touch the unclean thing, says God, and I will receive you. Can that man who refuses to be a doer of God's Word, believe on the Lord Jesus Christ unto righteousness?

THE CATHOLIC CHURCH IN AMERICA.

BY REV. A SMITH.

The church of Rome is the result of the union of dead Christianity with the paganism of ancient Rome. For ages the papal church has had her seat and held her court in the city of Rome on the Tiber, and her unswerving ambition, like that of ancient Rome, has been and still is supreme and universal dominion. The papacy originated A. D. 606. For the last thirteen centuries, she has been adding error to error, lie to lie, and blasphemy to blasphemy, until in this age she has asserted the dogmas of the immaculate conception of Mary and the unfallibility of the Pope.

The following are the dates of the principal innovations, corruptions, and assumptious of papacy on the authority of the Evangelical Trumpet: Invocation of saints, 375; the Latin service, 600; supremacy of the Pope, 606; worship of images and relics, 787; transubstantiation, 1000; the sacrifice of the mass, 1100; sale of indulgences, 1190; withholding cup from laity; 1415; purgatory, 1439; restriction of the Bible. 1546; seven sacraments, 1547; worship of the virgin, 1563; the creed of Pius IV. added 1564. The celebrated Council of Trent commenced its sittings in 1545, and before its close in 1564 the above innovations and corruptions were sanctioned; nor have they been altered, much less abjured unto the present time. Since the Reformation took place, in 1517, the immaculate conception of Mary has been added as an article of faith to the creed of the Romish Church in 1854, and the infallibility of the Pope has been settled also in the Vatican council, in 1870.

The church of Rome is an absolute despotism. She claims, and wherever possible exercises, supreme control over all persons and things, whether civil or religous, spiritual or temporal. She wields a greater influence over the consciences of her nearly 200,000,000 subjects than any other government on earth. She is the most powerful and dangerous political party in the world. In her system of false religion, her combined civil and religious despotism, her blasphemous titles, her oathbound Jesuitism, her secret councils and her veiled harems for the priests, she closely resembles her copyists, the Masonic institution, and the Mormon hierarchy. Bigoted, intolerent, cruel, hypocritical, avaricious, unscrupulous, and lecherous, she, has to the extent of her power, crushed out all civil and religious liberty; fostered ignorance, superstition and crime, and degraded and impoverished the masses under her sway. Having deceived her slaves with the blasphemous pretention that she alone held the keys of heaven, she has amassed great wealth by her traffic in the souls of men by selling them eternal salvation, and every earthly good in the form of relics, beads, pictures, scapularies, dispensations, absolution, extreme unction, and masses, both for the living and the dead.

The church of Rome has ruled over the kings of the earth, she has persecuted the saints of the Most High, she is red with the blood of the martyrs of Jesus, she butchered the Albigenses and the Peidomontese, her unjust wars drenched Europe with gore, her bloody inquisition condemned millions of innocent victims to fiendish tortures, and the most horrible deaths. She murdered the Huguenots on St. Bartholomew's day, and drove our pilgrim forefathers to seek a home among the savages and wild beasts of America that they might be free to worship God according to His holy word. Since the great Protestant reformation in the days of Martin Luther she has changed her tactics, but not her character. Had she the power she would to-day re-enact the atrocious crimes of former ages. This is evident from her unchanged canon law, the Syllabus of Pope Pius IX., the encyclical of Pope Leo XIII., the utteraeces of the Romish press, and her treatment of ex-priests, like Chiniquy and McGlynn, by the infallible pope and his satraps. To-day Rome is bending all her energies, plying all her hellish arts, and utilizing all her Jesuit cunning for the conquest of England and the United States, the two great Protestant powers which form the chief barrier to the gratification of her insatiate ambition for universal empire. To-day Rome is full of hope and courage and confident of final victory. To-day Leo XIII., the most astute and wily pontiff that the world has seen for ages, is plotting in the Vatican, and plying with vigor and success his schemes, for the acquisition of political prestige and temporal power. To-day this pope is marshalling and massing his forces for the great battle of Armageddon.

Ever since America was discovered and taken possession of by Christopher Columbus in the name of the pope it has been a pet scheme of the papal church to Romanize and rule the new world. To this end she has sent out missionaries to the savages, colonized Canada and Louisiana with French papists and flooded Florida, Mexico, and Central and South America with her Spanish subjects. For more than a century a stream of papal subjects has been with increasing volume poured from the mouth of the great red dragon on our shores. A large share of this multitude, many of them paupers or criminals from the slums of Europe, have by order of their priests, voted in the interests of the pope, and for the overthrow of our free institutions. The desire of Rome is to divide and destroy the nation, and her Satanic hatred of all true liberty, and true reform was clearly unmasked during the slaveholders rebellion. Pope Pius IX. acknowledged the Southern confederacy. He wrote a letter of approval to his "dear son Jefferson Davis." Every Romish bishop, but one, at the North favored the South. Papal mobs were let loose in New York and other northern cities, in the interests of the rebellion. France, the eldest son of the church, sent an army of French troops under Maximilian into Mexico, and the Jesuits planned and executed the assassination of President Lincoln.

"In the Catholic Church of the United States there are now 1 cardinal, 12 archbishops, 61 bishops, 7658 priests, 1530 ecclesiastical students, 6910 churches, 3281 chapels, 36 theological seminaries, 88 colleges, 593 academies, 485 charitable institutions, 2697 parochial schools, and 531,725 pupils in attendance at these schools. In the diocese of Boston there are 400,000 Catholics, and it is claimed that out of every eleven children born in Boston seven are Catholics. The arch-diocese of New York has 600,000 Catholics, while the Catholic population of Brooklyn is about 250,000. Most of the other dioceses show a similiar relative strength, and yet Sadlier's Catholic Directory, from which the figures are taken, says that the Catholic church in this country is only in her infancy. It is estimated that there are now in the United States from seven to eleven millions of Romanists, and more than ten million in the British Empire." From a carefully prepared table by A. L. Brown in "Romanism the Danger Ahead," we take the following statistics showing the rate of increase of the Romish element in this country beginning at 1790 and closing in 1878: In 1790 the proportion was one out of every 31 of the entire population; in 1800, one out of every 88; in 1810, one out of every 60; in 1820, one out of every 40; in 1830, one out of every 27; in 1840, one out of every 18; in 1850, one out of every 12; in 1860, one out of every 8½; in 1870, one out of every 7; in 1878, one out of every 6. If this ratio of increase is kept up how long will it be before Rome will have her way in everything in this "home of the free?"

But are not the Protestant churches growing fast enough and converting Romanists enough to neutralize the power of Rome? No. Dr. Josiah Strong shows by an array of figures that cannot be refuted that the Romish Church has grown since 1850 faster than any other church or all of the Protestant churches combined. We submit for the careful consideration of the reader these alarming figures. "In 1850," he tells us, "the Catholic Church was nearly one half as large as all evangelical Protestant churches. From 1850 to 1880 the population increased 116 per cent, the communicants of evangelical churches 185 per cent,and the Roman Catholic population 294 per cent. During the same period Catholic churches increased 447 per cent. From 1870 to 1880 the churches of all evangelical denominations increased 49 per cent, whilst Catholic churches multiplied 74 per cent. From 1875 to 1880 the ministers of evangelical churches increased in number 46 per cent, Catholic priests 61 per cent. From 1850 to 1870 ministers increased 86 per cent, priests 204 per cent. From 1850 to 1880 ministers increased 173 per cent and priests 391 per cent. In 1850 the Catholic population was equal to 45 per cent of the evangelical church membership. In 1870 it was equal to 68 per cent and in 1880 a slight loss due to falling off of immigration during the latter half of the period. Examination shows that the growth of the Catholic church corresponds closely with that of the foreign population, but is somewhat more rapid. Since 1880 there has been a marked increase in the Catholic population. The annual growth of the latter from 1870 to 1880 was 176,733, while from 1883 to 1884 it was 231,322." These important statistics should be carefully studied. If we compute the vast and rapidly increasing wealth, social influence and political power of the Church of Rome the showing would be still more startling.

With one-third of the vote and paying one-tenth of the taxes, Rome has received from the public treasury of New York city within fifteen years more than $12,000,000 for her schools,churches,etc. Many school boards are controlled by papists. Rome has many teachers in our public schools; she is everywhere making war on our Bible and our public schools. The municipal governments of our cities are largely under the control of the priests; a large share of our State militia and our army and navy are papists. Many of the officials in every branch of our government, both State and national, are either Romanists or tools of the Jesuits. Nearly all our political parties are bidding for the Romish vote. Our two great political parties are,to a large extent, not only rum-ruled, but Rome-ruled. Senator Windom says that the rum-sellers rule New York city, New York city rules New York State, and the State of New York often decides the Presidency of the nation. But a large share of our rum-sellers are Romanists,who are owned and controlled by the papal church. It is admitted that Romish votes decided the last Presidential election. It is said that Cardinal Gibbons has a million and a half votes at his disposal,and that no man can be President of the United States without closing a bargain with this satrap of the Pope in the interests of the papal church. According to Dr. McGlynn the Pope is plotting for diplomatic relations between his court and that of England and the United States. He is anxious to be represented by accredited ambassadors at the capitals of these Protestant powers. Rome claims to be educating ten thousand Protestant children in her schools. Two-thirds of the females in her nunneries are the children of nominal Protestants. Our secular press is usually either faint in its opposition to Rome, or else favors her schemes, either for patronage, office or pay. Our Protestant press and pulpit for the most part are either criminally liberal or silent in regard to papal encroachments, while the Protestant masses manifest intense ignorance and a foolhardy apathy on this subject,and an egotism and stupidity which foreshadows coming disaster.

From the above facts, and volumes more which might be written it is evident that our Protestant civilization and our civil and religious liberties are to-day in great and imminent peril from the increasing power of the "mother of harlots." God forbid that we should neglect to do all in our power to preserve the glorious inheritance of civil and religious liberty, the Holy Bible and the holy Christianity for which our Pilgrim Fathers toiled and suffered, and our Washington and his army of heroes fought, and our Lincoln was martyred.

THE SHOP COUNCIL VS. THE SECRET UNION.

Who can estimate the evil influence of secrecy on the labor difficulties? The employer is trained to secrecy as he is trained to business. He must learn to keep the conduct of his business in his own hands and head, to guard his trade secrets, to confine each employee's knowledge to his own department, and general knowledge to partners; to "let things out"is to tempt bankruptcy. The trades union is,in its turn, as secretive as the employer, for it feels that secrecy is essential to the successful struggle which is to prove its reason for existence. In its secret debates,petty grievances are swollen into unnatural proportions through the desire to maintain the "dignity of labor" by showing that "an injury to one is the concern of all." On both sides that first blow which is to be half the battle is to come like a thunder-clap from a cloud of secrecy.

Two men, taking such an attitude toward each other, would not be far from a conflict; the first motion,perhaps unconscious or instinctive,by one would be met by more effective movement by the other. The present attitude of employer and employee toward each other is too often that of the frontier ethics of the Far West, where a well-furnished pistol pocket and the ability to "draw" most promptly are the supreme tests of the better man; and where, consequently, the first motion toward the pistol pocket is the signal for decisive action by the other. Could the employee get into the secrets of the employer,he might be surprised to find that the supposed millionaire was really "shinning" around the street in the desperate effort to make one note take the place of another; and that an attack upon him at the juncture, resulting in suspension of work, would be suicide rather than victory. Could the employer get at the secrets of his employee, he might be surprised to find that the supposed loud-mouthed demagogue was really borne down by a double burden of anxiety for his family, by fear of the direct consequences of a strike or lock-out and of the indirect consequences of any apparent treachery to "the cause of labor" on his part. Could the two parties know each other better, how many struggles would be averted,and how many others would never rise to the dignity of a strike or lock-out.

Mr. James C. Bayles, the editor of the Iron Age, has suggested in a pamphlet the institution of"shop-councils,"in which employer and employee are to be equally represented—the decisions not to be binding on either party unless approved by both,and all functions to be purely conciliatory. As a means of eliminating something of the element of secrecy from the relations of the two parties,of keeping petty matters out of secret discussion and decision,it seems all that can be desired. It is the antipode of compulsory arbitration; and it avoids that suspicion which often attaches even to voluntary arbitration. It is rather symptomatic than remedial, just as a general disuse of the pistol-pocket would be an excellent accessory to a law against street-combats. It is a modest proposition;but,even in the din of high-sounding schemes and associations,is it too much to hope for a fair trial of it somewhere?—Editorial in the Century.

The abnormal array of labor against capital probably reached its climax a year or two ago. The great organizations, like the Knights of Labor, are now disintegrating. The terrorism they proposed and endeavored to enforce was rather worse and more oppressive than the tyranny of capital, against which they were ostensibly protesting. A latent sense of justice was aroused by this illegal and unreasonable attempt to enslave capital and establish a certain community of interests in which capitalists should have no part beyond the melancholy pleasure of seeing their property handled with the utmost freedom by those who had taken possession thereof by force. That sense of justice is now active, thanks to the reckless edicts and wholesale boycotts of irresponsible societies, and foreign agitators are beginning to learn that the easy job they have so long enjoyed of working with the mouth only is, in vulgar parlance, just about "played out." This is, therefore, an excellent time for missionary work. It might even be well to make some degree of intelligence a prerequisite to citizenship. At the very least the man who votes should be able to read the ticket and understand what he is voting for. This all leads up to the important thought that some sort of education is the best antidote for the labor troubles.—Chicago Herald.

THE SECRET EMPIRE.

THE BALD KNOBBERS.

The history of society, while full of wild incident, hardy adventure, and summary vengeance, is more instructive even than entertaining. It provides a remarkable study of the secret society principle, and the facility with which an organization, adopting it for an apparently useful purpose, is readily developed into a band of assassins and guerrillas, and with such subtile self-deception that its members seem hardly to be aware of the enormity of their crimes. The Ku-Klux originated as a band of young men associated for amusement; the Masonic lodge was a simple stone-mason's society. The Bald Knobbers was first a company of settlers blindly defending their property rights as squatters from the incursions of railways and speculators.

From various reports in the daily press we are able to compile the following history of this secret order.

In the southwestern part of Missouri there is a mountainous district comprising about a dozen counties which was settled some three generations ago by the ancestors of the present Bald Knobbers. These people had come from the mountain regions of the Carolinas, Western Virginia, and Eastern Kentuky and Tennessee, in which localities they had been known as "po' white trash," the general term then given by the planters and negroes to non-slaveholding whites. Coming to Missouri with little wealth save their horses, shotguns, and family carts, they found a home to their fancy in the Ozark Mountains. Here, as farther east, they found themselves the scorn of the wealthy planters on the low lands adjoining them, but the mountain recesses abounded in game and the hillsides gave their hardy cattle abundant and cheap pasture, and they lived in peace and comparative plenty until the civil war broke out. All these men were Douglas Democrats, and they declared themselves decidedly on the side of the Union. They became known as the "Mountain Feds," and under their leader, William Monks, they struck many a blow against the power of the guerrillas. After the coming of peace civilization began making its way into the Ozark Mountains in a manner that the "Mountain Feds" did not at all approve of. Railroads were built, and settlers began to find out that the large tracts of land that these mountaineers had held so long as their own, were still open for settlement under the homestead law. They pushed in and began taking up the land, in utter disregard of the holdings of the inhabitants. The mountaineers did not understand it; they could not at all comprehend how strangers could have a right to take the land on which their huts stood and their cattle grazed; and, furthermore, they did not mean to submit to it.

A vigilance committee, which was formed in Taney county, a district isolated from railroads and their commerce, to rid the neighborhood of horse and cattle thieves, having succeeded fairly in its work, it seemed well adapted for operations upon the invadors. It was revamped into a regular secret society.

In October, 1884, a meeting was held in Taney county on a hill called Bald Knob. Several other meetings followed, and the parties who attended were called Bald Knobbers. It seems that these meetings were for the purpose of forming a permanent secret society for the regulation of the universe generally, and Laney county in particular. An oath of secrecy, more horrible than the dime novel production or the Mollie Maguire oath, was originated, and it is related that applicants for membership would sometimes faint while having the oath of secrecy administered to them.

In the spring of 1885 a permanent organization was effected, there being at the time about 125 members. Officers were elected, captains of various squads appointed, and a general campaign mapped out for running Taney county. Two brothers, named Taylor, were under arrest for felonious assault. They were taken from jail, and lynched. This created considerable talk, as the lynching was denounced by every good citizen.

The Bald Knobbers then commenced work in earnest. Men who criticized their acts would receive the following note:

"You have fooled with the wrong end of the mule, and have thirty days to get out of the county."

This warning was well understood. To disobey it meant assassination. In a few days men who received notices disposed of their property as best they could, and left. According to reports the organization constantly increased. Numerous murders were committed, and no arrests were made. The court-house was burned twice; grand juries were packed, and no indictments were ever returned. The solitary newspaper published in the county called on the officers to enforce the laws. For this bit of enterprise the office and contents were burned. The publisher started a new paper, and again everything was consumed by an incendiary fire. The editor then sought an investment elsewhere. The officers made no attempt to enforce the law, and the organization spread rapidly into the adjoining counties of Stone, Ozark, Douglass, and Christian.

In two years over 100 murders were charged against the Bald Knobbers in the counties named, and arson and intimidation were too common to create attention. As all the counties are distant from railroads, and without any means of communication with the rest of the State, the true condition of affairs was not known. Only two or three papers are published in that section of the State, and they were afraid to say anything. In November, 1885, Secretary of State McGrath visited Taney county for the purpose of inspecting some land he had purchased. While there he heard about the depredations of the Bald Knobbers, and published an article in a newspaper of this city, setting forth the facts. This induced Governor Marmaduke to send the Adjutant General to Taney county. A partial investigation was made, and also a threat to send militia on the lawless counties, but during all this time the courts made no efforts to break up the organization, or even pry into its lawless acts.

The society at first tried intimidation on the new settlers. When they grew bolder and committed depredations, and murder followed, naturally, when there was no restraint of law. The efforts of the State authorities proved to be of no avail, and it was not until the case was undertaken by Col. M. E. Benton, United States District Attorney for the western district of Missouri, that the Bald Knobbers lodge was broken up. He took measures to bring the offenders before the Federal courts. Warrants were issued, and during the spring of 1887 fifteen members of the order were arrested. These were taken to Jefferson City to be tried for violation of the "Ku-Klux law." The prisoners were from Douglass, Taney, Christian, and other counties of southwestern Missouri. Their trial came off early in September. After the cases of four had been heard, and the jury pronounced them guilty, the rest threw themselves upon the mercy of the court, and all received nearly the maximum punishment of ten years imprisonment and $5,000 fine.

Thus,like Ku-Kluxism and the Mollie Maroguires, the law at last overtook these desperadoes, broke up their lodge and visited upon them the punishment they seemed to have deserved.

A FEARFUL INDICTMENT.

FROM A NEW ENGLAND PASTOR.

[A friendly letter from a retired Congregational pastor who was for years over a large and influential church, contains the following passages which are the more striking from the fact that the writer has known little or nothing of the organized opposition to the lodge, and this is probably the first publication of his sentiments on this question.—ED.]

From the first day of my ministry I opposed "Masonry" and preached against it, and for five years did not know I had a Mason in my church; and to the last day they kept the matter as still as possible. They were ashamed to be seen in processions. They one and all forsook the Masonic meetings, but had not courage to go farther. As far as my experience goes I know the venom of Masonry is not seen or known by many "goody" members. It is "a wheel within a wheel." I have seen its perfect Jesuitism for twenty years, in the little caucus of select Masons, etc.

I saw in the twenty years' pastorate of so large a church that Masonry perfectly paralyzed the professing Christian. I never saw an active Christian who was an active Mason. I had reasons enough to oppose and have nothing to do with them.

While I was pastor we never took a Mason into our church knowing he was a Mason. In a few cases by letter men whom we had known, but never suspected, "crept in unawares." My church in the main felt as strongly as I did. Early I had the idea that vital religion would utterly kill Masonry in the church and congregation, and it did it wonderfully in our little circle; but I saw it spreading all around me and to-day my church is controlled and run by two men, now active Masons, but once disciplined by my influence for too great familiarity with women.

But one of the worst effects of Masonry as I met it was this: the converted and unconverted made a religion of it. They seemed to feel the need of nothing more vital. It was awful to meet, with the burning and burdened heart, one of these men, as it were, leaning carelessly on an old rotten fence, just ready to topple over into hell.

THE WASHINGTON CONVENTION OF THE EVANGELICAL ALLIANCE.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Dec. 8, 1887.

EDITOR CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE:—The convention of the American Evangelical Alliance met in the Congregational church, Tenth and G streets, at 9 o'clock Wednesday morning. About 500 delegates were registered and many were not. It was noticeable that the majority had passed the meridian of life. Many of the brightest lights in the country were there. Dr. Pierson said, "It is the grandest assembly since the day of Pentecost. It is more important than the Council of Nice, made up as it were of scarred veterans and maimed martyrs, met to settle the divinity of Christ. This convention is to settle the practical application of these principles to modern life."

William E. Dodge, president of the Alliance, called the convention to order. Bishop Samuel Harris, D.D., LL.D., of Michigan, read the Scripture, and Dr. Pierson offered prayer. In his opening address the president reviewed the state of the country, financially, morally and spiritually, and plead for co-operation on the part of the churches as the only remedy for existing evils.

Hon. John Jay, a venerable gentleman from New York, presided at the first session. The address of welcome was delivered by Bishop Edward G. Andrews, D.D., LL.D., of this city. He said, Washington is the city of conventions. It is the center of our national life. "The city is more yours than ours; it is built by and represents the whole nation." He was followed by Rev. Daniel Dorchester, D.D., of Boston, on "The Perils of the City." He gave a startling array of facts. The only blemish was, he did not have time to read more than half he had written. Rev. S. J. McPherson, D.D., of Chicago, came next. His was the address of the convention for wit, pith and eloquence. Chicago is the only city that has dared to punish anarchism. There are in some of our cities communities of 30,000 Bohemians and not more than four evangelical ministers who can speak their language. Immigrants are coming here at the rate of a million a year, and either we must assimilate them or they will assimilate us. These two addresses were repeated in the Fourth Presbyterian church last night at an overflow meeting.

Judge Strong presided at the afternoon session. Immigration was discussed by Prof. Hjalmer H. Boyesen, of Columbia College. He advocated restricted immigration. This is wrong. Each delegate is allowed ten minutes to discuss the topic. I took our ten minutes to show that our government should be thoroughly Christianized and then any who should choose to come and conform to our Christian institutions should be permitted without let or hindrance. Several members of the convention have since spoken to me and endorsed this position. Prof. A. L. Baldwin of New Haven spoke. He thought restriction ought to begin at Sandy Hook and not at the Golden Gate. We complain that the Chinamen do not become citizens and then pass a law forbidding them. Prof. Merrill E. Estes, L. L. D., of Rutgers College, spoke on the "Misuse of Wealth." Money is a trust. Rich men are only stewards. Next came Bishop J. F. Hurst, D. D., LL. D. Buffalo, on "Estrangement from the Church." Rev. A. T. Pierson, D. D., of Philadelphia, spoke on the same subject. He became very animated. Bishop Coxe showed the dangers of Jesuitry, and Dr. McArthur,the ravages of the saloon;but he advocated tax and high license, both which involve sinful complicity with the iniquitous traffic.

Judge Harlan, of the Supreme Court, presided this morning. Papers were read on the "Perils of the Family," "The Social Vice," and "Illiteracy."

Bishop Harris made the speech of the Conference. Its burning eloquence and touching pathos, its beauty and sublimity were irresistible. Dr. McPherson was only second to him. He called out more applause than the Bishop, but did not stir so deeply. Next came Dr. Pierson. Dr. Hatcher, of Richmond, made the most witty address. Dr. McCosh's paper on the church's duty to capitalists and laborers, was the most profound, while Bishop Cox's paper was the most scholarly. The key-note of all was, Satan is massing his forces and the churches must co-operate to meet them.

The house has been filled to overflowing at each of the sessions. An influence for good will go out to the whole nation. (The proceedings of the Convention are to be printed in full. Paper bind $1 per copy, cloth $1.50. Anyone can procure it by addressing the secretary of the Alliance, Rev. Josiah Strong, D. D., New York City.)

President Cleveland invited the delegates to visit him at the White House on Friday. We visited Howard University. Pres. Wm. W. Patton kindly showed us through their apartments. They have a four-story building and two dormitories. There are Literary, Medical, Law, Normal, and Theological departments. They have 42 instructors and 450 students of both sexes, chiefly colored. They have an endowment of $150,000. Congress makes them an annual appropriation of $30,000. They rent a small property to the government for $4,000 a year. So they have a good working basis.

The fiftieth Congress is in session. The President's message is as full of common sense and safe principles as an egg is full of meat. Ex-Secretary Blaine declares from his partisan standpoint, that it would ruin our industries if carried out. But the better judgment of the nation will give a different verdict.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 10, 1887.

SecretaryFairchild's report on the Treasury is very voluminous and one that will be read with general interest. It represents much earnest thought and hard work, for the Secretary devoted a whole month's time to the great task before him—the report is in the Secretary's own handwriting. Among the important recommendations is the suggestion that Congress provide for the erection of a fireproof hall of records for the better presentation of valuable Government records that at present are too much in danger of destruction. During the month of November there was a considerable increase in the National debt, chiefly because of the vast sum paid out for pensions—the amount being eighteen million dollars on that account. For the period in question, the receipts of the Government were over a million dollars a day.

The report of the Postmaster General makes a very favorable showing, from which it appears that there has been a gain of $4,840,000 in receipts, as compared with the previous year, while, on the other hand, the increase in expense is but little more than two million dollars. The deficiency, which, two years ago, was $700,000, has been reduced about three-fourths, and it is estimated that it will almost entirely disappear before the close of the current year, if the present promising condition of the affairs of the Department continues. In the matter of changing officers, this report shows that of the 2,337 Presidential postmasters, who were in place March 4, 1885, but 340 remain—1,807 new men having been appointed. Another feature of postal business that will doubtless interest many of your readers, is the official record of the amount of money lost in dead letters, which, for the past year, footed up $29,687; of this amount the sum of $22,637 was restored to the owners; the amount of $6,672, which could not be returned to the owners, was deposited in the Treasury, together with $2,921, the sum realized from auction sales of unclaimed parcels of merchandise found in the mails.

The report of the Controller of the Currency is one that will be read, especially by business men, with more than ordinary interest, as an important addition is made in the practical suggestion of a new code of bank laws, a copy of which has been sent, with an explanatory letter, to each member of Congress. Up to the 31st of October the total number of national banks organized was $3,805, of which 117 have failed, 625 have gone into voluntary liquidation, leaving 3,061 banks still organized at that date.

In the Fiftieth Congress, political parties will be more evenly balanced than for many years, the Republican majority having dwindled to almost nothing in the Senate, and the Democratic majority having been reduced to about a dozen in the House. There are three contested election cases in the Senate, and eight in the House.

The Republicans have been felicitating themselves that they would be able to control the Presidential election, in the event that there should be no popular choice, as that party claims a majority of the States by Congressional delegations; but this is by no means an accomplished fact, as the Democrats, in settling the contested election cases from California and Indiana, have it in their power to transfer the majority of the State Congressional delegations to that organization.

Since their arrival in the capital over one hundred Congressmen have been interviewed, and the drift of sentiment is largely in favor of tariff reform.

The Democratic Congressional caucus developed much excitement and bitter feeling over the heated contest for the doorkeepership, and there was an occurrence that suggested a slight resemblance to the proverbial Donnybrook fair. The lie was passed between the gentleman from Arkansas and the gentleman from Georgia, and these members then came to blows, and blood was drawn before the belligerent legislators could be separated by their friends.

Since I last wrote you the Fiftieth Congress has assembled and the general Christian Conference has begun its sessions. Seldom, if ever, before in the history of religious gatherings in this country, has such a body of men come together as assembled in the Congregational church on Wednesday morning. Almost every man among the delegates—of whom there are about fifteen hundred—is a man of note and ability in the denomination to which he belongs, and almost every shape of Protestant belief is represented by its ablest men. For the first time, at least, sectarian jealousies and differences have been lost sight of, and Presbyterian professors of theology and Episcopal bishops forget the doctrines of predestination and apostolic succession, and unite in the great aim of the Alliance, the awakening of an interest in evangelical work throughout the country.

The motto of the Alliance is "Unum corpus sumus in Christo"(We are one body in Christ), and its spirit pervades the whole gathering. Three sessions are held each day and the programs of each include the reading of papers, addresses and discussions on relevant subjects, with interspersions of music and songs, in which everybody joins. It is both a spiritual and intellectual treat to attend the sessions of this assembly. The papers read as well as the addresses made are weighty with thought and beautiful in diction, having been carefully prepared by men of wide information and profound erudition. And as I said before, the spirit manifested by the entire body is excellent. It must be comforting to Dr. Schaff, the apostle of the movement for the closer unity of the churches, to look over this assembly and think of the time not many years ago when such a gathering would have been impossible. I believe a divine messenger, sent on an errand on swiftest wing, would be tempted to pause for a moment over this Christian Conference and view the heavenly scene.

At noon on Monday last the flags were raised over both wings of the Capitol for the first time since the close of the Forty-ninth Congress. Promptly at twelve o'clock the gavels fell in both the Senate and House of Representatives, and the new Congress, called to order, was ready for roll call.

In the House end, just as the reading clerk was about to proceed, a man arose in the northwest gallery and with uplifted hands began to sing the Doxology in a plaintive voice. The House was greatly amazed, and every one began to laugh. At first it was not known from whence the singing came, but the vocalist was soon discovered, and the sergeant at arms hastened after him,while for about ten minutes there ensued a perfect bedlam of noise and confusion. Before the officer arrived at the scene of the song, the singer had finished the Doxology and resumed his seat. Thus the usual opening proceedings of the House were varied, while the Senate started off in its usual dignified way. The man was taken to the station house. In reply to the question, "Why did you sing?" he replied, "To praise God; such assemblages should not be opened without praise to the Redeemer." He was trying to reach the souls of members through their ears.

The man proved to be a noted enthusiast by the name of Patrick Dugan, who had had many curious experiences. At the opening of the Brooklyn Bridge he tried to preach to the crowds assembled, until carried off by the police, and on various other public occasions whenever and wherever he could find an audience. His attempt to convert Congress, however, was the biggest thing he has undertaken, and his failure was no more than he expected. *

SABBATH REFORM.

At a meeting of Protestant pastors in this city on Monday the 28th ult. to consider how to overcome the prevalent Sabbath desecration, Rev. Dr. C. E. Mandeville, whose able address at the Elgin Sabbath convention was one of the features of that meeting, presented several papers. They were voted to be presented to the meeting of the Evangelical Alliance at Washington last week, with the recommendation that they be laid before Congress by a committee from that Alliance meeting.

The first paper said that but for Sabbath desecration there would be no such class as anarchists in this country. It called for a union among the church people to down the demon of Sabbath desecration. The proposed plan strikes at every form of labor now indulged in on the Sabbath day. The ministers propose to petition Congress to enact laws first to dispense with carrying the mails and holding post-offices open on the Sabbath. The paper is addressed to the House of Representatives assembled, and says: "The telegraph is now used to transmit all important news, and therefore there is no absolute necessity for running mails on the Sabbath. Consequently the running of mails on that day is in violation of State laws."

The next paper is addressed to the directors of the railroads of the United States and says: "The increased rate of speed of travel and transportation, as compared with that used in the days of our fathers, has so multiplied the facilities of despatching business that there is no necessity of running trains more than six days in a week, and that, therefore, all work done on Sabbath, except of necessity and mercy, is in violation of our State laws, so that if a community of capital openly ignores statute laws we need not be surprised when a community of laborers follows their example."

A paper to the directors of telegraph lines says: "The electric forces now utilized by our telegraphs have brought the people of the world into close proximity, and therefore there is no more necessity for transacting business by telegraph on the Sabbath than there is for people to keep their stores open."

The last paper is addressed to the proprietors of the public press of the United States, and says that "the Sabbath is the dividing line between Christianity and heathenism; that it is the bulwark that shields our Christian civilization against anarchy, and that every influence that tends to weaken the power of the Sabbath over the public conscience endangers the stability of our Republican institutions; that the business of publishing and selling newspapers on the Sabbath is in open violation of our State laws. We, therefore, respectfully request you to discontinue the publication of newspapers on the Sabbath."

REFORM NEWS.

MISSISSIPPI AND ITS CHURCHES.

CALEDONIA, Miss., Dec. 8, 1887.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—My stay in Meridian, Miss., was not very profitable because of my ill health. I should have said of that thriving little city, not only that it is prospectively a "dry" town, but that it is already under prohibition, and that the law is enforced there with greater strictness than in Jackson or in almost any other town in the State. I left there on Dec. 1, at 10:30 P. M., and reached Columbus at 3 A. M. of the 2d. I was able to make but few calls in that city. Rev. Jordan, pastor of the largest colored Baptist church, who has been Deputy Grand Master of the A. F. and A. M., I found to be firm in his opposition to the lodge system, but somewhat disheartened through opposition and much affliction. Rev. C. E. W. Dobbs, D.D., pastor of the leading (white) Baptist church, and editor of the Southern Baptist Record, has also seen the inside of the lodge and learned to abhor its follies and blasphemies. He expressed a warm interest in our work and a hope that he might be able to attend the New Orleans convention. I have rarely found among Southern pastors a man of more courage and unfaltering integrity than this faithful preacher and editor.

On Saturday I found a ride to Bro. Tapley's (thirteen miles) and received a cordial welcome. On the way I observed that all the cotton was picked, at least a month earlier than usual, and of better quality than had it remained out longer. The crop was about the average. This, together with a better corn crop, makes the people more comfortable. There has been great scarcity of water and some suffering, but the heavy rains of the last few days will remedy that evil. Secret societies have for several years been at a discount in all this region, but recently the Farmers' Alliance has been introduced in place of the Grange, which had become about extinct. The new-fangled order which, from all I can learn, is only a new name for the same thing, is having quite a run, and gives promise of a similar career.

Bro. Tapley I found in better health than a year ago, and pursuing his missionary and reform work with a fair measure of success. His family, including the mother, are all away at school, and sister I. D. Feemster has kindly come here to keep house for us while I remain.

Sabbath was rainy and I kept quiet. Monday, the 5th, was clear and warm, and I preached at night in the Piney Grove Congregational church, to a small but interested congregation.

On Wednesday was the annual meeting of the Associated Churches of Christ for Lowndes county. The place of meeting was Simon's Chapel, nine miles distant. The rain came down steadily, but the good mule pulled us steadily on, and though thoroughly wet, we were not seriously harmed. We met a few and had a pleasant meeting. Rev. Eli Tapley was chosen moderator, and I had the honor to be secretary. Representatives from five churches were present. After prayer the following resolutions were taken up and after brief discussion were adopted without dissent:

Resolved, That we greatly deplore the prevalence of the secret lodge system as alike injurious to the cause of Christianity and to a just civil government. We rejoice at the growing opposition to this system of iniquity, and trust that the time is not far distant when all the churches and the ministry will "have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness, but rather reprove them."

WHEREAS, The use of, and traffic in, intoxicating drinks are a great obstacle to the cause of religion, and a most fruitful source of poverty and crime, therefore,

Resolved, That we will favor all wise and Christian methods to prevent their use, and all legal ways to stop their sale.

Resolved, That we regard with profound interest the work of the W. C. T. Union and the National Prohibition party, and we hold that their final triumph is among the objects for which Christians should earnestly labor and pray.

WHEREAS, In the faithful preaching of God's Word there is the highest, if not the only hope for the uplifting of all classes of society in their social, moral and religious conditions, therefore,

Resolved, That such preaching should be Scriptural, prayerful and plain—should appeal to men's reason and aim at convincing the judgment, correcting the morals and sanctifying the hearts of those who hear. Above all, the preacher should be a faithful embassador of Christ who will not shun to declare the whole counsel of God.

A collection was taken up for Bro. J. L. Pollard, who had acted as lecturer during the last year, and the convention adjourned to meet at the same place July 27, 1888.

Providentially the rain abated and we drove home before thick darkness came down upon us, and a night's rest made us forget the cold and storm. My health has improved and my heart has been cheered since I came here and take courage to go around.

H. H. HINMAN.

CURED BY THEIR OWN MEDICINE.

ADRIAN, Mo., Dec. 5, 1887.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—At last writing I was at Messer, Kansas. My last meeting there was interesting. At the close a United Brethren M. D. came forward along with a Mason and asked who gave me the privilege of using the school building for such lectures. I was putting up my books, selling some expositions, and paid no attention to his impertinence. Then he demanded more fiercely by what right I had occupied the building. I answered, by the same right that the whole neighborhood had come into their own building and sat and listened to me. He retorted that no one but a lot of cranks would listen to such a discussion of secretism. This was a slam at the audience and they quickly resented it by hisses and groans. This infuriated the M. D. and he advised me in language more forcible than pious that it would be well for me to get out of that section and be in a hurry about it.

This straightened me up. I looked the would-be U. B. straight in the eye and told him quietly that I never got in a hurry on an occasion like that; to please excuse me; I did not ask such chaps as he what I should say, how or when I should say it. The crowd took in the situation, and so did the M. D., as he hastily retreated amid the hoots of all present, except perhaps three or four.

The Mason who had used profanity against Charles Francis Adams in my meeting the night before, then stepped up and wanted to ask me one question. It was: "Are you a Mason?" I answered, "Try me!" At this he began to fume about perjury. I stopped him short by saying, "Every time you open your mouth you are violating your obligation. You were sworn to keep silence. That is the jewel of a Mason and you've lost your jewel bad."

In confusion he blurted out to the amused crowd, "I aint said nothin'." This was too much and the crowd fairly roared with merriment. All this was after the meeting proper had been dismissed. Men said they would go any reasonable distance to hear more, and are anxious for me to speak again.

I spent the stormy Saturday and the Sabbath in Carthage, the guest of Bro. J. K. Glassford, and other friends. Monday, Nov. 28, I came to Adrian. The train was delayed, so I tarried at the hotel over night and on Tuesday morning I met our good Bro. T. A. Cook, who presided at the late Greenfield district meeting. We immediately planned a week's campaign and were soon speeding over the country on two swift, high-spirited ponies. By night a schoolhouse was filled and the campaign under way. Our work here has been a complete success and we leave our brother and co-worker to give the particulars. And now I am off for Kansas. Yours for the truth,

M. N. BUTLER.

CORRESPONDENCE.

NOTES FROM A WEST AFRICAN MISSION.

MISSION OFFICE, SHENGAY,
West Africa, Oct. 14, 1887.

MY GOOD FRIEND:—In answer to your kind offer of August 17, I answer that we shall gladly accept of any and all assistance that we can get to push forward the great work. As to being firm in our opposition to the secret lodge and every other system of wickedness, we are obliged because of the nature of things to take a decided stand against them. There can be no neutral position with us, as the ceremonies of all the secret orders here are the most ridiculous nonsense, obscene and wicked, if what I hear of them be true. I have never joined any, but what I have seen I know to be so. Our field is an important one because the enemy is here in force—rum, secrecy, idolatry, slavery, and polygamy. A few tracts might be used to good advantage, mostly on temperance.

The great mass of the people here cannot read and are very ignorant. An educated man who can speak the Sherbro and Mendi language, and who is familiar with the secret societies and customs of the country, by traveling through the country and lecturing on the subject would surely do much good.

By far the greatest amount of good would be accomplished by establishing a home for women where the wives and mothers of the country can be trained in the ways of Christianity. A few girls have been trained in this mission; some of them are married, and are now in the mission work with their husbands. But we are not training girls now; a mission debt has to be paid before we can take girls again. In my judgment it is the only way of laying a foundation for mission work. A grant of land can be had and buildings put up where a large number of females could be cared for; with a good native man and his wife in charge, they could support themselves after the first year. Mrs. L. B. Curtis taught a school for us at the town of Mannoh for six years and did a good work. She held morning and evening worship and conducted a regular service twice on Sabbath, besides a Sabbath-school. Mrs. Thompson, a daughter of Bishop Crowther, is conducting a very successful small school at Senehoo. She conducts morning and evening worship in her house. Many of the people of the village attend.

The English government have lately taken possession of this district and many of the slaves are claiming their freedom, and many young girls are left without a home or friend and no work to do. These are used to farm work and could support themselves from the soil by making palm oil. The English authorities do not care to interfere with domestic slavery, as it is termed, and it is only when the domestics apply to them that they are set at liberty. Female domestics are always preferable here as they can be used on the farm or in the house. They are often rented or hired out to men and used as wives, gambled off or exchanged for goods. A young girl is with us in the mission now that was on the eve of being sent to the Soo Soo country for a cow, but made her escape to the British officer. She knows nothing of her parents. There are many women in the same condition, drifting about, begging for food and shelter. Yours very truly,

JOSEPH GOMER.

THE W. C. T. U. AND SECRETISM.

SENECAVILLE, Ohio, Dec. 2, 1887.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—I have just read in the New York Pioneer an account of the great gathering in Nashville, Tenn., of notable and noble women from almost every State and Territory of our Union, representatives of the "National Woman's Christian Temperance Union." I was deeply interested in their proceedings, so far as given, and especially with the annual address of the president, Miss Willard; and nothing pleased me more than her free and fearless declaration, "I have always been opposed to secret societies, and never more so than today. They are a relic of medieval times, and destined to become extinct," etc.

The women are doing a noble work against the rum power, and deserve all the assistance and encouragement we can give them; and when this matter is finally put to rest, and the cruel reign of alcohol is at an end, then the mass of the people will be sober long enough to think of, and work for the removal of another great and growing evil, that threatens to rule and ruin church and state, and is doing it so slyly that many persons seem not to be aware of what is going on in the dark. Oath-bound secretism, Masonry and its kindred orders, all clannish and dangerous institutions, should not be tolerated in a civilized country, and yet, to a great extent, they control the society and business of this "land of the free and home of the brave."

This unsearchable and irresponsible power, in its multifarious and divided departments, must be looked into and lashed out of the land. Good men have been trying to do this for some years past. Much light has been let in upon this darkness, but the mass of the people yet seem to be indifferent about its being and power. But we hope it will not be long till the good women of the land beat the saloon, then they will have some leisure to muster and concentrate their forces upon the lodge; and when the women engage in this fight and lead the voting force—of which we hope they will soon become an integral part—then the men, who cannot defend their cause here, will gracefully yield.

We would not have our sisters diverted from their present high calling, but when the proper time comes, which will certainly come before many years, and we hope it will not amount to years, then we shall have this cancer cured by soft hands and soothing kindness, and foolish men, instead of deserting their wives and families every few nights, will stay at home for company and comfort to those they promised to defend and cherish until death. And young men will spend their evenings to better advantage elsewhere than in the secret lodge.

This is written in haste, but is the result of serious thought, frequent prayer, and honest conviction of an aged man and minister of the Gospel of Jesus. May God help us all to do right, and unite to oppose and put down all manner of wrong, is the earnest prayer of the writer, WM. G. KEIL.

NOTE.—The W. C. T. U. has forty departments of work, with National and State superintendents for each. Many of these, as heredity, social purity, the morality of the press, etc., are not more nearly connected with temperance than the lodge issue. What the N. C. A. is anxious the Union should do is to add a department on secretism; and to this end Miss Flagg of Massachusetts has been laboring, and we believe not in vain. We doubt the success of prohibitory laws in the hands of the lodge.—ED.

GOD HELP US TO BE TRUE.

LINCOLN, Kans., Nov. 12, 1887.

EDITORS CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE:—Why do men who are members of secret societies object to reading your works? And why do so few leave the lodge after knowing its workings and its effect on the individual?

1. In joining a secret society a man is obliged to sacrifice his individuality, and so feels that he is personally attacked whenever the lodge is. This is also the reason they are so loyal to it, because they have sacrificed themselves in order to comply with its requirements.

2. So few leave, also, because they are not always approached with the right spirit. The day of the "crank" is past. Much more can now be accomplished in the way of "reform" by appealing to men in the name of their manhood, to leave the lodge and "quit themselves like men." Too often we find the would-be reformers more anxious for notoriety than to really benefit their fellowmen, and possessing but very little of the spirit of Christ, who went about doing good. Those who oppose secret societies are sometimes those who "Atone for sins they are inclined to,

By damning those they have no mind to."

With some it is a question of respect. This is certainly contrary to the teachings of Christ, who was no respecter of persons, and always condemned sin wherever found. Oh, that we had more of the spirit of Christ, so that we could heal as well as convict.

Secret societies and organized selfishness are synonymous. Their benevolence and charity is all a lie, and is "stealing the livery of heaven to serve the devil in." It is living a lie, and as a lie it is doomed. Oh, that the lies and glitter might be trampled under foot. Men are tired of fashions and mystery. We long to read the soul. Too long have we been disguised. We want the curtain thrown back. The motives that so hoodwink us we would abandon forever, and, wrapped in nothing but our own plain cloak from God, stand alone if need be, but without pride or selfishness. "Where shall we find one who has pandered to no policy, or employed no undue tact to win somebody's favor?" Yet sometimes, when our longings beat heavenward, the soul ascends and "dwells apart;" for a moment it flutters like a lost bird, and then, with a joyful, tender throb, it wings its way back, through "the flight of years," until, like the guiding star of old, it lingers over the "manger of Bethlehem," Christ, the world's Saviour—but no password gains admittance to the Lord of glory. Without having taken the first degree, he is triumphant among men; with no vain titles—a quiet, humble life that has unbounded love for us and asks nothing more from us.

May God help us to turn our eyes toward him, and this question of secret societies will be solved. May all ministers of the Gospel be "true as God's own stars," in standing for principle. This age admits of no excuse for not living a purely Christian life. Sin always has been and always will be doomed. May God broaden our conceptions, quicken our sense of duty, and help us to be true. B. S. HULL.

PITH AND POINT.

WHY DO NOT THE PRESBYTERIAN PAPERS SPEAK?

I value the paper very highly, and am doing all I can in the cause it advocates, both for prohibition and against secret societies. But I am advanced in life and retired from the active duties of the ministry, and have no means of making money. I have been doing all I can in circulating Finney "On Masonry," the Morgan book and "Ma-Ha-Bone." The Masons are all angry, and doing all they can against me; but I think a vast amount of good is being done. When I meet them they look sullen, but I think they feel ashamed and vexed that their silly and profane and wicked laws and ceremonies are now generally exposed. Indeed, I have been told that they feel vexed and ashamed, too. I would like to know why our Presbyterian papers are silent—the Presbyterian Banner, New York Observer, St. Louis Evangelist, Philadelphia Presbyterian? Do they not know that these things should be exposed, or are they afraid of losing subscribers?—J.F.F., Union, Mo.

HOW TO HELP CIRCULATE THE "CYNOSURE" IN THE SOUTH.

I have been thinking that it would be a good thing if some of the poor ministers, or all of them, white or black, would send their address to your paper, that we who have quite a number of papers could send them, after reading, and in that way do a great deal of good. I should be glad of the chance to help free the people from immorality as much as I can. I gave three of my best years to set the colored man free from slavery, but the bondage of sin is worse.—H. P. MARKS, Rockford, Illinois.

THE LODGE CARES FOR THE AGED WHEN THEY HAVE MONEY.

I am in my seventy-sixth year, and have taken the paper from the commencement until now, and expect to while the good Lord spares my life. It would be hard for me to do without, for I want to keep track of the Freemasons and Odd-fellows, for they have nearly ruined me, cheated me out of $5,000 cash. But my trust is in the living God, having the promise that everything will work together for good.—E. MARCY, Emporia, Kans.

FROM A MARYLAND PASTOR.

I read it [the Cynosure] for three years at Westminster College (1872-1875), and learned to love it for its bold, true ring on the secret society question, as also the rights of the down-trodden. I give the societies a hard rub when a good chance offers.—H.G.M., Govanstown, Md.

Who would have believed it a dozen years ago—that California, where heavy drinking was more common than in any State of the Union, would in 1887 have a young city with an iron-clad prohibition ordinance. And yet Pasadena has passed just such an act, and a fellow has to have a mighty big pain, and tell the druggist all about it, before he can get two fingers of whisky. The world moves.

"If you don't want to traffic with the devil, keep out of his shop." So said one of the old Puritan fathers. It is as good a proverb to us as it was two hundred years ago. The devil has many shops about us and he is luring thousands of Christians, young and old, into them, well knowing that he is pretty sure to induce some to traffic with him, if he can get them once on his ground and on speaking terms with him.

It is encouraging to friends of temperance to learn that the use of the grape for unfermented wine is greatly increased. One town in New Jersey reports 6,000 gallons made this year. Those who have in charge furnishing wine for sacramental use, can now get an article both safe and agreeable. Do not fail to consider the weak brother for whom Christ died. Allow no snare to be laid for him at the Lord's table.

Prohibition has lost Atlanta, but it has gained a vast territory where least expected, in the North Sea. The six Powers bordering on the North Sea have come to an international agreement that no spirits shall be sold to fishermen and men on board fishing vessels; that they be forbidden to buy spirits; that exchange of goods by them for spirits be equally forbidden; and that vessels peddling supplies to fishing vessels shall not be allowed to sell liquors. Most admirable! but why is not that good for the land which is good for the sea?

THE CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE.

PROSPECTUS FOR THE TWENTIETH YEAR.

As we turn over the leaf for another year the Cynosure would again write at the top of the new page: "Christ always; Christ only." It will more than ever be the purpose of all connected with the paper to make it a power for the coming kingdom of our Lord, before which all the systems of secret worship, mystery and iniquity of the great Babylon must fall. We would be on the CONQUEROR'S side in that day—we will stand for him now in the days of testimony and of tribulation.

THE CYNOSURE during 1888 will give the most earnest attention to the South. The National Convention at New Orleans, Feb. 17th, and the effort, which promises so much success, to put

of the paper into the hands of colored pastors gives a direction to our interests. We also hope that the National Christian Association will be able to put other workers into the Southern field.

The Minor Secret Orders, so-called, will have more respect given to their insinuating and benumbing influence. If Masonry and Odd-fellowship have felt severely the attacks upon their strongholds,they are making good all losses by training up an army of young men whose convictions are paralyzed in respect to secretism by the swarms of orders which cover their modicum of lodgery with a bait of temperance, insurance, patriotism, good fellowship, business aid, etc., etc. The Cynosure will endeavor to rouse our careless churches to see that this evil is likely to be worse than the first.

We have nearly completed arrangements for special Correspondence from the metropolitan cities in different parts of the country. Our readers may expect letters once a month,or oftener, from Boston, New York, Philadelphia, Washington, Cincinnati, New Orleans, Denver, San Francisco and Los Angeles. These letters will give graphic pictures of the earnest American life which throbs in our great cities, with especial reference to the news of the lodges in each.

The very popular Biographical Work of the Cynosure during the three years past will be continued with some features which will be especially attractive. During the last year there have appeared portraits of George B. Cheever, William H. Seward, Daniel Webster, John Brown, Charles Sumner, Charles Francis Adams, Enoch Honeywell, Bishop Hamline, Charles G. Finney, Howard Crosby, Dr. C. F. W. Walther, and Alexander Hamilton. These portraits have been accompanied with sketches which have presented facts of profoundest interest to our discussion, collated after diligent and often exhaustive search. We can promise for the coming year biographies of

JOHN G. WHITTIER, the Poet.
JOSEPH COOK, the Lecturer.
JAMES MCCOSH, the Philosopher.
JOHN C. SPENCER, the Lawyer.
JOHN MARSHALL, the Judge.
WILLIAM EWART GLADSTONE, the Statesman.

These are all in preparation. Others whom we do not care at present to mention are in contemplation, whose portraits will adorn the paper and the history of whose lives will enrich them.

Letters from foreign lands we expect to be more frequent and valuable in 1888 than ever. Correspondents in England, Germany, Greece, Turkey, India, West and South Africa, China and Mexico will through our columns be in personal connection with our readers.

Best of all is the noble company of contributors and correspondents in our own land. We hardly need mention them; but it is a pleasure to see these goodly names in print. Here are a few of them:

William F. Davis, the hero of Boston Common.
H. L. Hastings, editor of the "Christian."
Hon. S. V. White, M. C.
Rev. B. A. Imes, Vice-president Nat'l. Cong'l. Council.
Pres. H. H. George, Geneva College.
Rev. C. C. Foote, Detroit.
Geo. W. Clark, the singer.
Bishop M. Wright.
Pres. E. H. Fairchild, Berea College.
Cecil H. Howard, Astor Library.
Rev. Julius Grunert, D. D., Evangelical Synod.
Rev. Wm. Johnston, D. D., United Presbyterian.
Rev. B. Cunz, German Lutheran.
Rev. B. W. Williams, Texas.
Elder J. L. Barlow, Iowa.
Pres. C. A. Blanchard, Wheaton College.
Rev. David McFall, Chambers St. Church, Boston.
Rev. C. W. Hiatt, High St. Church, Columbus.
Prof. Elliott Whipple, Wheaton, late of Romona Institute, Santa Fe.
Elder Nathan Callender, Pennsylvania.
Pres. L. N. Stratton, Wheaton Theological Seminary.
Rev. Henry T. Cheever, Worcester.
Rev. Joel Swartz, D. D., Gettsyburg.
Miss E. E. Flagg, Author of "Between Two Opinions."
Mrs. M. A. Blanchard, Wheaton.
Mrs. A. E. Kellogg, Denver.
Hon. S. C. Pomeroy, Washington.
Hon. Halleck Floyd, Indiana.
Rev. W. H. French, D. D., Cincinnati.
Rev. M. A. Gault, Iowa.
Rev. J. M. Foster, Cincinnati.
Rev. J. S. T. Milligan, Kansas.
Rev. William Wishart, D. D., Monmouth.
H. M. Hugunin, former editor "Chicago Eve. Journal."
Capt. A. D. Wood, editor "Censor," Los Angeles.
Rev. R. N. Countee, editor "Living Way," Memphis.
Prof. A. R. Cervine, Augustana College.
Rev. H. W. Lathe, First Church, Northampton.
Rev. J. F. Avery, Mariners' Temple, New York.

But we must forbear. Who can recall these and other names like them without a thrill of happy and grateful recollections. To keep in their company a season were —"worth ten years of common life."

We invite all friends of the past to honor themselves by remaining in this company. The Cynosure gives you a noble fellowship. You can hardly afford to forsake it. Let your name then be found on the list. Do your neighbor a good turn and get his subscription also.

IN ADVANCE $1.50 PER YEAR. Address, the "CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE" Chicago.

THIS IS WHAT WE MEAN.

TO SAVE THE COLORED BAPTISTS FROM THE LODGE.

READ WHAT IT WILL AMOUNT TO.

Rev. Richard De Baptiste, Corresponding Secretary of Galesburg, Ill., says the American Baptist, has spent two years in carefully gathering statistics. He shows 26 institutions of learning for colored Baptists, with 252 teachers and 3,609 pupils, though 6 institutions did not report the number of pupils. Total value of property, $1,072,140, 3 institutions not reporting. The religious status is shown as follows: 300 District associations; 10,068 churches; 6,605 ordained ministers; total baptisms, 48,212; total membership, 1,155,486; Sunday-schools, 3,304, Sunday-school officers and teachers, 10,718; Sunday-school pupils, 194,492; value of church property, $3,036,571; contributions reported for salaries and expenses, $230,445.51; for missions, $23,253 67; education and other matters, $47,899 96; making a total of $301,978.14. There are forty journals edited and controlled by colored Baptists. From these statistics Alabama has 110,798 colored Baptists; Georgia, 159,690; Mississippi, 114,756; North Carolina, 106.977; South Carolina, 100,286; Virginia, 187,119; Louisiana, 70,657; Texas, 69,950; Kentucky, 55,033; hence in nine of the Southern States alone there are 986,266 colored Baptists, or about two-thirds of the entire number.

WHAT A GLORIOUS MISSION

To help to keep this vast body of Christians out of the lodge maelstrom! This is what we mean by asking for $1,500 to send a thousand copies of the Cynosure one year to these colored Baptist pastors. Hundreds who have read the paper have been led to take a stand for Christ against this lodge unrighteousness, and to preach and faithfully warn their people. Let us help them, dear friends. Last week we reported fifteen of the hundred $15 shares in this fund taken. This week we can say gladly that EIGHTEEN shares are taken. More and better next week.

THE NEW ORLEANS CONVENTION FEBRUARY 17 TO 20, 1888.

We call attention to a letter from a New England clergyman in the present Cynosure. The editor proposes, in the early spring, after the National Christian Association Anniversary in New Orleans, to join this able and much respected clergyman, and the two together, hold meetings in every church in Vermont, of any and every denomination, which will allow us to preach on the relation of secret societies to the cause and kingdom of Christ.

Please communicate with the Cynosure on the subject of such a visitation. Vermont is historically the most hopeful field in the United States. Her people cast the vote of the State for Wirt and Ellmaker; and if a few leading clergymen will unite and take a stand in favor of such a discussion the people are ready.

The author of this letter is well known, has been pastor of a large church for years, and is highly esteemed. Please communicate with the Cynosure or its editor soon.

"BE NOT WEARY IN WELL DOING."—Those who build up a reform, and stand by a despised society like the American Missionary Association, in its days of weakness, deserve its honor and confidence when it has become a power for good in the land, and its hundreds of dollars have become huudreds of thousands. But a few get in the lead whose "principles are seven," as John Randolph said, viz., "five loaves and two fishes," and straightway men like A. H. Quint march to the front and pluck the fruit they so ill-deserve, whose whole past history is such as to make the righteous sad, while the wicked clap their hands in triumph. But noble men still live, and while Maine has a Neal Dow and hosts of brave men and women and the "Lord reigns" we will not despair. We rejoice and bless the Lord for every hour he has given us power and disposition in the past to work for the A. M. A., and for every dollar he has enabled us instrumentally to add to its funds. May it prove faithful to its charge of the Indian, the Freedmen, and the Chinese, and receive His benediction who says, "Blessed is he who considereth the poor." If we have any poor, the above three classes must certainly be counted in.

THE SONS OF VETERANS.

Most people are ignorant of what precisely these are.

1. They are an "order" composed of men above 18 years old if sons of soldiers, or over 21 if sons of members.

2. They are to be a perpetual order, provided with officers to hold, lease, and manage real estate.

3. They are a secret order. Not only are members forbid to "divulge any of the private affairs of the order," but twice a year their head man issues a pass-word in secret cypher which the members cannot read.

4. It is auxiliary to and under the rules of the G. A. R., and is, in fact, the secret Grand Army made a perpetual secret order.

5. Its professed objects are care of the sick and to "keep green" the memories of our citizen soldiers; yet women are excluded.

6. Members are subject to taxation at the discretion of the "camp."

7. Falling in arrears forfeits membership.

8. The head body charters the local bodies, and the chief officer can take away a charter and quash the body.

9. A camp of 1,000 or more members is allowed but three of the rituals for officers. The members are allowed none.

10. It has adopted a "coat of arms," like the English titled aristocracy.

11. It declares its secrecy to be unimportant, which is falsehood and hypocrisy.

All the above can be seen in printed Constitution, Rules and Regulations. In short, it is an attempt to form by a secret lodge an hereditary order such as was suppressed by the advice of Washington.

Financially it is a swindle. As a society it is a fraud on the public, as would be a secret section in a family. It is made up of voters, yet discards "politics;" is in a Christian country, yet discards religion; while it corrupts both: and is, in short, a substitute for and cover of the falling Masonic lodges which are sinking under discussion.

AMERICAN POLITICS.

Our chairman of the National American Committee very sensibly advises, "By no means give up the American party." "We have all the party and all the organization we ever had." The Cynosure endorses Chairman Capwell's advice: "If the Prohibition party nominates men clean of the lodge, vote for them."

John B. Gough, St. John, Gen. Fisk, Miss Willard, and Vice President Henry Wilson, not to mention the now sainted Dr. Marsh, personally assured the writer that they are opposed to the secret rituals, and Dr. Charles Jewett did the same in his book. We are earlier prohibitionists than the Prohibition party. We wish to swell the prohibition vote to the uttermost. If there should be three or four candidates next year, as in 1824, when Adams, Jackson, Clay, and Crawford were running; and there should be no election by the people, and it should go into the House of Representatives, we have some chance for a reform President next year.

But the presumption is that the Democrats will elect their man; which will be better than that reform should succeed by a weak vote. Reform against the lodge and liquor needs the overwhelming majority which sustained Lincoln. General Fisk will be the Prohibition candidate. He sustains three characters with those who know him, viz.: statesman, general, and Christian, and stands well in each. Col. Bain of Kentucky is an excellent man, and is said to be sick of the temperance lodges. But Fred Douglass "never would join a secret society; not even that military concern." These are his words.

Now the Cynosure is in favor of a side mass meeting in New Orleans next February 17th. By that time it will be indicated who are to be the reform candidates for President and Vice President, and we are in favor of appointing a committee to ask every presumptive candidate whether he belongs to any secret society? and whether he approves of the open American methods of the Prohibition party and the W. C. T. U.; and if the Prohibition leaders equivocate or insist on running a party, part secret and part open, then we are in favor of forthwith calling a national convention to meet the week after the Prohibitionists nominate in Indianapolis, June 8th, and inviting every true-hearted Prohibitionist to forsake so absurd and hopeless a party, and join us in nominating and voting for Americans. What say the friends of the American cause? Let us meet and act promptly at New Orleans.

DR. THOMAS, PRELATE AND GRAND CHAPLAIN.

Rev. Thomas E. Green of this city is a lover of sensations. He was the object of great notoriety two years ago when he left the Presbyterians for the Episcopalian fold; and since he has been rector of a small West Side church he has once and again, though not himself a Mason, opened his church for the Knight Templars to perform their so-called religion. It is especially agreeable to the lodge to receive such favors from one not sworn to be of their own number; and as a token of their satisfaction a presentation of a lectern was lately made to Mr. Green. Mr. George B. Coffin, formerly leader of the Apollo quartette, and now one of the instructors in the Congregational Theological Seminary of this city and "Eminent Commander" of St. Bernard Commandery of Knight Templars, and Dr. Thomas, Grand Chaplain of the Grand Lodge, officiating. The former began the ceremony thus:

"Reverend sir, I am deputed by representatives of Apollo, Chicago, and St Bernard Commanderies. Knights Templar, who have visited your superb church home to-night, to present you with a slight token of the esteem and regard we bear you for the services you have rendered us. We have selected our esteemed frater, the Rev. Dr. H. W. Thomas, who is Prelate of the St. Bernard Commandery, to make this presentation, and he will now speak for us."

The speech of the Grand Chaplain is thus reported:

"My Brother: It is always pleasant upon occasions of this kind for Christians to come together. Particularly is this true of the present church and Masonry. Masonry antedates Christianity by many thousand years. Masonry proper rests upon pure theism—an ever present and all-abiding faith in an ever-living God, overruling all and in all. Masonry proper is the law and Knight Templary is the gospel. They represent Christianity, and they have adopted many forms peculiar to Christianity. We have in our order beautiful liturgies that are imposing and impressive. I admire the service of the Episcopal church. I am especially pleased to see the children here in the service. But we have a liturgy of consecration in the Knights Templar that is most solemn and impressive. More so than any other I have ever known.

"I present you with this beautiful token of my brothers' love and esteem. It represents St. John, the evangelist. The eagle is his emblem, because it soars to the highest. It holds a book which you, my brother, I know, read with the greatest love and reverence. And I trust you will accept the gift in all the love in which it is given."

We remember when Dr. Thomas was expelled from the Methodist church, it was in evidence against him that he rejected such portions of Scripture history as suited his notion. The lodge is welcome to such an excellent authority for proof of its antiquity. Dr. Thomas knows all about it. The "pure theism" of Masonry is more reliable, for that is all the theology Dr. Thomas preaches. It is the same which heathen philosophy has always taught; and the law and Gospel of the lodge, according to the oft-repeated saying above, is as faras this false prophet has gone toward Christ.

SHALL THE GOSPEL BE FREE IN BOSTON?

The brief review of the history of attempt to enforce an obnoxious city ordinance in Boston, which is given in another department, will call the attention of many of the Cynosure readers to the case of Mr. Davis. He is incarcerated in cell 18, Suffolk Jail, Charles street, with fewer privileges than were enjoyed by the anarchists here in Chicago. Mrs. Davis, a most faithful, conscientious woman, fit consort for a brave man, fully sustains her husband. She is allowed to visit him only once a week, on Thursday, when she is allowed a ten minutes' visit in the presence of an officer. To serve out the fines and costs of $350 on four charges Mr. Davis's imprisonment will continue nearly a year. He could obtain his release probably at any moment, by promising to not again violate the ordinance. This he will never do, for he is a man of conscience. It was a disappointment that he was unable to take the case to the United States Supreme Court, but through some legal technicality this is denied. He therefore remains in his cell, Bible in hand, endeavoring to bring all whom he can reach to a knowledge of Christ. It is quite probable that when the legislature meets, if not before, a public effort will be made toward securing a repeal of the ordinance which, in one sense, forbids free speech in the streets of Boston. The testimony of Joseph Cook at a recent meeting of Boston clergymen is having much influence in the case. Said Mr. Cook: "I protest against the lawless use of the law and against the law itself. Let me say, as a traveler, that after making a tour of the world, Boston is the first city I have heard of, either on heathen or Christian ground, in which the preaching of the Gospel is followed by arrest. I would like both Protestants and Catholics to preach on the Common. I would not even arrest the agitator, except in time of tumult. The action of the city has brought us into disrepute even in distant lands. Mr. Davis was my college mate. I have known him for a quarter of a century. Very tender memories connect themselves with him under the Cambridge elms. He was then what he is now, a man of supreme conscientiousness and decisive strength. You say he is a man lacking in judgment, or he would not run squarely against the ordinance. Perhaps he is farther-sighted than some of us; perhaps he is more courageous. I am for keeping arbitrary power out of the hands, not only of the Catholics, but of Protestants themselves. If the liberty tree on Boston Common is to fall, let it be by the hands of the whole people, not the will of a clique in our city hall."

—Rev. R. N. Countee, editor of the Living Way, Memphis, writes to Secretary Stoddard that he will be ready to answer at the New Orleans convention, and speak on "Why I Joined and Why I Left the Lodge."

—Bro. H. H. Hinman went on from Columbus, Miss., where he addressed his last letter, to Memphis, where he remains for some days. He purposes then to go through a portion of Arkansas, and then south to New Orleans.

—Rev. W. W. Kelley, who not long since returned with broken health from a self-sustaining mission in southeastern Africa, has lately suffered for a second time the loss of a beloved wife. She died suddenly of heart disease on the morning of December 1st.

—Bro. W. B. Stoddard, the Ohio Agent, still has a strong hand on the crank and begins again to put the machinery in motion. He went Friday to Utica in Licking county to work with Bro. Caleb Lyons. His reports for a time intermitted will begin again next week, God willing.

—Rev. R. Hardie, of Mellette, Dakota, is suffering from paralysis to an extent which renders his arms and limbs numb. Bro. Hardie is husband of the author of the pamphlet, "A Woman's Victory." We sincerely unite with the Wesleyan Methodist in prayer that he may be healed.

—Senator Pomeroy writes us that the publication of his speech in Munyon's World does his testimony against the lodge injustice, since a great part of what he said on that topic is omitted. But there is enough inserted to let every reader know that the speaker was on Christ's side of the lodge question.

—Letters are often received at this office saying that the writer has been a subscriber to the Cynosure since its first number. It is a happy suggestion of our publisher to secure a full list of these original subscribers and let us see how they look in kind of honor roll. Old friends, please send your names.

—It is a note we can make with the greatest satisfaction that because of the late generous contributions to the Foreign Fund our publisher has sent over seventy pounds of anti-lodge publications to Bombay, India, to be scattered widely through the immense Indian empire. May a blessing go with every page.

—Bro. W. T. Ellis, editor of the Fire and Hammer, Los Angeles, Cal., writes that one of the churches of that city has expelled its elder for adhering to the secret order of the A. O. U. W. (United Workmen). When judgment thus begins at the house of God, there is much hope that the world will be blessed by such Christians.

—Bro. Samuel Simpson, of Garfield, Whitman county, Washington Territory, asks for tracts to distribute after some meetings, promised about the holidays by a seceded Mason. They will be sent, along with our prayers and best wishes for the success of the effort in the far Northwest. Who do you expect to lecture, Bro. S.? Please write more about it.

—Bro. I. R. B. Arnold returned Friday to his family in Wheaton from a Wisconsin trip in the vicinity of Waupun. He lectured during the time, by special invitation, before the inmates of the penitentiary, and gave his illustrations of the philosophy of ancient and modern heathen systems to a fine audience in the Genesee Wesleyan church near Oakfield.

—We have been hoping for a good letter from Beloit, Wisconsin, giving some report of Bro. Arnold's two lectures on false religions, reproduced in Masonry before the students of Beloit College. The addresses were heard with deep interest and doubtless was seed sown in good ground. These two lectures ought to be given before every institution in the West.

—Rev. Wm. J. Reid, D. D.,so long the First Clerk of the United Presbyterian General Assembly, has been chosen to take the place of the late lamented Dr. Kerr as editorial manager of the United Presbyterian. He will also contribute articles on special subjects. Dr. Reid is pastor of the First U. P. church of Pittsburgh, and author of a book defending the distinctive principles of the church. We trust he will prove a worthy successor of Dr. Kerr.

—During his journeyings Bro. Arnold found a Baptist pastor, a Freemason, who was led to see clearly the religious origin and affinity of the lodge through the illustrated lectures, and privately avowed his purpose to openly renounce Masonry at the first opportunity. Another interesting case is that of a Methodist pastor and his wife in Wisconsin, who, on general Christian principles, are strongly opposed to secretism, although never having given the subject special investigation.

—A call from Mr. A. E. Burt, of New Haven, Michigan, last week, has given us a personal acquaintance with a gentleman of an interesting character, whose experience with the lodge has been somewhat peculiar. He was persuaded, by friends who represented themselves to be non-Masons, to send in his application for membership with a $5 fee. The objections of his parents (his father had been a Mason) and the subsequent knowledge that the pretended friends belonged to the lodge, made him halt, and after some inquiry, to refuse to follow his money into bad company. His study of the order has been wholly from a legal and constitutional standpoint, and he has consented to write out for our readers some of his conclusions, and is ready to answer calls to lecture. Since Bro. Day, president of the Michigan Association, reports $50 in the State treasury, would it not be well to put it to good use and give Mr. Burt a chance to enlighten some dark corners of Michgan?

—Elder A. B. Oyen, a prominent Seventh-day Adventist, has followed D. M. Canright in a renunciation of the tenet and its fellowship. He was at one time a missionary to Europe, and editor of the Danish paper.

—At the Lutheran synod recently held in Richmond, Ind., a gift of $30,000 was reported to found a theological seminary, and the synod by resolution decided that hereafter users of tobacco will be debarred from positions in their theological institutions.

—Bishop Tuttle, writing from Salt Lake City to the Spirit of Missions, twenty years after his arrival there, says: "I have lived to see the imperious arrogance of Mormonism bite the dust, although deep-seated, obstinate rebelliousness remains." During his one month's visit he had confirmed fifty persons, of whom twenty-five came out of Mormonism.

THE HOME.

THAT I MAY KNOW HIM.

Lord, let me talk with thee of all I do,
All that I care for, all I wish for too.
Lord, let me prove thy sympathy, thy power,
Thy loving oversight from hour to hour!
When I need counsel let me ask of thee:
Whatever my perplexity may be,
It cannot be too trivial to bring
To One who marks the sparrow's drooping wing;
Nor too terrestrial, since thou hast said
The very hairs are numbered on our head.
'Tis through such loopholes that the foe takes aim,
And sparks unheeded burst into a flame.
Do money troubles press? Thou cans't resolve
The doubts or dangers such concerns involve.
Are those I love the cause of anxious care?
Thou canst unbind the burdens they may bear.
Before the mysteries of thy word or will,
Thy voice can gently bid my heart be still,
Since all that now is hard to understand
Shall be unraveled in yon heavenly land.
Or do I mourn the oft-besetting sin,
The tempter's wiles that mar the peace within?
Present thyself, Lord, as the absolving priest,
To whom, confessing, I go forth released.
Do weakness, weariness, disease, invade
This earthly house, which thou thyself hast made?
Thou only, Lord, canst touch the hidden spring
Of mischief, and attune the jarring string.
Would I be taught what thou wouldst have me give,
The needs of those less favored to relieve?
Thou canst so guide my hand that I shall be
A liberal, "cheerful giver," Lord, like thee.
Of my life's mission do I stand in doubt?
Thou knowest, and canst clearly point it out.
Whither I go, do thou thyself decide,
And choose the friends and servants at my side.
The books I read I would submit to thee,
Let them refresh, instruct, and solace me.
I would converse with thee from day to day,
With heart intent on what thou hast to say;
And through my pilgrim walk, whate'er befall,
Consult with thee, O Lord, about it all.
Since thou art willing thus to condescend
To be my intimate, familiar Friend,
O, let me to the great occasion rise,
And count thy friendship life's most glorious prize!

THE SECRET OF A VICTORIOUS LIFE.

The words of the Apostle Paul are among the most precious legacies bequeathed to the world by great men; a legacy which derives its main value from the fact that it conveys that which was, in its origin, a gift from heaven. But quite as valuable as Paul's words is Paul's life. Those eloquent and powerful statements of truth which all subsequent generations have carried in their consciences and hearts would lose half their force if there were not behind them the impulsion of one of the noblest lives ever lived upon the earth. The single-hearted devotion to duty, the fearlessness, the noble temper, the patience, and the self-sacrifice of that life constitute one of the supreme achievements of history. For it is in character, and in character alone, that the supreme achievement is to be found. Not in great works of architecture, nor in great books, not in great statesmanship nor in great social movements, is to be found the supreme achievement of which men are capable; a noble character remains among all the activities and attainments of men the one supreme and final success; that which neither time nor misconception nor detraction are able to diminish or destroy.

The eagerness with which men turn to the stories of such lives as that of Paul is almost pathetic. They look away from their own failures and infidelities and sins to such a life, and find comfort in the fact that some man has really lived the life which each man would like to live in his best hours. The supreme disappointment of life does not come from any feeling that a particular object has not been attained, that the fortune so long worked for has never been secured, the fame so eagerly chased never overtaken, the great position so untiringly sought for never attained, but from the consciousness that in the battle of life one has been defeated; that, instead of mastering the difficulties and calamities and obstacles which surround every man, one has been mastered by them. The great satisfaction, the supreme comfort which springs from such a life as Paul's comes from the consciousness that here was a man who overcame every obstacle, and instead of being mastered by the things which seemed against him, triumphed over them. His was a life outwardly all defeat, inwardly all victorious. It appeals to and satisfies the inward aspiration of every one; for each of us feel that just such a life belongs to him; that we were not made to be baffled and beaten and vanquished, but to conquer and overcome, and to emerge from the struggle victorious against all odds.

The secret of a great life is never difficult to find. When Savanarola was brought to the rack, and his persecutors listened eagerly for the secrets they were about to wring from him, the reformer could only reply in his agony: "My secrets are few, because my purposes have been great." Paul's purposes were great, and his method therefore was transparent. Everything was against him, as men look at life. He stepped aside from the career which was open to him, and which promised the realization of the ambition of a Jew; he expatriated himself; he was a wanderer on the face of the earth; outcast, persecuted, rejected, despised, and finally put to death. All things conspired against him, and yet in the face of all these obstacles no one reads his life with any other conciousness than that here was a great and eternal victory. This man, with all the world against him, defeated the world, and calmly held it at bay. And this great result was achieved, not by tricks, nor by persuasion, nor by great gifts of minds, but by a tremendous conviction and a life held steadfastly true to that conviction. Paul belonged to his time and to the world in which he found himself; but neither the time nor the world gave him his conviction nor his unconquerable energy of spirit; these things came to him from heaven. He conceived of life, of the world, and of society, not as things which should sustain and support him, but as affording opportunities for the outgo of his energies. He did not look to men for his purpose, for his strength, or for his consolation; for all these things he looked to God. It was a matter almost of indifference to him that men rejected him and spurned him and persecuted him. So long as he had the consciousness of a divine work to do, and of divine strength to accomplish it, he cared little for human aid or help. The world was to him simply the field in which his work was to be accomplished; he did not look to it for the rewards of that work. He belonged to his fellows for all service and helpfulness, but they could neither appoint his task nor reward him when it was finished. Like trees, he was rooted in the common soil; but, like them, light and heat, and the dews and rain which give foliage and strength, came from heaven. Here is the secret of his life, and here is the only secret by which such success as his can be attained.—The Christian Union.

GOOD WORDS FOR CHRISTIAN WORKERS.

[Dr. Pentecost in Words and Weapons.]

It is as natural for saved people to come together in church relations as it is for sheep to flock together. When we see or know of a "professor of religion" going in a crowd by himself and refusing to give and receive church fellowship we cannot help thinking of a goat.

"A hearing ear is better than a jewelled ear." We often think of this when we see the diamonds sparkling in the ears of the fair, but careless women. Anent of this we wonder how many women who wear a cross of gold around their necks or swinging at their girdles are really taking up the cross of true discipleship and following Christ.

At the cry of the blind beggar, the Sun of Righteousness was brought to a standstill in the midheaven of his love, that the poor beggar might receive his sight. That Sun of Righteousness is as near and ready to stop and flood the soul of any sinner with light to-day as he was when he wrought his ministry of love on the earth two thousand years ago.

It is said that in the first ages of Christianity, Satan sought to destroy the church by persecution and failed; but that, when he joined the church and patronized it with worldly power and prosperity, he succeeded in well nigh smothering the life out of it. It looks much as though he had succeeded in retaining his membership in some of the churches of the nineteenth century.

The young minister who has not read and studied the sermons and writings of John Bunyan, Flavel, Charnock, Thomas Adams and Henry Smith, has lost a treat and passed by mines of spiritual truth which he is not likely to come up with in a thousand modern books. After being in company with these old masters of the Word, ordinary books and sermons seem like the veriest skimmed milk.

A brother who has been spending a few weeks in the country, tells of his experience in going to church, which has not been very satisfactory. He says, "We had forms for worship and chopped hay for sermons." The one is a weariness to the flesh and the other is starvation to the soul. If ministers of the Gospel would only realize that in every congregation there were souls who came to worship God in spirit and in truth and hungry to be fed on bread from heaven, they would certainly see to it that their forms of worship where instinct with the spirit of praise and prayer and their sermon throbbing with life from the living and Spirit breathing Word. Forms for worship and dull platitude for sermons will soon dry up the life of any church and turn it into a sepulchre of hypocrites.

Sometimes we think the Holy Ghost is only needed to furnish men to do spiritual work; but we are reminded that in choosing of the first deacons to attend to the temporal and material interest of the church, called the "serving of tables," the disciples were directed to choose "men of good report, full of the Holy Ghost and wisdom, whom we may appoint over this business." Perhaps the reason why most church quarrels and disagreements grow out of questions and matters affecting the formalities, is because we are not careful to seek the presence and power of the Holy Ghost here, as well as in what we are pleased to call the spiritual interests and concerns of the church. Is not everything that appertains to the church of God a spiritual interest; and ought not everything be done in the power of the Spirit, from the building of the meeting-house to the preaching of the sermon in it?

If any person or persons make a proposition to hold a fair, or festival, or bazar, or broom drill, or any other worldly device for getting money for the church this winter, move to amend by substituting a protracted meeting for the preaching of the Gospel to sinners.

Suppose that from now until the first of March twenty thousand of the churches in our land should give themselves to earnest protracted revival work, among the people, who could predict the glorious result?

Are you engaged in any pursuit, are you planning any pleasure, are you indulging in any practice which you have not spread out in prayer before God, seeking his wisdom and approval and fellowship with you in it? Remember that we are one with him in all that pertains to our life as well as in life itself. No doubt if there were more unreserved conference with God the Holy Ghost as to all the affairs of our life there would be many changes, frequent modifications and not a few abandonments of plans and pursuits.

There is a great difference in the confession of sin on the basis of one's own consciousness and the confession of sin on the basis of God's Word. The first is like the necessary admission which a criminal makes to himself concerning his crime; but the second is like that criminal voluntarily coming into court and giving himself up to the law, making a full confession. There are thousands of sinners who are ready to say, "Why, yes, I am a sinner," whom you can by no means get on their knees to make that confession to God and accept from his Word the sentence due to and passed upon sinners. This is just the difference between true penitence and daring sinfulness.

The Book of God is a store of manna for God's pilgrim children; and we ought to see to it that the soul get not sick and loathe the manna. The great cause of our neglecting the Scriptures is not want of time, but want of heart, some idol taking the place of Christ. Satan has been marvelously wise to entice away God's people from the Scriptures. A child of God who neglects the Scriptures cannot make it his business to please the Lord of glory: cannot make him Lord of his conscience; ruler of the heart; the joy, portion, and treasure of the soul.

Unconverted people usually take their estimate of Christianity from the backslidden and apostate professors of religion with whom they have to do, rather than from those Christians whom they know and who adorn the doctrine of Christ. This is in part because it suits them to do so, and in part because a backslidden Christian is so conspicuous a witness though a false one; and partly because those Christians who, while they give no bad testimony by their outward lives, fail to give a positive testimony by their lips, which would be taken at par if backed up as it would be by their consistent living.

THE WINTER NAP.

By mid-October most of the Rip Van Winkles among our brute creatures have lain down for their winter nap. The toads and turtles have buried themselves in the earth. The woodchuck is in his hibernaculum, the skunk in his,the mole in his; and the black bear has his selected, and will go in when the snow comes. He does not like the looks of his big tracks in the snow. They publish his goings and comings too plainly. The coon retires about the same time. The provident woodmice and the chipmunk are laying by a winter supply of nuts and grain, the former usually in decayed trees, the latter in the ground. I have observed that any unusual disturbance in the woods near where the chipmunk has his den will cause him to shift his quarters. One October, for many successive days I saw one carrying into his hole buckwheat which he had stolen from a near field. The hole was only a few rods from where we were getting out stone, and as our work progressed and the racket and uproar increased the chipmunk became alarmed. He ceased carrying in, and after much hesistation and darting about, and some prolonged absences, he began to carry out; he had determined to move; if the mountain fell, he at least would be away in time. So by mouthfuls, or cheekfuls, the grain was transferred to a new place. He did not make a "bee" to get it done, but carried it all himself, occupying several days, and making a trip about every ten minutes.

Insects also go into winter quarters by or before this time; the bumble-bee, hornet and wasp. But here only royalty escapes; the queen mother alone foresees the night of winter coming and the morning of spring beyond. The rest of the tribe try gypsying for a while, but perish in the first frosts. The present October I surprised the queen of the yellow-jackets in the woods looking out a suitable retreat. The royal dame was house-hunting, and on being disturbed by my inquisitive poking among the leaves she got up and flew away with a slow, deep hum. Her body was unusually distended, whether with fat or eggs, I am unable to say. In September I took down the nest of the black hornet and found several large queens in it,but the workers had all gone. The queens were evidently weathering the first frosts and storms here, and waiting for the Indian summer to go forth and seek a permanent winter abode. If the covers could be taken off the fields and woods at this season, how many interesting facts of natural history would be revealed! The crickets, ants, bees, reptiles, animals, and for aught I know, the spiders and flies,asleep or getting ready to sleep in their winter dormitories; the fires of life banked up and burning just enough to keep the spark over until spring.—From Winter Sunshine, by John Burroughs.

SOMEBODY'S MOTHER.

The woman was old, and ragged, and gray,
And bent with chill of the winter's day;

The street was wet with the winter's snow,
And the woman's feet were aged and slow.

She stood at the crossing and waited long,
Alone, uncared for, amid a throng

Of human beings, who passed her by,
Nor heeded the glance of her anxious eye.

Down the street with laughter and shout,
Glad in the freedom of school let out,

Came the boys like a flock of sheep,
Hailing the snow piled white and deep,

Past the woman so old and gray,
Hastened the children on their way.

Nor offered a helping hand to her,
So meek, so timid, afraid to stir,

Lest the carriage wheels or horse's feet
Should crowd her down in the slippery street.

At last came one of the merry troop,
The gayest laddie of all the group.

He paused beside her, and whispered low,
"I'll help you across, if you wish to go."

Her aged hand on his strong young arm
She placed; and without hurt or harm

He guided the trembling feet along,
Proud that his own were firm and strong.

Then back again to his friends he went,
His young heart happy, and well content.

"She's somebody's mother, boys, you know,
For all she's old, and poor, and slow;

And I hope some fellow will lend a hand
To help my mother, you understand,

If ever she's old, and poor, and gray,
When her own dear boy is far away."

And "somebody's mother" bowed low her head
In her home that night, and the prayer she said

Was "God be kind to the noble boy
Who is somebody's son, and pride, and joy."

GREAT THINGS FROM LITTLE.

Edward Everett Hale tells this tale of the Revolution: There was a little, lame blacksmith's boy, who, because he was lame, was obliged to remain at home when all his companions went to join Gen. Stark and fight the Hessians at Bennington. They had been gone but a little while when some soldiers galloped up, and asked if there was anybody at home. "Yes," Luke said; "I am here." "What I mean," said one, "is there anybody here who can shoe a horse?" "I think I can; I will try." So he put the shoe on the horse quite thoroughly and well. And when it was done, one of the men said, "Boy, no ten men who have left you to-day, have served your country as you have." It was Colonel Warner. When I read, Mr. Hale goes on to say, in the big books of history of Col. Warner riding up just in time to save the Battle of Bennington, I think of Luke Varnum. When I see monuments in memory of Col. Warner, and Gen. Stark, and even Burgoyne, I think of Luke Varnum. And often I think, "Does not every boy who does his duty have the future of the world upon him?" Had it not been for Luke Varnum's work that day, perhaps the battle of Bennington and of Saratoga might have gone otherwise. Did you ever think that on the hinge of a baby's tear hung the destiny of the world? We are here, perhaps, to-day, because of a tear that once glistened on a baby's cheek. It was the weeping of the little Moses in the bulrushes that touched the heart of Pharaoh's daughter, so that she had him taken to her home and nursed and trained in all the learning of the Egyptians. In the court of Egypt, he was prepared to become the forerunner of Christ, and the leader of God's chosen people. How little we know what any smallest act of our own may do! Who are you and I that we should pick and choose when we do not know what may come out of the little things God sets against our hands? Certainly we should not have had the perfect example of Christ had he not stooped for us to the noble doing of each daily duty. Do you not see how this daily life of yours may be God's mission for you, if only in it you will seek to do, as Jesus did, even the least things that the Father sets against your hand?

TEMPERANCE.

THE REPUBLICAN PARTY AND PROHIBITION.

I asked Senator Palmer this morning if it was true that he had made a prohibition speech at a meeting of Republicans in Detroit last week, as reported in the newspapers.

"No," he replied, "I didn't make a speech. There was a gathering of Republican leaders in our State for the purpose of consulting upon means and measures for the partv welfare,a sort of experience meeting, you might say, and I made a little talk which surprised some of our people."

"Did you come out in favor of prohibition?"

"I did."

"Did you advise the Republican party to take up the prohibition issue and make it its own?"

"Exactly so."

"Was your speech fully reported?"

"It was not."

"Would you mind telling me precisely what you said?"

"I have not the slightest objection. It was a little informal talk or consultation, as I have told you, and, while I cannot recall the exact words, what I said was that this question, which is already a cloud even larger than a man's hand, is soon to overshadow the whole sky; the gage had been thrown down to us in the last election and inquisition applied to all candidates by the saloon element demanding from them an expression of views on the whisky question that amounted to pledges. The Republican candidates who made these pledges were discriminated against by the temperance people, and those who did not were slaughtered by the liquor influence. I said that I believed in taking up the gauntlet thus thrown down, and, as a party, coming out on one side or the other of this question. Whenever the Republican party has asserted a great principle regardless of the immediate apprehensions and warnings it has always won; and the question now is whether we should take the lead in the prohibition movement or come in at the tail of the procession.

THE WAR ISSUES DEAD.

"Although a great majority of the Republican party regard those questions which the war developed of great interest—such as the rights of the Negroes in the South, the freedom of the ballot,and an honest count at the polls—a generation has come up which knows not Joseph, and new fuel is required to stir them up to the enthusiasm that existed when the Republican party achieved its greatest success. It is absolutely imperative that we have some great moral or sentimental issue to hold the Republican party together. I use the word sentimental in its highest sense. The tariff alone won't do,and I know of no other question that appeals to the homes and the hearts of the people of this country like the temperance question. I do not pretend to be a total abstainer myself, although a temperate man, but the question is whether whisky is going to run this country or the sober judgment of the people who are not under its influence.

"The strength of the Republican party is its weakness. By that I mean that the convictions of the individuals, the sentiments of its component parts, must be aroused and unified on some supreme idea in order to get the thinking men of that party to act together. You have to fire them with some great purpose or they will scatter. Each man thinks for himself, and I believe that the sentiment of the Republican party, the great majority of it, is already in favor of adopting the prohibition issue at State elections, and that within six years it will be compelled to adopt prohibition as a national issue. That is about what I said to our people at the meeting."

"Was there any dissent from your views?"

"Considerable. I noticed that most of our people dislike the use of the term prohibition,and they were nearly all in favor of stringent legislation to regulate the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquor. They don't want to join the Prohibition party. The animosity toward some of the prohibition leaders, growing out of past campaigns, has made the name and the organization distasteful."

"How many men were present at this meeting?"

"There were about one hundred representative Republicans from all over the State of Michigan."

"How did your colleague, Senator Stockbridge, stand?"

"He coincided entirely with my views. I was surprised that he went as far as he did, but he believes as I do, that the strong should be willing to go without whisky rather than the weak should be overcome by it."

"How about the Congressmen? What stand did they take?"

"Congressman Allen is, practically, a prohibitionist, and he took very strong grounds,but believed in our present local option law. There was some opposition to my suggestion coming from honest,earnest temperance men who opposed it on the ground that all sumptuary legislation, so called, is contrary to the spirit of our institutions.—Correspondence Chicago Daily News.

BLAINE ON WHISKY AND TOBACCO.

The New York Tribune correspondent in Paris cabled the views of Hon. J. G. Blaine on the President's message last Wednesday night, in which that Republican leader expressed the following singular views on whisky and tobacco:

"Then do you mean to imply that you would favor the repeal of the tobacco tax?"

THE TOBACCO TAX.

"Certainly—I mean just that," said Mr. Blaine; "I should urge that it be done at once, even before the Christmas holidays. It would in the first place bring great relief to growers of tobacco all over the country, and would, moreover, materially lesson the price of the article to consumers. Tobacco to millions of men is a necessity. The President calls it a luxury, but it is a luxury in no other sense than tea and coffee are luxuries. It is well to remember that the luxury of yesterday becomes a necessity of today. Watch, if you please, the number of men at work on the farm, in the coal mine, along the railroad, in the iron foundries, or in any calling, and you will find ninety-five out of one hundred chewing while they work. After each meal the same proportion seek the solace of a pipe or a cigar. These men not only pay the millions of the tobacco tax, but pay on every plug and every cigar an enhanced price which the tax enables the manufacturer and retailer to impose. The only excuse for such a tax is the actual necessity under which the government found itself during the war and the years immediately following. To retain the tax now, in order to destroy the protection which would incidentally flow from raising the same amount of money on foreign imports, is certainly a most extraordinary policy for our government."

THE WHISKY TAX.

"Well, then, Mr. Blaine, would you advise the repeal of the whisky tax also?"

"No, I would not. Other considerations than those of financial adminstration are to be taken into account with regard to whisky. There is a moral side to it. To cheapen the price of whisky is to increase the consumption enormously. There would be no sense in urging the reform wrought by high license in many States if the National government neutralizes the good effect by making whisky within reach of every one at twenty cents a gallon. Whisky would be everywhere distilled if the surveillance of the government were withdrawn the remission of the tax, and illicit sales could not then be prevented even by a policy as rigorous and searching as that with which Russia pursues the nihilists. It would destroy high license at once in all the States. Whisky has done a vast deal of hurt in the United States. I would try to make it do some good. I would use the tax to fortify our cities on the sea-board."

RELIGIOUS NEWS.

—Rev. Dr. John Williamson, of this city, gave to the Methodist ministers at their weekly meeting, a few days since, a wonderful experience which he had the past year. He is the pastor of Michigan Avenue church, and a year ago his health was so bad that his physician told him he would have to rest at least a whole year. It was with great reluctance that he agreed to do this; it was the greatest sacrifice of his life. Some months afterward this weighed on his heart so much that he cried aloud unto the Lord for divine aid. Dr. Williamson stated that at that time he held a sweet and indescribable communion with God, in which he was assured that his health would be restored. His physician had but recently assured him that he was as well as he ever was before, and he ascribes this wonderful cure entirely to divine healing. The relating of Dr. Williamson's experience caused quite a sensation, and many there were who agreed with him that it was an example of Divine healing.

—Mr. Spurgeon's secession from the Baptist Union of London, on account of the growing laxity of the churches composing it, has been followed by a withdrawal of a number of prominent clergymen of like conservative ideas.

—Rev. W. H. Brewster of Benton Harbor, Mich., has resigned, in accordance with a purpose entertained for some time. Having been ordained in 1839, he begins to feel the weight of advancing years and is desirous of laying aside the burdens of the active pastorate. His people are very averse to accepting his resignation, and an effort will be made to so lighten his labors as to enable him to continue. Mr. Brewster was pastor of the College church, Wheaton, for several years previous to 1872.

—In Augusta, Maine, where Dr. G. F. Pentecost has been laboring, the merchants closed their stores at 6 P. M., except on two days, to allow attendance of employes on the evening meetings.

—Rev. M. W. Montgomery, general Congregational missionary among the Scandinavians in this country, has returned from a three weeks' stay in Utah where he has been investigating the religious situation and needs of the 40,000 Scandinavians in that Territory, nearly all of whom are Mormons or seceders from that apostate church.

—Rev. S. H. Kellogg, who has spent fifteen years in faithful home missionary labor in Minnesota, has removed to California. His address will be Los Angeles.

—Dr. Justin D. Fulton is still delivering his series of lectures against Romanism, and was recently attacked by a mob in Biddeford, Maine, which stoned the hall and drove the lecturer away. Dr. Fulton, however, has returned to Biddeford, by invitation of the Protestant clergymen of that city and Saco, and has begun another series of lectures on the same subject.

—It is gratifying to know that the Water Street Mission, New York, founded by the late Jerry McAuley, is still prospered as a means of usefulness. At its fiftieth anniversary, held on a recent Sunday, the Rev. Dr. Parkhurst presented, in an address, the grand work done in both the McAuley Missions. All along the line of Christian workers the name of Jerry McAuley still gives inspiration in the great duty of recueing the perishing.

—Bishop Hurst says 8,000,000 of Indians in Mexico have never seen a copy of the Word of God.

—The first Christian church in the Congo Free State was organized in November of last year, and there are 1,062 converts in the Congo mission.

—Madagascar is almost a miracle of missionary triumph. The native Christians of that island have given more than $4,000,000 for the spread of the Gospel during the last ten years.

—The Bloomington, Illinois, Presbytery has a singular case on its hands in the shape of a church at Sidney composed entirely of women. They raised the money and built a neat little chapel and dedicated it practically free from debt. There being no male members to hold the offices, the Presbytery is endeavoring to complete the organization by electing elders. If they cannot find some male members they will have to let women take the places, which is what the women want.

—The Women's Foreign Missionary Society of the M. E. church has, in the past year, accepted twenty-three young ladies for missionaries.

—Dr. Munhall held a meeting for men only in the Doan Music Hall, Cleveland, Sabbath evening, Dec. 4. Some 3,000 were present, and at the close 400 rose to say that they renounced sin and accepted Christ. A yet larger number rose to signify their desire to be saved through Christ.

—A dispatch from Pittsburgh says that D. L. Moody, the evangelist, closed a series of three week's meetings in Pittsburgh Sabbath night. Two to four meetings have been held every day, except Saturday, and the Central Rink, seating some 3,500 persons, has been full at every meeting. On some occasions thousands have been turned away. The ministers of the city have been thoroughly united in this series of meetings and all bear testimony to the faithfulness with which the evangelist has preached the Gospel. No attempt has been made to number the persons converted, but the result will be a large accession to the memberhip of all the churches. The press of the city has given full and interesting reports from day to day, and some of them have published the sermons in full. Twelve or fifteen thousand attended the services on the last day. Mr. Moody returned Monday to his home at Northfield. After the holidays he will spend a month in Louisville, where a tabernacle seating 5,000 people is being built for his use. After leaving Louisville Mr. Moody will spend the rest of the winter and early spring on the Pacific coast.

LITERATURE.

CHRISTIAN LIBERTIES IN BOSTON. A sketch of recent attempts to destroy them through the device of a gag-by-law for Gospel preachers. Written and published by Wm. F. Davis, evangelist, and sold by H. L. Hastings, 47 Cornhill, Boston.

The struggle for constitutional and Gospel rights waged on Boston Common for several years, is more or less familiar to all readers of the American religious press. For several years evangelists like Bro. Davis, who feared God rather than men, have preached to respectful crowds who gather on the Common. Not until 1885 was there any serious interference under the city statutes forbidding such preaching. In that year the police made a descent on the Common and their net fell around large fish. Not only were Bro. Davis and some speakers from the Salvation Army taken in, but also H. L. Hastings, editor of the Christian, and Dr. A. J. Gordon, the eminent Baptist pastor. A few minutes before the secretary of the Y. M. C. A. had opened the meeting by declaring their purpose to make a test case against a vicious and unconstitutional city law. Dr. Gordon and the Y. M. C. A., however, fainted in the day of battle, paid their fine and let rights and wrongs take care of themselves on Boston Common. Not so did their fathers in the early days of that historic spot. But Bro. Davis has continued to preach every season. This year he was again arrested, and refusing to pay the fine, has been for weeks in jail. This book is a history of this battle. We wish it might be read by every hearth-fire in America. It would open many eyes to see the dangers that lurk for our liberties in rum-ruled, lodge-ridden legislation and courts. H. L. Hastings was fined $30 for simply reading three chapters of the Bible aloud on the Common. The same judge fined a man who made at the time, a little disturbance of this peaceable Gospel meeting, a paltry $3. Is Boston—is America willing to unread the noble apostrophe of Mrs. Hemans to the Pilgrims:

> "Ay, call it holy ground,
> The soil where first they trod,
> They have left unstained what there they found—
> Freedom to worship God?"

Shall we own the rule of degenerate days, and let the devil have his way with the rights of the public worship of God? Truly does this volume point out the evil counsel of the lodge in all this business. "Their intercourse," says the writer of the authors and abettors of the gag law, "with each other is by private winks, and signs and passwords, and grips, and plots, and secret meetings. By these means they devise, on the other hand, how to gratify their appetite for riches, and praise of men, high-sounding titles, foppish regalia, expensive dinners, after-dinner flattering speeches, vain parades, and whitewashed sepulchers. Whatever names these men may apply to themselves, they are really members of the Catholic, Apostate, Cainish, Sodomite, Balaamite, Nicolaitain, Romish, Rumish, Jesuit, Mormon, Masonic, Tobacco, Satanic church. From such separate thyself."

THE STUDENT'S MANUAL. By Rev. John Todd. Pp. 198. Price 25 cts. John B. Alden, New York.

If old Dr. Todd could know how many young men have blessed his memory for the past fifty-two years for this volume his soul would rejoice in the power God gave him to write. Over 300,000 copies of "Todd's Student's Manual" have probably been sold in English, besides numerous translations. The work is commonly considered unequalled in our literature, in the peculiar field which it occupies. It is an inspiration and a delight, a mine of practical wisdom to thoughtful, earnest-minded readers, and well deserves to be in the hands of every student, and of all who desire to become such in the best sense of the word. Were the old gentleman now living there would be a new edition with a chapter on college secret societies. He wrote years ago of these pests: "Unhesitatingly I give my decided disapprobation of what I deem secret societies in college and elsewhere." This edition is by far the finest we ever saw, and the price is about one-fifth the old rate.

The December Century opens with a frontispiece portrait of Lincoln from a photograph made about the time of his inauguration, which event is the subject of the present part of the Lincoln History. The narrative begins with Mr. Lincoln's departure from Springfield, and includes an authentic account of his farewell to his neighbors and of the speeches made at Indianapolis, Columbus, Steubenville, Trenton, Philadelphia, and Harrisburg. An exact statement of the facts in regard to Lincoln's secret night journey through Baltimore is given, accompanied by unpublished letters from Seward, Scott, and General Stone. Prof. Charles W. Shields, of Princeton College, contributes an important and interesting paper, entitled "The United Churches of the United States," being a review of the Century letters on Christian Unity. In summing up he says: "Never were the signs as well as the needs of such union more apparent, never was the feeling so deep and growing that the divisions in the Christian church must somehow come to an end." Mr. Kennan's second paper deals with the "Prison Life of the Russian Revolutionists," and answers the question, What is the specific nature of the wrongs which call forth, especially among the youth of Russia, such manifestations of fierce, passionate hatred for the Tsar, and which inspire such persistent and desperate attempts to take his life? An illustrated paper on "The Sea of Galilee" is contributed by Edward L. Wilson. The narrative is the result of personal observation and experience in Palestine, during which Mr. Wilson made a large number of photographs, which have been utilized in illustrations which accompany the article. The Tonic Sol-Fa System of writing and teaching music is similarly the subject of two short papers, one by Theodore F. Seward in advocacy of it, and describing its remarkable growth in England, and another, more critical, by Mr. H. E. Krehbiel, musical critic of the New York Tribune, whose conclusion is that the system is admirably adapted to the study of harmony and singing, but ill adapted to the study and practice of instrumental music.

The December (Holiday) number of the English Illustrated Magazine is an unusually attractive one. The full-page illustrations, of which there are no less than fourteen, among them a portrait of Rembrandt, by himself, Potato Planting, Study of a Head, from a drawing by Sir Frederick Leighton, and a portrait of Philip IV. The illustrated article, "The Sea of Galilee," by Laurence Oliphant, is of great value and interest. The writer has made careful explorations about this remarkable historical spot, and the result of his personal study of the site of cities, and of the rock-hewn homes of the robber bands whom Herod overthrew, is most entertaining. "Ornithology at South Kensington Museum," is another illustrated article of much interest. The continuation of Prof. Minto's story of England in the time of Wickliffe reveals to the animated reader surprising pictures of life and manners at that day. American readers will have little interest in the notes of old English coaching, or in the prolix theatrical article, though both are profusely illustrated.

The readers of St. Nicholas for December will read first the story of "Three Miles High in a Balloon," by a St. Louis reporter who ascended with others last June. The account is fascinating and so are the pictures, but the writer makes a serious mistake in telling of the loss of Donaldson in Lake Michigan and the reporter of the Evening Journal who went with him. Donaldson was attached to Barnum's show, and the ascent was made from the Lake front, Chicago, just before night. Frank R. Stockton administers a salutary little lesson to both young and old in one of his admirable stories, "The Clocks of Rondaine," the first part of which appears in this number; while J. T. Trowbridge gives an account of "How the Hart Boys Saw Great Salt Lake," which, with some exaggerations, gives a striking picture of some of the drawbacks in the Utah climate.

Every one needs a calendar for the New Year, and will appreciate the elegant one designed and engraved on steel for Messrs. Doliber, Goodale & Co., of Boston, Mass., who will mail it to any one upon receipt of ten cents in stamps or cash. It is one of Lowell's finest steel plate engravings.

Science for December 9 contains a resume of an elaborate paper on "The Corset," read before the Brooklyn Pathological Society by Dr. R. L. Dickinson. It is a remarkable exhibit of the physiological evils chargeable to the use of this fashionable engine of female suicide.

LODGE NOTES.

The Good Templar lodges all held a memorial service for J. B. Finch, Dec. 4, and took up collections to build him a monument. If Anti-masons had let him alone, the lodge would not be so anxious to vindicate his memory.

The convention of the Chi Phi College Fraternity met in Philadelphia. The sessions were secret. The following institutions were represented: Universities of Ohio, Virginia, Georgia, California, Yale, Vanderbilt, Lehigh, Franklin, and Marshall; Rennsalaer Polytechnic, Stevens Institute, Lafayette, Rutgers, Amherst, and Dickinson Colleges.

The forty-first annual convention of of the Theta Delta Chi fraternity was held at the Park Avenue Hotel in New York. Delegates from sixteen colleges and universities were present. The proceedings were secret, and continued several days.

At the late meeting of the Illinois Grand Lodge of Odd-fellows, Gen. J. C. Smith, Lieutenant Governor of Illinois, was re-elected Grand Scribe.

A report was submitted by a special committee of tho Indiana Grand lodge proposing the establishment of a home for the aged and indigent Odd-fellows of Illinois Indiana, Michigan and Wisconsin, and recommended its adoption. The motion when put was defeated by a heavy majority.

There were a few months ago 60,000 colored Knights of Labor in the United States; but since the massacre of the blacks in Louisiana the lodges will be turned out and broken up.

Local Assembly No. 7,143, composed of cane, whip and umbrella makers, of Philadelphia, has withdrawn from the Knights of Labor, and its members have formed an open Union.

At the final session of the District Assembly, Knights of Labor, of London, Ont., after a lengthy discussion, a resolution was passed urging secession from the United States General Assembly and the forming of a General Assembly for Canada, the latter body to have complete and unrestricted powers to adjudicate on all questions and business connected with the order.

ALDEN'S IDEAL Revolving Book-Case.

It is an elegant piece of furniture, finished in the natural wood, made of well-seasoned white walnut, the standard being of iron, on which the shelves revolve, even when loaded with a hundred pounds weight, as easily, almost, as a dinner-caster; the whole is mounted on casters, to move easily about the room. It is made in two styles, which are identical, except as to size:

No. 3 has three shelves, giving about 84 inches of shelf-room. The total height from floor, 35 inches; weight about 30 pounds. Price $7.00.

No. 4 has four shelves, giving about 112 inches total shelf-room. The total height from floor, 44 inches; weight about 35 pounds. Price, $9.00.

The prices named are those to be charged at furniture stores. The Literary Revolution does not care to sell Book-cases except as an accommodation to its Book-buying friends; to those it will supply as follows:

For $10.00 a No. 3 Ideal Revolving Book-Case, and books of your own selection from my catalogue of the value of $6.00.

For $15.00 a No. 4 Ideal Revolving Book-Case and your own selection of books from my catalogue of the value of $10.00.

The Ideal Revolver Hits The MARK EVERY TIME!

"I think it a most excellent thing of its kind, simple, compact, just the thing for a small study. I am greatly pleased."—MAURICE THOMPSON, Crawfordsville, Ind.

"The Revolving Book-Case is a wonderful expedient for economizing space, time, and patience."—A. G. EICHELBERGER, Woodbury, Conn.

"The revolver is 'simply immense;' a superb piece of 'study' furniture. I show it to my friends with pleasure."—G. D. LINDSAY, Allegheny, Pa.

"It is a very neat and convenient piece of furniture, just the thing for a small study. This Revolving Book-Case would prove an acceptable gift to many a book-loving pastor—especially if well filled with some of the publisher's beautiful books."—Guardian, Philadelphia.

"Book-Case is at hand. I assure you I am delighted, and regard it as the best thing I have yet seen in that line."—REV. J. P. WATSON, Dayton, Ohio.

HOME AND HEALTH.

SLEEPING APARTMENTS.

Some great writer has remarked: "It must not be forgotten that we spend a considerable portion of our lives in the bed-chamber, and, therefore, its healthfulness cannot fail to have a very important bearing upon our physical well-being." Everybody, indeed, who is actuated by a due regard for health and real comfort, will consider an equal degree of attention necessary in giving attention to the size, situation, temperature, and cleanliness of the apartment he occupies during the hours of repose as of the parlor, drawing-room, or any other apartment; and yet how very often do we find families crowded at night into obscure and confined chambers, of dimensions scarcely more ample than those of an old fashioned closet, while, perhaps, in the majority of instances, the best rooms in the whole house are set apart for the sole purpose of ostentatious display. Now it is very important that the largest and most elevated room, or rooms, upon the second floor of the dwelling, be appropriated for the purpose of sleeping, and that the same be properly ventilated during all seasons of the year.

There are few houses, the rooms of which are so situated as to render good ventilation impossible, and the influence of this practice upon the health of inmates is too important to permit being neglected from any slight cause. A bed-chamber should be divested of all unnecessary furniture, and, unless of considerable size, should never contain more than one bed. There cannot be a more pernicious custom than that pursued by some, indeed, by many, families of having their children sleep in small apartments, with two, and sometimes with three, beds, and crowded into the same room. It is scarcely necessary to observe that cleanliness, in the most extensive signification of the term, is, if possible, even more necessary with reference to the bed-chamber than with almost any other apartment in the whole house. The practice of sleeping in a room which is occupied during the day-time is extremely unwise. Perfect cleanliness and sufficient free ventilation cannot, under such circumstances, be preserved, especially during cold weather; hence the atmosphere becomes constantly more vitiated, and altogether unfit for respiration. While too great a degree of caution cannot be observed to avoid sleeping in damp rooms, beds, or clothing, the temperature of the bed chamber, if possible, should never be increased, under the ordinary circumstances of health, by artificial means. As this apartment is to be reserved solely for sleeping, a fire is never necessary, excepting, possibly, during extreme cold weather, and, even then, temperature ought not to exceed fifty degrees.

A sleeping apartment, in which a heavy fire has been kept for several hours prior to retiring, may to some persons at first thought, offer great comfort. But, right here, great danger is very liable to occur since by heating the room to such an extent as has been referred to the system becomes greatly enervated, creating an increased susceptibility to the influence of the cold air, and thus the way is opened to the attack of some of the most serious diseases, especially of the throat and lungs. Happy, indeed, should those persons esteem themselves whose means forbid an indulgence in the form of luxury! A person accustomed to undress in a room without a fire, and to seek repose in a cold bed, will not experience the least inconvenience, even in the severest of winter weather. The natural heat of the body will very speedily render a person, under such circumstances, even more comfortable than he or she will be who sleeps in a heated apartment, as experience has amply verified. But this is not all. The constitution of the one accustomed to sleeping in a room which is not artificially heated will be rendered more robust and strong, and far less susceptible to the influence of atmospherical vicissitudes, than the person who is not so accustomed to sleep.—George Newell Lovejoy in Good Housekeeping.

POPULAR COMMENTARIES

In the critical biblical literature of the century few books have been so unqualifiedly endorsed as

Jamieson, Fausset & Brown's Commentary

On the Old and New Testaments. It has been tried, tested and proven, during one of the most active periods ever known in biblical research. That it has not been found wanting is evident in the still unabated demand. At considerable outlay we have issued a new edition of this valuable work in clear type, attractively bound, and at a price much lower than any complete commentary ever before issued.

In Extra Fine English Cloth, sprinkled edge, the full set, (4 vols.) ..... $ 8.00
In Half Morocco, the full set, (4 vols.) 10 00

"The BEST condensed Commentary on the whole Bible is the Commentary on the Old and New Testaments, by Jamieson, Fausset & Brown. It contains notes of the choicest and richest character on all parts of the Holy Bible. It is the cream of the commentaries carefully collected by three eminent scholars. Its critical introduction to each book of Scripture, its eminently practical notes, its numerous pictorial illustrations, commend it strongly to the Sunday-school worker and to the clergyman. Then it is such a marvel of cheapness."—Rev. J. H. Vincent, D. D., in "Aids to Bible Study."

The leading clergymen and college professors of the country unite with Dr. Vincent in placing this commentary in the first rank of all biblical aids.

The Facts Stated.

HON. THURLOW WEED ON THE MORGAN ABDUCTION.

This is a sixteen page pamphlet comprising a letter written by Mr. Weed, and read at the unveiling of the monument erected to the memory of Capt. William Morgan. The frontispiece is an engraving of the monument. It is a history of the unlawful seizure and confinement of Morgan in the Canandaigua jail, his subsequent conveyance by Freemasons to Fort Niagara, and drowning in Lake Ontario He not only subscribes his NAME to the letter, but ATTACHES HIS AFFIDAVIT to it.

In closing his letter he writes: I now look back through an interval of fifty-six years with a conscious sense of having been governed through the "Anti-Masonic excitement" by a sincere desire, first, to vindicate the violated laws of my country, and next, to arrest the great power and dangerous influences of "secret societies."

The pamphlet is well worth perusing, and is doubtless the last historical article which this great journalist and politician wrote. [Chicago, National Christian Association.] Single copy, 5 cents.

OF
A Happy Life.
28th THOUSAND.

Baptist Commendation.

"We are delighted with this book. It reaches to the very core of Christian experience, and is eminently experimental in its teachings. It meets the doubts and difficulties of conscientious seekers after the bread and water of life, but whose efforts result only in alternate failure and victory. The author, without claiming to be a theologian, sends out the results of a happy and rich experience to help others into a happy Christian life."—Baptist Weekly.

Presbyterian Endorsement.

"The book is so truly and reverentially devout in its spirit that it disarms criticism. It contains so much that is sound and practical, so much that, if heeded, will make our lives better, happier and more useful, that the intelligent reader who really wishes to lead a life 'hid with Christ in God' can scarcely fail to derive profit from its perusal."—Interior.

Methodist Word of Praise.

"We have not for years read a book with more light and profit. It is not a theological book. No effort is made to change the theological views of any one. The author has a rich experience, and tells it in a plain and delightful manner."—Christian Advocate.

United Brethren's Approval.

"We have seldom met with a more interesting volume, abounding throughout with apt illustrations; we have failed to find a dry line from title-page to finis."—Religious Telescope.

Congregational Comment

"It contains much clear, pungent reasoning and interesting incident. It is a practical and experimental lesson taught out of God's word, and is worthy of universal circulation."—Church Union.

Old Age and How to Enjoy It.

A most appropriate gift book for "The Old Folks at Home."

Compiled by REV. S. G. LATHROP.

Introduction by
REV. ARTHUR EDWARDS, D. D.,
(Editor N. W. Christian Advocate.)

The object of this volume is to give to that great army who are fast hastening toward the "great beyond" some practical hints and helps as to the best way to make the most of the remainder of that now is, and to give comfort and help life that is to come.

"It is a tribute to the Christianity that honors the gray head and refuses to consider the oldish man a burden or an obstacle. The book will aid and comfort every reader."—Northwestern Christian Advocate.

"The selections are very precious. Springing from such numerous and pure fountains, they can but afford a refreshing and healthful draught for every aged traveller to the great beyond."—Witness.

ANTI-LODGE LYRICS.
Sing the Reform
Into the Hearts of the People

One of the most popular books against lodgery is the latest compilation of

George W. Clark,

The Minstrel of Reform:

A forty-page book of soul-stirring, conscience-awakening songs, appropriate for lectures, conventions and the home circle. What can add more to the interest of a meeting than a song well sung? What means will more quickly overthrow the power of the secret lodges than to sing the truth into the popular conscience?

WESTERN AFRICA.

BY J. AUGUSTUS COLE, OF SHAINGAY, WEST AFRICA.

Bishop Flickinger of the U. B. church says that, "This volume will well repay a careful reading not only for its discussion and exposition of these societies, but because it gives much valuable information respecting other institutions of that great continent."

J. Augustus Cole, the author of this pamphlet is a native of Western Africa, and is of pure negro blood. He has given much time and care to the investigation of the secret societies and heathen customs of Western Africa. He joined several of the secret orders for the purpose of obtaining full and correct information regarding their nature and operation. His culture and superior powers of discrimination render what he has written most complete and reliable.

The Danger—The Laborer's Grievance—The Laborer's Foe—The Laborer's Fallacy—The Laborer's Hope—Mind and Muscle—Co-Laborers.

TIMELY TALKS ON AN IMPORTANT SUBJECT.

The Papers Say of this Book:

"It is well to remind the world of the great law of human brotherhood, but how to make the 'more general application of it?' 'Aye, there's the rub!' Our author contributes his mite in that direction, and his voice and reasoning will reach some ears and perhaps touch some understandings and move some selfish hearts that are buttoned up very closely and hedged around by over much respectability and comfortable prosperity."—Chicago Tribune.

"The writer does his work in a way remarkable alike for its directness, its common sense, its impartiality, its lucidity and its force. He has no theories to support; he deals with facts as he finds them; he fortifies his assertions by arrays of demonstrative statistics. The work is among the best of the kind if it is not the best that we have seen. While it is scarcely possible for it to be put in the hands of all our wage-workers, we wish it could be read by every one of them."—Chicago Interior.

NATIONAL SUICIDE,
AND
ITS PREVENTION.
BY OSCAR F. LUMRY, PH. D.

Prof. Lumry's book, "National Suicide and Its Remedy," will be read with profit even by those who do not accept its doctrine, that taking interest for money loaned, one or more per cent, is sin, taking something for nothing. For, as Goldsmith said of his Vicar of Wakefield,

E'en his failings lean to virtue's side.
—Cynosure.

Dr. Lumry is a man of ideas and never fails to make his readers understand just what they are. Every sentiment he writes has such an air of honesty that it will in a measure disarm those who read to criticise. It is a good book to set people to thinking, whether they believe his theories or not. The book is well worth a careful reading and study.—Inter Ocean.

On all the points named they differ radically from those which prevail in the organization of society. Either they are true or false. It is a curious fact that all of them have been stigmatized as crazy, and yet nearly all of them have been for some years steadily gaining the adherence of men of intellectual ability.—Times.

FARM NOTES.

A PERFECT WIND-BREAK.

1. A perfect wind-break should be of such varieties of evergreens as can be easily cultivated, make a rapid upward growth, and at the same time grow so dense as to be a real barrier against wind and storm. These requisites can only be obtained by planting two or more kinds, as white or Norway spruce, or both, and white or Scotch pine, or both. The rows of trees should be ten feet apart, and the trees six feet apart in the rows. The first row next to the buildings should be white spruce, the next Norway (or both rows can be of either kind); the next three or more rows, white or Scotch pine. Five rows will make a perfect shelter belt, but more can be planted if desired. White spruce is a more beautiful tree than Norway, but does not make quite so rapid an upward growth, and the plants will cost more. Some may object to planting so closely as six feet, but this must be borne in mind: A rapid upward growth in evergreens can be soonest obtained by crowding, and for a western tree-planter the tree that will give him shelter and protection the soonest, is the one; and we think the above distance is about the "mean" between far apart and too close.

2. Wild white pine (by this is understood plants from the forest), if dug, not pulled, where they grow in the sunlight, and are stalky, will be the cheapest, but we do not advise putting such plants directly in shelter belt rows. Instead, put them in well prepared ground in rows two fect apart, one foot in row, shade lightly, give thorough cultivation, take shade off next spring in cloudy weather, leave two years from planting, and then transplant in permanent rows.

TREES FOR OTHER PURPOSES.—By this we understand the most profitable trees to plant for other uses than shelter. We advise European larch for general farm uses, and red cedar for fence posts. They should be planted four feet apart in rows, and the rows four to six feet apart. It is better not to plant the larch in blocks, but in belts of from six to ten rows, and on the outside of all other timber—as they thus seem to retain their healthy condition to a greater age. No tree will make so large a proportion of straight, medium-sized timber as European larch. Red cedar will always be in demand for fence posts, is the easiest of all evergreens to grow; good two or three year-old plants, with fair cultivation, will make posts at ten years from planting. One of the main points of successful evergreen culture is thorough cultivation for the first two or three years from planting. The best sized plants are those from one to two feet in hight, and that have been at least once transplanted. Great care should be taken by every one who handles them, either as digger, packer or planter, to never allow the roots to be exposed to the drying influence of sun or wind. Shelter belts should be planted at least one hundred feet away from the object to be sheltered. [Is not this distance too great for shelter?—ED.] For ornament, and on the lawn, a few of Menzie's spruce (when they can be obtained), balsam fir and hemlock, in cool, moist locations. A few of the dwarf kinds, mountain pine, Siberian arba vitæ, and Savin, are useful in the angles of walks and drives, and very beautiful. Among deciduous trees, the cut-leaved birch stands first. European and oak-leaved mountain ash, magnolia acuminati, and when it is once known, the Bolleana poplar will form some of the grandest trees yet introduced.—Prairie Farmer.

MASON & HAMLIN ORGANS. The cabinet organ was introduced in its present form by Mason & Hamlin in 1861. Other makers followed in the manufacture of these instruments, but the Mason & Hamlin Organs have always maintained their supremacy as the best in the world.

Mason & Hamlin offer, as demonstration of the unequaled excellence of their organs, the fact that at all of the great World's Exhibitions, since that of Paris, 1867, in competition with best makers of all countries, they have invariably taken the highest honors. Illustrated catalogues free.

PIANOS. Mason & Hamlin's Piano Stringer was introduced by them in 1882, and has been pronounced by experts the "greatest improvement in pianos in half a century."

A circular, containing testimonials from three hundred purchasers, musicians, and tuners, sent, together with descriptive catalogue, to any applicant.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

WASHINGTON.

Hon. Joseph Chamberlain, of England, was given a dinner Friday night at Washington by Secretary and Mrs. Whitney.

Senator Spooner writes to a friend in Milwaukee that he will soon introduce a bill for a new public building in that city, to cost $1,200,000, and take charge of its passage through the Senate.

The National Republican Committee has voted to hold the next nominating convention of the party in Chicago on Tuesday, June 19th.

COUNTRY.

The jury in the case of John Arensdorf, on trial at Sioux City for the murder of Rev. Dr. Haddock, returned a verdict of "not guilty" at 9 o'clock Friday evening.

Dubuque brewers are excited over the recent decision of the United States Supreme Court in the Kansas prohibitory cases, and it was rumored Friday that they would voluntarily close their establishments. Sentiment in favor of compensation by the State is said to be growing in Iowa.

Johann Most, convicted of making an incendiary speech, was sentenced at New York Thursday to one year's imprisonment. The prisoner pleaded his innocence, maintaining that he was a victim of prejudice and perjury. His lawyers appealed the case and next day found a judge who admitted him to bail.

The total loss by fire in this country during November was $16,003,975, an increase of $6,000,000 over the same month last year. These figures are the heaviest for any November since the Boston fire.

Manufacturers of rubber boots and shoes perfected an organization at New York Friday, to be known as the Boston Rubber Boot and Shoe Trust. The phrasing of the documents of the combination is similar to that used in the papers of the Standard Oil Company.

A law suit is impending between Dr. Bell and Thomas A. Edison in regard to the phonograph or graphophone. It is said that Bell has perfected the instrument so that it records human utterances on prepared paper, and that when said paper is placed in another graphophone the communication can be heard in the voice of the sender.

The Illinois Railroad and Warehouse Commissioners filed a report with the Governor Friday upon the Chatsworth railroad disaster. They find that the Toledo, Peoria and Western railroad management is censurable for not keeping itself informed of the condition of its tracks.

The sudden appearance of water in many wells in Southern Wisconsin that have been perfectly dry since the drought of last summer has caused no little wonder among the people. Wells are filled almost to the top; streams run in abundance from side hills and from springs that have long been dry, and the creeks and small rivers, whose beds have been dry for months, are gradually rising, and bid fair to become formidable streams. The phenomenon occurred during a night, and is similar to that reported from Sangamon county, this State, and at Mattoon and vicinity, where abandoned wells that had been dry some months suddenly filled with pure water.

At Hot Springs, Ark., Sunday, the wife of Alderman Laughran died of hydrophobia. A ferocious bull dog attacked her two babes, and in rescuing them the brave mother was severely bitten. The wounds were cauterized and a mad stone was applied, but the woman died in horrible agony.

Near Cadillac, Mich., Thursday, a construction gang on the Toledo, Ann Arbor and Cadillac railroad attempted to make a crossing on the property of J. Chapin, a farmer. He ordered the men away and when they refused to leave the premises fired into the crowd, killing one man and injuring others.

An infernal machine was received Thursday by United States Marshal Jones of Kansas. Efforts were made to open the box by Colonel Jones, ex-Governor Glick, and others, and when the lid had been taken off the dangerous nature of the contents caused considerable alarm.

California wool growers met Thursday at San Francisco and adopted resolutions declaring that any reduction in the tariff on wool would seriously cripple the industry and greatly decrease the production. Congress is asked to maintain the present tariff on wool.

The Buckeye Flouring mills of M. W. Anderson, in Portsmouth, Ohio, burned Wednesday morning. The east wall of the building fell, and some six persons were taken from the ruins dead or severely injured.

FOREIGN.

It is reported that the people in the Bavispe district of Mexico, which has been shaken by earthquakes, are wild with terror and destitute of food and clothing, and unless aid is speedily furnished all will perish.

Paris dispatches announce that three shots were fired at M. Jules Ferry in the lobby of the Chamber of Deputies by a man named Aubertin. The wounds are slight. The bystanders tried to lynch Aubertin after he had fired the shots, but were prevented with difficulty from carrying out their intention. M. Ferry's assailant is a native of Rombach, in Moselle. When he made the attack on M. Ferry he was accompanied by an accomplice who was to have shot M Goblet, but who funked, giving as his reason that his revolver dropped to the floor. When Aubertin was searched by the police a paper was found on him which indicated that he and his confederate had drawn lots yesterday to decide who should do the shooting. The paper ends, "Death to intriguers. Our path is marked out to form an intelligent, disinterested, and patriotic ministry. So be it." Aubertin, the would-be assassin, is the author of various pamphlets and the inventor of several machines, the failure of which has reduced him to deep poverty, embittered his life and brought on occasional attacks of insane exaltation of mind.

Berlin dispatches announce the preamble of the new German military service bill. It abounds in plain speaking regarding the armies which Germany must calculate upon facing on the field of battle. It sets forth that the German army is composed of men whose liability to serve in the active army extends over twelve years, whereas in the Russian army the period is fifteen years, and in the French twenty years.

Lord Hartington's speech on fair-trade agitation at the Unionist conference in London has failed to satisfy English free-traders, and has given offense to most of the Conservatives. The Liberal-Unionist press has taken up the discussion vigorously, and declares that free-trade is distinctly a more important question than that of home rule for Ireland. They also declare that no alliance with the Tory party is possible hereafter if the Tories in their Parliamentary action are to be associated as a party with any measure directed toward protection.

THE CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE,

The CYNOSURE represents the Christian movement against the Secret Lodge System; discusses fairly and fearlessly the various movements of the lodge as they appear to public view, and reveals the secret machinery of corruption in politics, courts, and social and religious circles.

There are in the United States
Some 200 different Lodges,
With 2,000,000 members,
Costing $20,000,000 yearly.

This mighty world power confronts the church and seeks to rule and ruin every Christian Reform.

No Christian Reform Movement of the day is so necessary, yet so unpopular and beset with difficulties, as that which would remove the dark pall of oaths, dark-lantern meetings, secret signs, mysterious and pagan worship about altars condemned by the Word of the Living God.

No other paper gives the best of its correspondence and editorial strength to this vitally important reform. The CYNOSURE should be your paper in addition to any other you may take.

Because it is the representative of the reform against the Lodge, with ablest arguments, biographical and historical sketches, letters from lecturers, seceders and sufferers from lodge persecution. The ablest writers on this subject from all denominations and all parts of the country contribute. Special departments for letters from our metropolitan centers, on the relation of secret orders to current events.

The CYNOSURE began its twentieth volume September 22, 1887, with features of special and popular interest.

Our Chicago anarchists had another day of it last Sabbath. The bodies of Spies, Parsons, Fischer, Engel and Lingg, lying in a cemetery some ten miles west of the city, were removed to their final tomb and laid side by side under a huge stone. There was a repetition of the speech-making of the first burial, and of the swearing to revenge the dead and maintain the cause, but there was little enthusiasm. Captain Black, who spoke again, was subdued in his tone. The remembrance of former religious associations came over him, and his speech was like a sermon. He compared the anarchists to Christ only as they labored for human fraternity, but he showed how sadly he has apostatized by declaring they should be saved and "received into the mysteries of God."

Everyone who believes in the American constitutional right of free speech and a free press, especially for the proclamation of the Gospel, has an interest in the the Boston city election of last Tuesday. A majority of nearly 1800 in a total vote of 51,000 was given for the re-election of O'Brien, who last August graced a boxing match and belt presentation to the champion wife-beater and "plug-ugly," Sullivan. A majority of 8,483 was given at the same time for license; last year it was 4,437. This means a continuation of the rule of the Rum and Romanism which hopes to prevent the open-air preaching of the Gospel to the poor, and gives the hero, Davis, who withstands them, a year in jail for his temerity. Other cities of Massachusetts give no greater hope of deliverence from like evils. Lynn, Salem, and Newburyport are for license with 500 majority and Worcester by 190.

The late speech of Senator Palmer of Michigan indicates the strength of prohibitory convictions in that State. Six counties, under the local option privilege, have voted out the saloons, and this warning, with the late Supreme Court decision, is begetting a wholesome trepidation among the liquor dealers and makers. Their last move is a threat to close all the hotels in the temperance infected districts. In Branch county it is understood they have formed a combination of all the public houses to the effect that if prohibition prevails at the next election every hotel will close. This will be a grand opportunity for the good people of that district to get rid of a bad lot of landlords; and they should thank those gentlemen for timely notice. We remember hearing that Deacon Selah Loomis, who died in this State in 1872, kept the first temperance tavern between Detroit and Chicago nearly fifty years ago, and spite of threats of enemies and protestation of friends he made it pay. Temperance houses ought to be everywhere profitable in Michigan to-day.

JOHN G. WHITTIER.

Our Illinois Senator Cullom, of the Inter-State Commerce bill, has proposed to Congress a Postal Telegraph system similar to that so popular in England, and the Senate has appointed a special committee on the proposition. It is hardly expected the bill will become law at present, but the discussion of its merits will go on until the people generally will demand it. When Gould adroitly secured the Baltimore and Ohio telegraph, and so once more made the Western Union line the great monopoly, it was broadly hinted that he was now ready to sell to the Government. The national or private management of the telegraph is a question on which both sides have much to say; but discussion will give us full information, and no doubt the postal telegraph will in a few years be one of our popular institutions.

The appalling catastrophe in China, by which unknown thousands have lost their lives and millions brought to suffering and starvation, was not, perhaps, to have been unexpected. The Hoang Ho, or Yellow River, runs for 2,400 miles through the northern part of the Chinese empire in an erratic course. Its lower course is through great alluvial plains, and its swift current, which forbids navigation, bears to the sea vast deposits of sediment. Like our Mississippi its floods are confined by great levees maintained at great expense. As sediment has been deposited the artificial banks have been raised until over a part of its course the river runs in an immense artificial channel, entirely above the surrounding country. With the breaking down of this embankment September 28th last some 7,000 square miles of territory have been flooded, and the inhabitants drowned or driven wretchedly to higher grounds. The government is raising a large relief fund, but the greatest exertion cannot save multitudes from perishing. Thomas Paton, one of the American missionaries, writing from Honau Province, under the date of Oct. 28, says: "The newly gathered crops, houses, and trees are all swept away, involving fearful loss of life. The country was covered with fine winter braid, which is gone, and implies the complete destruction of next year's crop. 'Bread, bread,' is the cry of thousands who are on the river bank. Benevolent people go in boats and throw bread among the masses here and there, but it is nothing compared with the requirements. The mass of people is still being increased by continual arrivals, even more hungry than the last. There they sit, stunned, hungry, and dejected, without a rag to wear or a morsel of food. Mat huts are being erected for them to the west of this, but what it will be in two months I cannot conceive. The misery is increased owing to the bitter cold weather."

MY BIRTHDAY.

Beneath the moonlight and the snow
Lies dead my latest year;
The winter winds are wailing low
Its dirges in my ear.

I grieve not with the moaning wind
As if a loss befell;
Before me, even as behind,
God is, and all is well!

His light shines on me from above,
His low voice speaks within,—
The patience of immortal love
Outwearying mortal sin.

Not mindless of the growing years
Of care and loss and pain,
My eyes are wet with thankful tears
For blessings which remain.

If dim the gold of life has grown,
I will not count it dross,
Nor turn from treasures still my own
To sigh for lack and loss.

The years no charm from Nature take;
As sweet her voices call,
As beautiful her mornings break,
As fair her evenings fall.

Love watches o'er my quiet ways,
Kind voices speak my name,
And lips that find it hard to praise
Are slow, at least, to blame.

How softly ebb the tides of will!
How fields, once lost or won,
Now lie behind me green and still
Beneath a level sun!

How hushed the hiss of party hate,
The clamor of the throng!
How old, harsh voices of debate
Flow into rhythmic song!

Methinks the spirit's temper grows
Too soft in this still air;
Somewhat the restful heart foregoes
Of needed watch and prayer.

The bark by tempest vainly tossed
May founder in the calm,
And he who braved the polar frost
Faint by the isles of balm.

Better than self-indulgent years
The outflung heart of youth,
Than pleasant songs in idle years
The tumult of the truth.

Rest for the weary hands is good,
And love for hearts that pine,
But let the manly habitude
Of upright souls be mine.

Let winds that blow from heaven refresh,
Dear Lord, the languid air;
And let the weakness of the flesh
Thy strength of spirit share.

And, if the eye must fail of light,
The ear forget to hear,
Make clearer still the spirit's sight,
More fine the inward ear!

Be near me in mine hours of need
To soothe, or cheer, or warn,
And down these slopes of sunset lead
As up the hills of morn!

—J. G. Whittier.

HAVE YOU TURNED OVER A NEW LEAF?

BY REV. J. F. AVERY.

Many said towards the close of 1886, "Please God, I am going to turn over a new leaf next year." This and better might do; but this and worse will never do. Now, in all seriousness, "What hast thou done?" Perhaps thou mayest say, time enough yet. My intentions are good. It is only a lack of opportunity. The more convenient season has not yet come. The thought, will it ever be a more opportune season, is worth not only consideration, but demands prompt and deliberate action; because one All-wise hath declared and decided, "Now is the accepted time; now is the day of salvation."

Many have found, many will find it hard going to overtake neglected opportunity, and harder wooing to win rejected mercy. Mercy, charity-like, suffereth long, and is kind; but the door will be shut sometime. Then knocking and loud calling will bring no response save the admonition that salvation was without money and without price, free to all who heeded the voice and call of mercy. Therefore, now,despisers of love's free gift may go with diligence to buy of them that sell the needed oil and grace, but "Too late! too late!" will be the cry.

Neglect of so great salvation means eternal condemnation and self-torment, because when the King waited to be gracious ye would not come. Procrastination is the thief not only of time and opportunity, but it ruins all present and future success. Why not turn over a new leaf at once? Already Time's rude fingers have snatched from the calendar of 1887 all but the last page, as if angry because such golden opportunities have been so squandered, and in the life and memory of so many not only slighted and neglected, but worse by far, the passing days had been used by do-nothings, spendthrifts, and the ungodly in abusing and consuming their own bodies and span of life.

Procrastinators and waiters, beware! The judgment will not tarry. The day of reckoning is not far off. Time past is gone; the present flies; the future, who can count or tell. What a day may bring forth is past calculation or finding out. Not knowing what shall be on the morrow, let us endeavor not only to do with our might and with both hands diligently, each day's alloted task, but let us see to it that as the day breaks we ask counsel of God, and say, "Lord, what wilt thou have me to do;" "Not my will, Thy will be done."

Can any reader give a justifiable excuse for a leaf not turned? Will good resolutions unexecuted and broken yield soul satisfaction or a present and future profitable harvest? Have you so soon forgotten past resolves; were they only the fleeting fancies of a fevered brain, roused into activity with the thought, The year is almost gone? Still I have to do what in sober moments last year was vowed.

What caused you, then, to roughly count the cost and shudder at the greatness of the sum of wasted time and opportunity? Why did you say at the end of the year, "I must swear off, boys. I am going too fast; spending too freely?" Do you fear the year's closing books would show up the deficiences? Why did you shudder and pause as if feeling the chill blast of disgrace blowing from some unknown quarter? And why, with fevered brow and quickened pulse in an agony of fear, as if the furnace breath of the pit played upon you, did you say with clenched teeth, I must turn over a new leaf; this will never do if there be a hell? Maybe the Book of books is true, and why not? Can I better trust the insane babbling of smoke and spirit-heated brains, the logic and reasoning of men who have no love to God or hope of heaven in their hearts, than the pious pleadings and teachings of those whose love is proven? Yes, I must turn over a new leaf. Why was the pipe crushed beneath the foot, the flask flung out of the window, and the well-worn cards treated to cleansing in the fire? Was it not the prompting of God, the recollection that these things are unclean and defiling? Was it not a consciousness that they were sapping the will-power and energy of your better manhood?

These resolutions were good, but the new leaf of a regenerated self was not turned ere the year died. No cry went up to heaven, "Save, Lord,or I perish." The Sabbath did not find you a penitent and seeking sinner in the place your father loved so well. It was not known, it is not known by saint or sinner that you turned over a new leaf. Yet you know it is turn or burn. Come to Jesus now, or else hereafter depart from him forever. Now on the page made white by the blood of the Lamb can be written a worthier record. He who blotteth out the transgression of the past will give grace sufficient to those who trust in him, to keep and make a better record. The man whose trust is in God, and believes in honest endeavor needs not fear who shall see what is written over the smallest success thus attained. Jesus will write on the final leaf, Well done. He demands of none more than grace-given opportunities freely yield. But to all the cry is, "Now is the accepted time." "Go work to-day." Sinners may join hand in hand, but they shall not go unpunished. Signs of distress bring very little practical help now. Then the fool will prove the folly of trusting in an arm of flesh.

Mariners' Temple, New York.

THE MORAL WARFARE.

When Freedom, on her natal day,
Within her war-rocked cradle lay,
An iron race around her stood,
Baptized her infant brow in blood;
And, through the storm which round her swept,
Their constant ward and watching kept.

Then, where our quiet herds repose,
The roar of baleful battle rose,
And brethren of a common tongue
To mortal strife as tigers sprung,
And every gift on Freedom's shrine
Was man for beast, and blood for wine!

Our fathers to their graves have gone;
Their strife is past,—their triumph won;
But sterner trials wait the race
Which rises in their honored place,—
A moral warfare with the crime
And folly of an evil time.

So let it be. In God's own might
We gird us for the coming fight,
And, strong in Him whose cause is ours
In conflict with unholy powers,
We grasp the weapons he has given,—
The Light, and Truth, and Love of Heaven.

THE ANCIENT ORDER OF THE NEHUSHTANS!

BY THOS. HODGE.

Not a doubt of it! They are an ancient order. They claim to maintain the worship instituted by Moses when he set up the Brazen Serpent by divine authority. Its divine power to heal ceased when its divine purpose was at an end, but the Nehushtans contended for its perpetual divine power, and no doubt condemned Hezekiah for destroying the Brazen Serpent which Moses had set up (1. Kings 18: 4) and for destroying all reverence for it by calling it only a piece of brass! The Nehushtans would feel this to be an outrage, and ever since have been always ready to maintain anything which at any time had a divine sanction—even when superceded by other divine appointments.

It was this rule of action that made some of the first Jewish Christians try to continue circumcision.

The largest body of modern Nehushtans may be called the Roman Catholic church. They admit the Gospel facts, and the miracles in proof of them; but instead of resting content with the sacred record of these facts, claim that divine, miraculous power is still inherited by their church for the same purpose. Thus the Holy Scriptures have become of only secondary importance to her people and so this Nehushtan church worships her wafer as the very body of the Saviour who died for our sins. Thus too, his command to "drink of the cup" is set aside and her wafer is given instead, to her deluded followers.

The ancient Nehushtans burned incense to their brazen serpent, and for thus doing we may almost literally charge some of the orders of modern Nehushtanism, men whose rites and worship are done in secret, while some of their symbols are displayed in the most ostentatious manner. Look, for example, at the Knight Templars when they try to enlist popular sympathy, as if they were using a Christ-given emblem by their display of the form of the cross on their flags as they march to do honor to their "Masonry divine!" Verily, their brazen display of the wooden cross would be far more appropriate in the form of the serpent itself; for it is more ancient than the cross, and would be equally true in all that it signifies to them. The same view may be taken of erratic doings by other bodies, which by human presumption invent rites for divine worship, or continue things—now discontinued—their divine purpose having been accomplished.

Some modern Christians will think very charitably of the Nehushtans. Was there any express prohibition not to 'burn incense" (1 Kings 18: 4) to the wonderful brass serpent that Moses had made? No. Therefore, why not prescrve it with all due honor? Even so now-a-days, many do not support the Roman Catholic wafer, nor the display of the cross by a Masonic branch of the worshipers of the Great Architect; and they read with delight of the miracles done by Christ when on earth, and also of the power given to his apostles, etc., in proof of "Jesus and the Resurrection." But on the Nehushtan principle they imagine that these miraculous powers can still be exercised by themselves in the present day. They forget the great object which was served by the miracles of Christ and his first messengers. That was served and the record made then, as it had been of Moses and the prophets, whose testimony Jesus called his generation to believe; for if they would not, "neither would they believe if one rose from the dead." Every dispensation was introduced by supernatural manifestations, and often did "God speak to the fathers by the prophets," but "in these last days he speaks by the Son," the heir of all things, and by whom he will judge the world. He has called on all to "hear his beloved Son." Let man remember that the laws which relate to our bodies and to matter are as truly the laws of God as are those which relate to the Spirit, and that we have no right to ask him to suspend or change nature's laws for our personal benefit. How can his children regard such a thing as acceptable or reasonable service? On the contrary we must, as we are taught by our Lord's example in suffering hunger, etc., and by persecutions to be endured for righteousness' sake,submit to suffering, and even to be thankful for it, as one means whereby we are trained to say, "Thy will be done," and to be willing to leave our present state of existence for the glorious home above. Some in our day of light seem to give way to superstitions so gross that we cannot be surprised to see men prefer to follow the mere rationalist rather than such arrant believers! Let us all beware! for "even now there are many anti-christs," and "false teachers." Men were misled by false prophets in the olden time. The "devices of Satan are numerous and delusive as ever; therefore let those who think they stand "take heed lest they fall." "The Gospel is the power of God" to recover a lost world. Therefore let his people as an army be faithful to it, and to the ordinances which our Lord appointed to represent it, and they can then rest assured in his promise to be with them to the end of the conquered world.

THE GOSPEL MINISTER.

BY REV. J. M. FOSTER.

The minister of the Gospel is the ambassador of God. "Now then we are ambassadors for Christ, as though God did beseech you by us," etc.

1. He must be imbued with the Spirit of God.

This is necessary to his being, as Calvin says, "a proper instrument of the Spirit." This new and spiritual life is the first and indispensable qualification—the sine qua non. He is utterly unfit to be a minister of the Word who has not been born again. A graceless preacher is a lifeless statue holding a burning lamp. A graceless preacher is, as Spurgeon puts it, "a blind man elected to a professorship in optics, philosophizing upon light and vision, discoursing upon and distinguishing to others the nice shades and delicate blendings of the prismatic colors." "If the blind lead the blind, both shall fall into the ditch." You must first feel yourself what you would have others feel. You must first weep yourself before you can cause others to weep. So you must be spiritually alive before you can be an instrument for awakening spiritual vitality in others.

"No one can inspire a taste, much less a passion, for the object of his own pursuit who is not himself most powerfully moved by it. It is the scintillations of his own zeal flying off from his own burning heart and falling upon their souls that kindles in them the fire which burns in his own bosom. Lukewarmness can excite no ardor, originate no activity, produce no effect; it benumbs whatever it touches." The fire from heaven consumed the sacrifice upon the Jewish altar. The fire of God's Spirit burns in the heart of the preacher of Christ. "His Word was in mine heart as a burning fire shut up in my bones, and I was weary with forbearing, and I could not stay." It is this fire in the heart that gives power to the witnesses of Christ. "We believe and therefore speak." "Knowing, therefore, the terror of the Lord, we persuade men." It is the irresistible in a man that makes him earnest. If he can keep anything back he had better do it, for, as Spurgeon says,uttering it would do no good. "Necessity is laid upon me, yea, woe is me if I preach not the Gospel." When Cicero spoke in the Roman forum the people said: "What a wonderful man!" But when Demosthenes spoke in the Athenian bema, the people shouted: "We will go and fight Philip!" The mere rhetorician awakens applause; but the minister of Christ causes them to cry out: "Sirs, what must I do to be saved?'

It is no small encomium pronounced upon John Knox when they said, "He preached as if Jesus Christ were at his elbow." In spite of the threats of Queen Mary he went to St. Andrew's Cathedral, and, with his burning words of fire, aroused an opposition against the papacy which garrisons and arms could not withstand. An eye witness said: "It seemed as if he would ding the pulpit to blads and fly out of it." Martin Luther "never entered the pulpit without trembling." And yet when his friends endeavored to dissuade him from going to the Diet at Worms where he was to testify for Christ, he said: "I would go though there were as many devils there as there are tiles on the roofs of the houses." We have read of pilots whose hair turned from jet black to snow white while steering their vessel through a narrow pass, when moving the helm but the estimation of a hair might send their living charge into a watery grave. Endless life or eternal death are the issues at stake when a minister speaks. Spurgeon relates how an English surgeon and a French doctor were once comparing notes regarding a certain very critical operation. The Frenchman averred that he had performed it more than three hundred times, while the Englishman said that he had attempted it only on eight occasions. "But how many did you save by it?" inquired the Englishman. "Oh, none at all," was the answer; "but the operation was brilliant." "Ah!" replied the Englishman, "but I saved seven out of the eight." The mere worldling thinks of the display; the true minister seeks to save the soul.

Dr. Taylor uses this illustration: "A summer or two ago, a clergyman of the church of England, who was taking a holiday in Switzerland, came, in one of the mountain passes of that land, to a place of considerable danger, and as he was threading his way with care he heard a piercing shriek, which, at length, he found proceeded from a lady who was down on the side of the precipice in a position of awful peril, and who was crying for assistance. Taking a hasty survey of the situation, he went by what seemed to him the best way to her relief, and after making great efforts he succeeded in bringing her with him to a place of safety. The next day he went with a friend to show him the spot; but though he tried very hard, he found that he could not get any where near it. In the former instance there was a life to be saved; in the latter there was only a display to be made." The true minister seeks to save the soul.

2. He must deliver God's message.

God said to the prophet, "Preach the preaching that I bid thee." Like young Samuel who told Eli every whit that the Lord had spoken and kept nothing back, they are to declare the whole counsel of God. The severe charge given to the prophet Ezekiel should strike terror into the hearts of unfaithful ministers. "O son of man, I have set thee for a watchman to the house of Israel; therefore thou shalt hear the word at my mouth and shalt warn them from me. When I say to the wicked, O wicked man, thou shalt surely die! if thou dost not speak to warn the wicked from me, that wicked man shall die in his iniquities, but his blood will I require at thine hands. Nevertheless if thou dost speak, and he turns not, he shall die in his iniquities, but thou hast delivered thy soul." "Woe be to the shepherds of Israel that do feed themselves!" "Woe to the idle shepherds that do lead the flock. The sword shall be upon his arm and upon his right eye."

These warnings are needed to-day. A minister in Rochester said he would not dare preach against the liquor traffic, because it would divide his congregation. How many ministers are silent as to the delusions and crimes of the Masonic lodge for the same reason? It is a fearful thing to withhold the truth. Bunyan, in his "Sighs from Hell," pictures the unfaithful minister going down to pandemonium and being greeted by the taunts of the souls he had deluded. The minister must preach the whole Gospel. "I am determined to know nothing among you, save Jesus Christ and him crucified." He must preach Christ, in his person, offices and work, in his humiliation and exaltation, in his law, grace and reign. It is the same city of Jerusalem that you see whether looking from the mountains of Judea, the plain of Sharon, the height of Bashan, the desert of Paran, or the valley of Megiddo. So it is the same Saviour creating the worlds, giving the law at Sinai, suffering upon Calvary, ascending up to heaven, sending the Spirit and coming to judge the earth. Rowland Hill said, never preach a sermon without three R's: Ruin by sin, Redemption by the blood of Christ, and Regeneration by the Holy Spirit. He "prophesies according to the proportion of faith." In a lighthouse at Sandy Hook, "by a beautiful combination of the catoptric and dioptric principles, a reflector behind and a many-ringed lantern in front, things are so arranged that no ray of light is lost, but all are bent out to the wide ocean." Every part of divine truth must be brought to bear upon the mind and heart.

3. He must leave results with God.

His message attracts the friends and repels the enemies of Christ. "We are unto God a sweet savor of Christ, in them that are saved and in them that perish: to the one we are a savor of death unto death; to the other a savor of life unto life." Pass a magnet through a heap of iron filings and other substances, the filings are attracted, the other substances are repelled. The light is noxious to diseased eyes, and yet it is "a pleasant thing to behold the sun." It is said that vultures avoid the fragrance of myrrh, and yet it is the delight of sentient beings. Even so the preaching of the Gospel tends to save those who believe, but it brings destruction to those who believe not. It is like the sunshine, "which touches the meadows and makes them bloom in brighter verdure; which touches the sandy desert and makes it more dry and vitreous than before; which touches one metallic plate treated with iodine and it turns purple; another treated with nitrate of silver, and turns it black. The Gospel of the Cross was a stumbling-block to the Jews and foolishness to the Greeks, but the power of God unto salvation in them that believed. When Paul preached at Antioch the Jews blasphemed, contradicting those things which were spoken, while the Gentiles rejoiced, and entreated that the same things might be spoken to them the next Sabbath.

A minister must seek conversions. Without these the work is a failure. But he must also make it so hot for thieves, money-grips and libertines that they cannot stay. And that is just as sweet a savor to God as the former. I know a minister in the State of New York who was driven from his pulpit because he faithfully reproved the sin of covetousness on the part of the man who held the money-bag of the congregation. But the lash in the hands of the money-power did not injure the one upon whom it fell. Herod sent John the Baptist to prison for reproving him. Ahab sent Michaiah to the dungeon for reproving him. The persecutors were the sufferers. The sons of Israel sold Joseph their brother into Egypt. They, not he, were the real sufferers. The minister must deliver his message whether men will hear or forbear. "And the Lord said unto me, Behold, I have put my words in thy mouth. See, I have this day set thee over the nations and over the kingdoms, to root out, and to pull down, and to destroy, and to throw down; to build and to plant."

THE THEOSOPHICAL MOVEMENT IN INDIA.

Ernst von Weber prints in Ueber Land und Meer an interesting paper on the theosophists of India. He calls attention to the fact that students of Volkerpsychologie cannot fail to be impressed by India's awakening from her long intellectual sleep. To-day the new and fresh intellectual life may be observed from the Himalayas to Ceylon, and from the Indus to the fruitful lands of Burmah. This movement owes as much to the spread of the English language as to any other one cause. It is now customary for all educated Hindus to be able to speak the English language fluently, and the British Government has helped this on by its system of schools.

The Aryan Hindu is naturally of a metaphysical and speculative turn of mind, and it is, therefore, not to be wondered at that the newly aroused intellectual activity should have found expression in the so-called theosophical movement. The first impulse to this idealistic development did not come, however, from India itself, but from abroad. It came from the land which, as the writer cynically expresses it, is the most unfruitful soil for idealistic fruit, the United States of America. It was in New York, as long ago as 1875, that Colonel Olcott laid the corner-stone of the theosophical structure which was soon to exercise so wide-spread an influence. The principles of the cosmopolitan brotherhood of theosophists, which in certain particulars resemble those of the Freemasons or those of the Jewish sect of the Essenes, rapidly spread through other countries. The indefatigable apostle of the new society did his work so well, that the number of associate societies, which in 1879 was only two, increased in 1883 to ninety-three, and in 1886 to one hundred and thirty-two. Of this last number, 107 are in India, eight in Europe, fifteen in America, one in Africa, and one in Australia. The headquarters and administrative center of all these societies is Adyar, a rural capital in Madras, where Colonel Olcott dwells, on the banks of a river in a paradise of palms and flowers. His villa also serves as the gathering-place where each year in Christmas week more or fewer of the delegates of the theosophical societies throughout India assemble in convention. Colonel Olcott has managed to imbue thousands of men of the higher circles of India with his ideas. He is greatly honored by his fellow-theosophists, and is loved as a father and benefactor. His occasional journeys through the country are like triumphal processions, and his influence over the cultured classes of the Hindus throughout India is extraordinary.

Some idea of the objects and aims of the Theosophical Society may be gathered from the following selection from the declaration of principles adopted at the annual assembly of the delegates in 1886. The objects of the society are there set forth as, (1) to lay the foundation for a universal brotherhood of man, without distinction of race, religion, or color; (2) to promote the study of the Aryan and other Oriental literatures, religions, and sciences; (3) to investigate hitherto unknown natural forces and the psychical powers of man (which is pursued by a part of the brotherhood only). The brotherhood invites to membership all those who love their fellow-men, and who believe the divisions following from differences of race, religion and color, to be an evil; all students and scholars; all earnest seekers after truth; all philosophers in the East as well as in the West; all those who love India and desire the return of its former spiritual greatness; and, finally, all those who are striving after permanent good, and not mere passing pleasures and the interests of a worldly life, and who are ready to make personal sacrifices in order to attain to knowledge of the highest good. The society professes no special religion, and has in no wise the character of a sect, for it includes followers of all religions. It demands of all its members only such tolerance of other faiths as each man asks for his own. The society interferes in no way with the Indian laws of caste, nor with any other social customs and usages.—Science.

A NATIONAL EVIL.

On Thanksgiving day Rev. T. G. Morrow, of Paxton, Illinois, preached an able discourse in the United Presbyterian church, from which the following is an extract, showing the national danger from the lodge:

Another great evil is the numerous secret oath-bound societies. Whilst the keeping of secrets, either by an individual or a society, is not wrong in itself, yet an organization founded upon the principle of secrecy, is at least subject to suspicion, and we believe ought to be shunned by every follower of Christ.

Any individual may have certain purely personal matters, and every family may have some exclusively family interests that may very properly be kept private, because no one else can have any proper interest in them and because they do not directly affect any other individual, nor any public interest whatever.

But were a family always to act on the principle of secrecy—in concealing everything that is said and done; were they to invent signs and grips and passwords for the purpose of concealment; were they to admit no one under their roof without first exacting a solemn oath or promise, that nothing seen or heard shall be made known, under a severe penalty, every one would say there must be something wrong. Such a family would lose the respect and confidence of all persons whose respect is of any value.

The man who endeavors to conceal the business in which he is engaged or the place and manner of carrying on his business, exposes himself to the suspicion of his fellowmen. The public would lose confidence in him. He would not be regarded as a safe man.

Now it is not expected that business men will make all their business affairs public. But habitual secrecy, constant concealment and unwillingness to tell either friend or foe what business they follow or to speak of business operations, will cause any man to be regarded as destitute of common honesty. This fact shows that in the common judgment of men, constant concealment is suspicious and wrong. If then habitual secrecy on the part of a family or on the part of an individual in regard to business matters is suspicious and wrong, it must also be so on the part of associations of men.

An individual working in the dark may do much mischief, but an association thus working can do much more mischief. All those considerations which forbid individuals to shroud their actions in secrecy and darkness and require them to be open, frank and straightforward in their course, apply with equal or greater force to associations. This concealment of actions and principles either by individuals or associations is inconsistent with the teachings of the Bible.

John 18: 20, the words of Jesus: "I spake openly to the world; I ever taught in the synagogue, whither the Jews always resort, and in secret have I said nothing."

Isaiah 29: 15: "Woe unto them that seek deep to hide their counsel from the Lord, and their works are in the dark and they say, 'Who seeth us? and who knoweth us?'"

Eph. 5: 11, 12: "And have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness, but rather reprove them, for it is a shame to speak of those things that are done of them in secret."

John 3: 20: "For every one that doeth evil hateth the light, neither cometh to the light, lest his deeds should be reproved. But he that doeth truth cometh to the light, that his deeds may be made manifest that they are wrought in God."

Again, these secret societies constitute an artificial relation in society. God has instituted the relations of the family, the church and the state or society. He has also imposed the obligations of these relations. These relations being divined and regulated, are designed and adapted to move on together and co-operate harmoniously, like the planets of the solar system. Their duties and obligations never interfere or conflict with each other. But here is a relation that cuts right across all other relations. It enters the family, it interferes between parents and children, between husband and wife, between brothers and sisters.

It enters society, interferes with its various relations, both civil and social. It enters the church, it comes between pastor and people and between members of the same church. It often produces alienation and distrust, if not positive discord and conflict. It is useless to say that membership in these societies need not conflict with a man's duty in his other relations. In the very nature of things they must and do conflict. We all know and see that they do conflict in a multitude of instances.

Again, many of these societies require of those who enter them an oath to keep secret their distinctive principles, signs and acts, before they are permitted to know what they are. This we believe is wrong, because those who take such an oath submit their conscience to the judgment of others, in that they bind themselves to conceal what others tell them will be proper and right for them to conceal, but about which they themselves know nothing, and also because they place themselves in a position which may and often does interfere with their obligations to God.

Again, some of these secret societies teach a false religion. That they teach a religion no one can deny. They have their altars, their chaplains, their priests and their rituals of worship. These are all peculiar to religion.

And in these rituals of worship and in their prayers and hymns and selections of Scripture, the name of Jesus Christ, the only Saviour of sinners, is carefully omitted. This must be done, or the Jew and the Mohammedan could not unite in their worship.

If these forms in which they engage are not acts of worship, they must be mockery. Does it not seem as if the followers of Jesus Christ should stand aloof from these associations, inasmuch as Jesus Christ himself has said: "No man cometh unto the Father but by me."

They have a religion without a Christ, hence it is false, and therefore dangerous to our Christian institutions.

FOREIGNERS AND ANARCHY.

The continuation of the rule of Rum and Romanism in Boston for another municipal term, suggests serious questions respecting other cities where the foreign, un-American vote is always a factor to be considered, if not a dominant influence. The late anarchist performances in Chicago and New York are a powerful influence in this foreign question, and incline not a few of the most conservative to agree with the opinion of the Christian Intelligencer below. The Cynosure has advocated, instead of positive and direct restriction, such a just enforcement of just laws that foreign assassins would wish to avoid this country. The Christianizing of our Constitution, the prohibition of the liquor traffic and of the secret lodges, with properly enforced regulations conforming to these measures, would afford most effectual and honorable check to this foreign invasion. The Intelligencer article reads thus:

Herr Johann Most's witnesses, whatever they did not prove by their testimony in the anarchist's favor, convicted themselves of at least two things—ignorance and atheism. One witness swore that he knew nothing about the government and yet intended to become a citizen of the United States. Judge Cowing, in sentencing Most last Thursday, said: "I have had 'citizens' here who did not know who George Washington was, who Lincoln was nor who was the President." The thought of making citizens out of such material is repelling. There is an instinctive recoil from the bare idea. Yet with our laws as they now are, it cannot be prevented. Citizenship is their right, which designing men are careful to see that they, in due time, claim and obtain, in the expectation of reaping a reward from their votes. Any twelve-year-old newsboy or bootblack in this city knows more about our government and institutions; could vote more intelligently, and is in every way better qualified for citizenship that one-half of the immigrants, even after they have lived here the prescribed time, and been naturalized. To say nothing about the inexpediency of the practice, it is unjust to our American-born youth, who must wait till they are twenty-one years of age before they can become citizens and entitled to vote, to admit to full-fledged citizenship after a short residence in this country the hordes of immigrants that land every week on our shores. The Rev. Heber Newton did not utter the sentiment of a visionary when he said in a recent sermon: "We are overtasking our powers in the effort to assimilate too much raw material. No country on earth ever attempted to make citizens on such a scale. We dare not keep on welcoming shoals of the most ignorant peoples of Europe. I say this is no narrow spirit. But if this flood of emigration is to continue pouring into our cities, justice cannot be done to it, charity cannot provide for it. We dare not continue to crown with a franchise the settlings of races utterly alien to our institutions. In Fall River to-day the American is out-voted by those who do not speak his tongue."

The examination of another witness in the Most case ran like this:

Q. Do you believe in the existence of a Supreme Being? A. I never gave much thought to that. I don't believe in the sort of god that we build churches for. I believe in a philosophical god, in a power which nobody on earth knows much about. He created the whole world. And I believe in natural laws which are governing the world.

Q. Do you believe that he punishes for perjury? A. I don't think that a philosophical god concerns himself much with such trifling things as are going on here.

What is meant by a "philosophical god" we have never heard explained, and therefore do not know, but it is evident from this man's conception that it is a god who does not concern himself about the affairs of men; who does not hold them responsible and will not call them to account. What is the testimony of an atheist worth, though he takes an oath to tell the truth? It is not a serious matter to him what his crime may be, or whether he tells the truth or a falsehood, since he holds himself to be amenable to human law only, and unaccountable to a Supreme Being. Anarchists are given credit for possessing the courage of their convictions. They have courage, it is true, but it is of the lowest order; it is the courage of the brute, blind, impetuous; or, the courage of the fool, who saith in his heart there is no God. It is this atheism that makes anarchism bold and diabolical. It cheapens crime. It is the bottom fact in their persistent assaults on law and life.

Deep, threatening under-currents of evil are bringing to the top in this country questions that will claim the profound consideration and careful action of our legislators, like these: Can we afford to let men vote who know nothing about the genius of our government and the spirit of our institutions, and who are too ignorant to write their names on their ballots? Is not our country too free, tempting the vicious and lawless to convert liberty into license? Shall unrestricted immigration be any longer encouraged? Already a bill has been introduced in Congress proposing restriction by making consular inspection and a certificate of good character indispensable pre-requisites to immigration. This subject is rapidly gaining prominence. The demand is growing imperative, irrespective of religious creeds and political parties, for some law of restriction which it is within the power of Congress to enact.

Give me the money that the working classes have spent for rum during the last thirty years, and I will build for every workingman a house, and lay out for him a garden, and clothe his sons in broadcloth and his daughters in silks, and secure him a policy of life insurance, so that the present home may be well maintained after he is dead.—Talmage.

A law has been passed and is vigorously enforced in Copenhagen by which every man leaving a wine-shop drunk is conducted back to the tavern in a vehicle at the expense of the wine merchant who allowed him to get drunk on his premises.

THE N. C. A. CONVENTION AT NEW ORLEANS.

When men began to multiply on the face of the earth and wickedness became exceeding great, God commissioned civil government and the church to secure the heritage of liberty and happiness, and perpetuate justice, judgment and mercy under the divine injunction, "Do unto others as ye would that others should do unto you."

Since sin invaded the first Eden of purity and innocence, ambition and avarice have dominated in the human heart, until history demonstrates the fact that no people can safely intrust their fortunes to irresponsible hands; that to conserve personal freedom, and protect civil and religious rights against the encroachments of unscrupulous leaders, the people must exercise that "vigilance which is the price of liberty."

If danger is more imminent under one form of government than another it is that in which a majority rule at the ballot box. A palsied arm cannot smite down a haughty foe, and a nation may not permit the dissipation of its vital forces by internal enemies, or the rupturing of its unity by hostile bands and long maintain its authority or even continue its existence. Hence the stability of the American Republic can only be assured by that good faith which inspires mutual confidence, disarms jealousy, and results in hearty co-operation for the welfare of all alike.

It is evident that a government based upon secrecy and selfishly administered for the benefit of the minority to the exclusion of the majority must be the enemy of a government by the people for the whole people, and of the race. It is a well-known fact that there is in our midst a despotic government of foreign origin, having a trained and equipped soldiery of its own, which professes to confer upon its members extraordinary advantages, by mystic arts. That its movements are characterized by the utmost secrecy, and the lips of its subject sealed with an oath or solemn obligation, binding the initiate to secrecy, obedience and mutual succor, while excluding more than one-half of the human family from any share in its counsels or avowed benefits.

Intrusted as we are under God with the keeping and destiny of the church and this great nation, we are confronted by a Secret Empire with organized forces armed, drilled and grasping for power, already numbering its subjects by hundreds of thousands, and counting its treasures by hundreds of millions, which we must meet and overcome by "the sword of the Spirit, which is the Word of God; or cower like cravens at its feet. The issue is thrust upon us, and how best to meet it is a question taxing the ablest and best talent of our day.

Some believe this Secret Empire doomed to speedy dissolution by its own inherent elements, and would leave it to work its own ruin. Others advocate aggressive measures for its overthrow. Some say it is purely a moral question and should be left to the ministry and the churches for solution. Others go further and insist that it should be rebuked socially, outlawed in commerce and made an issue at the ballot box. In whatever else intelligent men differ, all agree that wise, conciliatory and effective methods should be adopted and the opposition united upon the most effective plan for securing the end sought by all.

To secure this union the National Christian Association was organized May 7th, at Pittsbugh, Pa., "to expose, withstand and remove secret societies, Freemasonry in particular, and all other anti-Christian movements, in order to save the churches of Christ from being depraved, to redeem the administration of justice from perversion and our republican government from corruption."

Its objects have been endorsed and its work encouraged by such eminent men as Pres. C. G. Finney, Bishop D. Edwards, A. M. Milligan, D.D., D. A. Wallace, D.D., James McCosh, D.D., Joseph Cook, A. Spaeth, D.D., T. H. Haselquist, D.D., and many others.

Through the labors of Rev. H. H. Hinman and with the hearty co-operation of educators, ministers and distinguished civilians, an inviting field has been opened in the Southern portion of our country; and to further the general cause of Christ and civil liberty by encouraging and strengthening our brethren and diffuse information and stimulate greater activity on this line of Christian work, the National Christian Association will, D. V., hold its twentieth annual convention in Central Congregational church, New Orleans, February 17th, 18th and 20th, 1888.

The general object of this convention is to consider the relation of the secret lodge system to the church of Christ and to civil government. An interesting programme has been arranged and able speakers engaged to discuss vital issues upon a broad basis. Opportunity will be given for brief volunteer speeches and all are invited to attend.

REFORM NEWS.

OHIO AGAIN REPORTS GRANDLY.

An incident of the State Convention—Licking county friends—He knew Odd fellwoship better than Solomon—A Doctor on a front seat—A Conclave Note—Look out!—Drop the muckrake.

UTICA, Ohio, Dec. 14, 1887.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—The report of our recent State meeting was very meager, considering its excellence. This was perhaps my fault as I relied on others. Among the grand testimonies to which we listened was that of Jerome Moody of Mountville, Morgan county. Mr. Moody had for years walked in darkness, being blinded by the lodge, but is now rejoicing in the light. He is endeavoring to rescue others and desires that I assist with lectures. But for a protracted meeting I should be with him now. Learning of this I have come to work for a time in this section.

Utica has for years been noted for its reformers, being the home of many Covenanters and Mr. Caleb Lyons, who, though not able to run the car of reform, has in a substantial way pushed. I received a cordial welcome at his home, as elsewhere. I missed the council of our former recording secretary, Rev. W. J. Coleman, but found the seed he had sown in a county lecture against the lodge not without fruit.

Saturday morning I made my way to the home of Mr. Elmer Harrison, living near Martinsburg, and found him to be a young man with too much judgment to be deluded by lodgery. He attributed his conversion to our principles and later subscription to the Cynosure to his experience in being initiated into the Sons and Daughters of Temperance. We soon arranged for lectures in the Disciple church. Sabbath morning and afternoon I attended the Methodist and Baptist churches, and was invited in both instances to participate in the services. I accepted the latter rather reluctantly, as the preacher's breath smelled strong of tobacco. He told the Lord in prayer that he knew the difficulties under which they as a church labored. I was not at all surprised that they labored under difficulties, when I heard the sermon and learned afterward that he was a zealous advocate of Odd-fellowship. He said, "I have traveled and lectured for the order, and am well posted on their charitable work from the days of Solomon down." He said he would be willing to discuss the subject with any man, but was not prepared just now, and would not want to discuss among his people. I went away feeling that if Solomon had seen him he would have exclaimed, "Vanity of vanities; all is vanity!"

Owing to the darkness and bad roads we arrived at the church a little late in the evening, happily to find it well filled with an excellent audience, which I endeavored not to disappoint. The Lord helped me graciously to present the truth in such a manner as to win the favor of lovers of light, and anger of those who sought darkness. A vote was taken at the close which expressed the people's wish to have the subject further discussed.

Monday evening was very dark but the house was again filled. A doctor of the place, who was a leading Mason, was on the front seat. As I hung up my chart and proceeded to give away the mysteries for which he had paid so much, he appeared somewhat uneasy. Before concluding I gave my usual invitation for any member of the lodge to ask questions or make remarks, reserving the right to ask them questions. The doctor asked if I would be willing to discuss the question with a man whom he might get. I assured him I would be glad to discuss with any fair-minded man. He replied that he thought he could get a man. I asked the doctor several questions to which I received prompt replies; but when I asked if he was prepared for initiation in the manner indicated, he replied, "I am not on the witness stand." I urged that he reply either yes or no, calling the attention of the audience to the fact that he had answered other questions promptly. In short, he proved to be on the witness stand, and the audience was satisfied with his testimony, as expressed somewhat in the collection received. I have taken six subscriptions to the Cynosure here and expect more to-morrow.

Since my last writing I have learned much of the workings of the lodges in this State. At the recent Knight Templar Conclave in Columbus $2,000 were spent for a single supper and ball. The belle of the evening was a woman of immoral character. There was a constant procession from the Park rink where the ball was going on, to the Park saloon. I make this statement on the authority of a leading man in a Christian church of that city who was fully conversant with the facts stated.

There is a man going around in our State trying to organize Prohibitionists into a secret society. Look out for him! The devil always has dead flies to spoil every good ointment.

Friends, if there ever was a time when we should stand firmly together for God and the right, it is now. Some are constantly complaining that we have not done away with secret societies, but rather they are increasing. They are looking every day to their little ten-acre lot, instead of the Lord of heaven and earth. Of course they become disheartened, discouraged, drop their Cynosure, and sit around like an old tub of sour-krout, good for nothing, and in the way of everybody. Oh, let us not with a muckrake get down and gather the straws of earth, but look above to the glittering crown. "The darkest hour is just before the morning." If you want light hear the words of the Saviour, "Awake, thou that sleepest, and arise from the dead, and Christ shall give thee light."

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE SABBATH AND TEMPERANCE MOVEMENT IN NEW YORK.

NEW YORK CITY, Dec. 14, 1887.

EDITOR CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE:—A mass meeting was held Tuesday evening in Steinway Hall "in favor of the Sabbath and Temperance." Hon. William H. Howland, Mayor of Toronto, was the chief speaker. He made this motto a fixture in the Mayor's office, "Except the Lord keep the city the watchman waketh but in vain." The Sabbath was made the keystone of the moral arch. Street cars are not allowed to run in Toronto on Sabbath. The saloons are closed from 6 o'clock Saturday evening until 6 o'clock Monday morning. Only one saloon is allowed to every 400 people. The control is taken out of the hands of the municipal authorities. The amount of liquor consumed has been reduced from seven to three and a half gallons per caput. In the United States thirteen gallons per head are used. It is all very well to talk of moral suasion, but social necessities must take the shape of law or social tyrannies will do so."

Joseph Cook followed. He said: "Let us thank God that there is one city in America which has quit fooling with fools." "You can fool some of the people some of the time. You can fool some people all the time, but you can't fool all the people all the time. The chief mischiefs in the respectable circles are, so far as the temperance reform is concerned, poltroonery and procrastination. In the name of the poltroonery that preceded the abolition of slavery, I ask you to take courage and trample on the poltroonery in dealing with the liquor traffic. Just as you saw it your duty to refuse to vote for any party that was on its knees to the slavery power, so I say in the name of God refuse to vote for any party that is on its knees to the whisky ring." Strong resolutions were adopted calling upon Christians in New York to demand the closing of the saloon from Saturday evening to Monday morning, to abstain from Sabbath traveling, either for pleasure or gain, and to discontinue the publication, buying, selling and reading of newspapers on Sabbath.

Last Sabbath morning and afternoon I preached in the Willoughby Avenue Reformed Presbyterian church, Rev. J. F. Carson, pastor. In the evening I preached in the Franklin Avenue Presbyterian church, Rev. J. W. Hageman, pastor. This congregation numbers 580 members. I was very much taken back when I went to the church and learned that Bro. Hageman had made the following announcement in the morning: "I announced last Sabbath that I would preach to-night on the 'Christian Conference' at Washington. I was providentially kept from attending. But I have done equally well in securing the services of one who was there and who will speak on that subject." A very large audience turned out.

On Monday morning I visited Union Theological Seminary and conferred with Dr. Schaff. He very kindly consented to secure a hearing on National Reform before the Society of Inquiry. The lecture comes the second Monday in January. On Tuesday I visited Poughkeepsie, a city of 22,000 on the Hudson, midway between New York and Albany. I first interviewed Rev. Francis B. Wheeler, D.D., Presbyterian pastor. He was well acquainted with our movement and had read the Statesman for some years. I next visited the Eastman National Business College, C. C. Gains, president. They have a new and commodious building and 300 students, and the president said, "We are like the temple of Janus, never closed." They have a regular course of lectures. National Reform was given a place on their programme, so I will be heard there. I called on the editor of the Eagle, the Republican paper of the city. He very cordially accepted of a column article on our movement.

At Vassar College I spent a half hour very pleasantly with the president, Rev. James M. Taylor, D.D. The college was founded in 1861 by Matthew Vassar. They have 200 acres of ground. After erecting the buildings, he left $275,000 endowment. His purpose was "to found and perpetuate an institution which should accomplish for young women what our colleges accomplish for young men." They have thirty-five "officers of government and instruction" and 300 students. The doctor says, "We are like a family here." "The hours for rising and retiring, the warming and ventilation of rooms, the choice and preparation of food, and the sanitary regulations of the college, are all carefully directed." It is two miles out from the heart of the city.

The elevated railroads in New York carry 500,000 passengers daily. At first they carried morning and evening for 5 cents and charged 10 cents during the day. And when they changed to 5 cents all day, their expense increased $800, but their income $7,000 per day. It is proposed to have underground railways. East river and North river are to be tunneled. These railroads are the product and life current of modern civilization, but they are fast breaking down the Christian Sabbath. Those who hold stock in them are guilty of breaking the Fourth Commandment.

J. M. FOSTER.

HE PINCHED THE BABY AND RAN AWAY.

ADRIAN, Mo., Dec. 10, 1887.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—On or about the first of November last I attended our district meeting at Greenfield, Dade county, and arranged with Bro. M. N. Butler for a series of lectures in Bates county at sometime in the future. Bro. Butler arrived at my house November 30th, and after a short rest we saddled our ponies and were soon in the country billing a meeting at the Fairview school house. Three hours' notice gave us a full house the first night. The second night standing room was in demand. Men and women came for miles, who had not been to church for years. They listened with profound interest to the Bible reading, and at last to the so-called secrets of Masonry. The people were astonished to know that their Masonic neighbors had gone through so much silly tom-foolery and got nothing but that magic word "Mah-hah-bone." A Mason present, the children at school said, pinched his baby to make it cry, so he could have an excuse to go home, which he did before the description of the resurrection of Hiram Abiff. The meeting closed with great enthusiasm.

Bro. Butler announced that he would lecture Sabbath afternoon on the religion of Masonry. Friday afternoon we billed at the Coleville school house for Friday and Saturday nights, and distributed literature over the greater part of four townships. The hour arrived; the people came through the mud and darkness and listened while Bro. Butler gave us the truth. The second night the old school house was completely packed; some members of the fraternity were present, but silent, although they could not sit still on their seats.

We have many warm friends at Colevillc to whom we feel under obligation, more especially Bro. Perry Fancher and wife, who cared for us and our ponies one day and night. They are deeply in sympathy with our cause, and will read the American hereafter. We have met no obstacle but what has been removed. The United Brethren by their trustees closed their church against us, but the school house was opened for us, and the Lord has been with us all the way through. The Masonic preacher failed to fill his appointment at the Fairview school house. At 2 P. M. the people began to gather. Bro. Butler unpacked his Masonic library, and for three hours he showed the people, in the presence of the Worshipful Master of Crescent Hill Lodge, No. 168, that he was master of his subject.

Monday morning we started across the country for New Lancaster, Kansas. About sundown we reached the home of Joseph F. Cook, who is in sympathy with us. The next day we met the trustees of the Union church, who welcomed us by giving up their prayer meeting in favor of the lectures. The audience increased until there were not less than three hundred and fifty people listening to Bro. Butler while he revealed the so-called secrets and the religion of Freemasonry.

We met many warm friends at Lancaster, one of whom was the Rev. Wm. Huffman, who I had not seen for twenty years. He has read the Cynosure, and Ronayne's and Bernard's exposes. He is getting feeble, though faithful as when younger. I started for home next morning, and Bro. Butler for Olathe, Kansas. I am trusting now in the Lord for the result of our work. T. A. COOK.

PITH AND POINT.

A FREEDMEN'S SCHOOL IN NORTH CAROLINA.

We are still at work here among the pines of North Carolina, where we have opened a school and for nearly ten years devoted our time to directing and teaching this poor people. Here we have opened a reading room for the Freedmen, and we need books and magazines and money to fit up the building. If the friends of the Freedmen wish to engage in a good work now is a rare chance to erect a suitable cottage for library and school purposes. Our work is unsectarian.—MRS. N. A. RUTHERFORD, Missionary Teacher, Lumberton, N. C.

MORE PRAYER AND WORK NEEDED.

Masonry is gaining here. Two weeks ago they organized two new lodges in Coshocton, and nearly all belong to the Masons. The lodges are made up of all kinds of characters, the infidel, the profane swearer, the Sabbath-breaker, the gambler, the drunkard, and some other characters still lower, with a sprinkle of professed Christians. —WILLIAM M. BOYD, Canal Lewis, O.

ANARCHY AND SECRETISM.

I am taking an active part in a literary and debating society at our new shool-house, called "Union Hall," where society is hunting a nucleus to form around and shape its future character, as a neighborhood having a moral influence in the world. Our question for debate next Tuesday night is: "Resolved, That secret organizations are the source of all anarchy," I taking the affirmative. It's a great question and my whole soul flows out in it.—L. D. BROWN, Morenci, Ind.

A TESTIMONY WORTH HAVING.

The Cynosure is a first class Gospel witness for Christ —Christian in spirit, pure in doctrine, with kindness and courage of the martyrs in proclaiming it. The Lord bless its editors and publisher and readers —GEORGE CLARK, Oberlin, O.

A WELCOME WAITING.

Oh, that I could have some of the old veteran reformers visit us! That dear old President Blanchard, how I should love to hear him speak before I depart and go home; Bro. Charles Blanchard—I heard him lecture in Freeport some ten years since; dear Bro. Hinman, who has broken bread at my table in Freeport; Bro. Stoddard —if they ever come this way may the Lord direct them to Alta Vista, sixteen miles southwest of Alma, Kans., on the new R.I.R.R.—JESSE HUNTER.

VOTES AS HE PRAYS.

I am the only one here that openly says, "I will not vote for a man that takes his drinks or belongs to a secret order, if I know him to be such." True, we have a Dunker church of twenty members, and the preachers are opposed to secret societies, but they say, "Who shall we vote for, if not for a secretist." I say, Let us rally and together select our men.—J. T. CULLOR, Julesburg, Col.

BIBLE LESSON.

STUDIES IN THE NEW TESTAMENT.

LESSON 1.—Jan. 18.—Herod and John the Baptist.—Matt. 14: 1–18.

GOLDEN TEXT.—And his disciples came and took up the body, and buried it, and went and told Jesus.—v. 12.

[Open the Bible and read the lesson.]

COMMENTS ON THE LESSON BY E. E. FLAGG.

1. Superstition and cruelty are close allies. vs. 1, 2. Some one has said that "they who will not have gods create spectres." The farther people rebound from Bible truth, as a rule, the more ready they are to become the dupes of spiritualism and the grossest forms of error that ever taxed human credulity. The cruel are usually superstitious. Only the murderer of John the Baptist could have entertained the wild idea that Jesus was John risen to life. Charles IX. could see in his last hours only the ghosts of the murdered victims of St. Bartholomew's day; but there is no reason to suppose that martyred saints ever left their abodes of bliss to terrify their most cruel persecutors. His own guilty conscience created the phantoms of terror which thus beset his dying bed.

2. Herod's rash oath. vs. 3–7. Herod was a weak, as well as a cruel and superstitious man. He allowed himself to become the minion of the wicked Herodias, as Ahab of the more notorious Jezebel. To please her he imprisoned John and would have put him to death, only he feared, not to commit an atrocious murder, but "he feared the multitude." A good man fears nothing but sin; a bad man fears what people will think of him. We have here an example of the faithful preacher who declares God's truth without respect of persons, like old Hugh Latimer before Henry VIII. Many say that the pulpit has lost its old power over men; if this is so, it is because it has lost its old courage in rebuking sin. Herod and Henry VIII. were kings; both John and Latimer might have sheltered themselves behind the miserable sophistry that honor to the office demanded that they be silent regarding their sins. How many ministers who preach before our Presidents, governors and others in authority are John the Baptists? Yet none need more to have the plain, unvarnished truth set before them. There is a popular idea in regard to our Chief Executive that "we must honor the office if we cannot honor the man;" and even if a lover of wine, or a violator of the Seventh Commandment is elected to the White House, his sins are condoned by press and pulpit in deference to his high position. But the skin-clad desert prophet never reasoned in this fashion. He believed that a high office so far from being a shield against rebuke should draw down the deepest thunders of God's offended law. Herod's promise was that of a dissolute man, too full of wine to weigh his words or remember that he would be held accountable at the day of judgment for even the idle utterances of the passing moment. Of course he never supposed that a beautiful, delicately-reared princess would outrage every natural instinct by asking for the gory head of John the Baptist. So men who take lodge oaths never dream that they may be asked to shield a murderer or a traitor, or even to become traitors or murderers themselves; but in reality they promise by the very terms of their oath exactly what Herod promised Herodias's daughter—whatever the lodge may ask.

3. The sin of keeping wicked oaths. vs. 8–12. The king was sorry, but for his oath's sake, and the drunken crowd of revelers who witnessed it, he commanded the atrocious deed to be done. Even those who say that repentant Masons act very wickedly in breaking their oaths will hardly contend that Herod ought to have kept his. He was asked for what he had no right to give. So on the same principle Masonic oaths should be confessed and renounced, and the iniquities of the system exposed, for the lodge too asks of a man what he has no right to give. It asks him to surrender his will and conscience unreservedly to another; to "obey every sign and summons from a Master Mason's lodge, if within the length of his cable-tow." How can he, more than Herod, know what may possibly be included under this demand? How can he surrender the immortal jewel of his free will, the God-given pledge and talisman of his manhood? Herod was probably in his cups when he took this oath. Banquets and balls are always the concomitants of a Masonic or Odd-fellow lodge. Thus she surrounds her votaries with exactly the right kind of atmosphere to break down a man's moral principle if he has any and make him ready to do her behests though it be, as in Herod's case, to the loss of his soul.

A SHORT SERMON ON WHEATON COLLEGE.

"And they said, Nothing."—Luke 22: 35.

The context reads, "When I sent you without purse, and scrip, and shoes, lacked ye anything? And they said, Nothing."

Can any one imagine a more destitute condition than the disciples were in when Jesus sent them out to preach. They not only were without money, but they had not even a purse to put it in. They not only had nothing to eat, but no scrip, which was a leather bag to carry food in, and they had no shoes, —literally barefoot. They went without a walking stick or overcoat. Just read the full account of their outfit. (Luke 9: 3). "And he said unto them, Take NOTHING for your journey, neither staves (walking sticks), nor scrip (a provision bag), neither bread (provisions), neither money, neither have two coats apiece." How the negatives are multiplied and intensified.

Well, with such an outfit, where were they to go? Let us see. Luke 10: 3. "Go your ways: behold, I send you forth as lambs among wolves." He sent them right among them, who, not many years after, killed him, and put every one of them except John to a violent death; and to prepare them not to be disappointed he admonished them (John 15: 18–19): "If the world hate you, ye know that it hated me before it hated you; but because I have chosen you out of the world, therefore the world hateth you." What a prospect was this before them. Let each reader of this article face it and see how it looks. Let the professed ministers of this same Jesus face it, and ask themselves if they are willing to accept of the commission, and engage in the work assigned them. Where are they to get the first night's lodging, or the first mouthful of food? These they are to have, but they can't see where they are to come from; but Jesus saw and told them they should have it, "for your heavenly Father knoweth ye hath NEED of all these things." Matt. 6: 32. And they went right out and preached with a bold assurance that the word of Jesus was reliable, and they found it so. God supplied their every want, yet he did it through human hands and hearts and heads. The word of the Son of God is pledged that all his disciples in every age who really accept of his commission upon the conditions upon which it is given, shall have all needed things. His disciples found it so then, and they will find it so now.

What real disciple of Christ would not love to have been one of those disciples, acting on a commission and depending on Jesus for supplies? Would they not choose it, rather than a salary of $5,000 to preach for Beecher's church? Well, they may have it; Jesus is pledged for it. They can't see anything but hatred and death in the world; but the word of Jesus stands good against the world. "Be of good cheer," he says, "for I have overcome the world." Jesus is the giver of every needed thing, and he will do it through human hands and hearts and heads. But his plan is with all his disciples, in all ages, that they can't see an inch before them only as they look to him, and heartily accept of his commission upon the terms he gives it, and look to him as responsible for all needed supplies, and thus he will bind them with indissoluble cords of faith and love to him in all they do and all they have. And this plan will never fail. Whenever and by whomsoever truely accepted and carried out it will prove a success; it was never known to fail.

But Jesus will do it as he has ever done it, and ever will do it, through human hands and hearts and heads. He made these all; he died for them all; he claims them all; and he has a right to them all; and he will use them to supply all their needs, they must give up their hands and hearts and heads to him with which to supply them. This is as much a part of his plan as it is that they shall depend upon him for it, and it is robbery to withhold it from him. I will not argue this question before the true disciples of Christ. They know it is true. They know that they are Christ's with all their powers, and all they have, to be used by him in the work of saving men.

Now let me make a direct personal application to all the readers of the Cynosure. Wheaton College is a power which Christ is using to save and purify men. It is a mighty instrument which Jesus wants and is using. It has accepted his commission and is doing his work. It has twelve teachers qualified and devoted to him. It has graduated men like L. N. Stratton, J. P. Stoddard, C. A. Blanchard, Revs. Hiatt, Ferris and others, both men and women,—all go out to bless the world with a pure Christianity uncontaminated with the defilement of secret lodges. It has four classes of promising young men and women now under its care in the college proper, beside a large number in other departments. These twelve teachers are devoting themselves to their work with the devotion of true disciples of Christ, not seeing whence their support is to come. There is a small fund to sustain them, but it lacks $700 of a sufficient support. Wheaton College has given birth to and sustains the Cynosure. Its ex-president and one of its graduates are its editors. What Anti-mason can do without Wheaton College and the Cynosure? Cripple one and you cripple both: cripple both and you cripple the whole cause. The world is filled with the lodges which are wolves among whom they are sent. They see nothing but the word of Jesus to ensure their support; this they take and have gone out among wolves. We, their friends, are the hands, the heads, and the hearts that Jesus wants to sustain them. Shall he have them? I am a farmer and I will respond for one. Who will volunteer? Seven hundred men with the trifling sum of $1 apiece will make the sum and fill the college and the cause with courage and strength. The drought has narrowed down my means, but I will make one of the seven hundred. Who will right away send a dollar each to the college treasurer? If seven hundred can't be found who have enough love for Jesus to send the little sum of $1, if a hundred and forty will send $5 apiece the work is done. If this number can't be found to pay such a small sum, if seventy will pay $10 each they will fulfill the words of Jesus who has sent them out without staves, purse, or scrip. I will, though hard run, be one on either of these plans. Who will volunteer and make up one of either plans? Let him send his name to the college treasurer, Prof. H. A. Fischer, Wheaton, Ill. Don't hesitate; send in your name. AN ANTI-SECRET FARMER.

THE CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE.

PROSPECTUS FOR THE TWENTIETH YEAR.

As we turn over the leaf for another year the Cynosure would again write at the top of the new page: "Christ always; Christ only." It will more than ever be the purpose of all connected with the paper to make it a power for the coming kingdom of our Lord, before which all the systems of secret worship, mystery and iniquity of the great Babylon must fall. We would be on the CONQUEROR'S side in that day—we will stand for him now in the days of testimony and of tribulation.

THE CYNOSURE during 1888 will give the most earnest attention to the South. The National Convention at New Orleans, Feb. 17th, and the effort, which promises so much success, to put

of the paper into the hands of colored pastors gives a direction to our interests. We also hope that the National Christian Association will be able to put other workers into the Southern field.

The Minor Secret Orders, so-called, will have more respect given to their insinuating and benumbing influence. If Masonry and Odd-fellowship have felt severely the attacks upon their strongholds, they are making good all losses by training up an army of young men whose convictions are paralyzed in respect to secretism by the swarms of orders which cover their modicum of lodgery with a bait of temperance, insurance, patriotism, good fellowship, business aid, etc., etc. The Cynosure will endeavor to rouse our careless churches to see that this evil is likely to be worse than the first.

We have nearly completed arrangements for special Correspondence from the metropolitan cities in different parts of the country. Our readers may expect letters once a month, or oftener, from Boston, New York, Philadelphia, Washington, Cincinnati, New Orleans, Denver, San Francisco and Los Angeles. These letters will give graphic pictures of the earnest American life which throbs in our great cities, with especial reference to the news of the lodges in each.

The very popular Biographical Work of the Cynosure during the three years past will be continued with some features which will be especially attractive. During the last year there have appeared portraits of George B. Cheever, William H. Seward, Daniel Webster, John Brown, Charles Sumner, Charles Francis Adams, Enoch Honeywell, Bishop Hamline, Charles G. Finney, Howard Crosby, Dr. C. F. W. Walther, and Alexander Hamilton. These portraits have been accompanied with sketches which have presented facts of profoundest interest to our discussion, collated after diligent and often exhaustive search. We can promise for the coming year biographies of

JOHN G WHITTIER, the Poet.
JOSEPH COOK the Lecturer.
JAMES MCCOSH, the Philosopher.
JOHN C SPENCER the Lawyer.
JOHN MARSHALL, the Judge.
WILLIAM EWART GLADSTONE, the Statesman.

These are all in preparation. Others whom we do not care at present to mention are in contemplation, whose portraits will adorn the paper and the history of whose lives will enrich them.

Letters from foreign lands we expect to be more frequent and valuable in 1888 than ever. Correspondents in England, Germany, Greece, Turkey, India, West and South Africa, China and Mexico will through our columns be in personal connection with our readers.

Best of all is the noble company of contributors and correspondents in our own land. We hardly need mention them; but it is a pleasure to see these goodly names in print. Here are a few of them:

William F. Davis, the hero of Boston Common.
H. L. Hastings, editor of the "Christian."
Hon. S. V. White, M. C.
Rev. B. A. Imes, Vice-president Nat'l. Cong'l. Council.
Pres. H. H. George, Geneva College.
Rev. C. C. Foote, Detroit.
Geo. W. Clark, the singer.
Bishop M. Wright.
Pres. E. H. Fairchild, Berea College.
Cecil H. Howard, Astor Library.
Rev. Julius Grunert, D. D., Evangelical Synod.
Rev. Wm. Johnston, D. D., United Presbyterian.
Rev. B. Cunz, German Lutheran.
Rev. B. W. Williams, Texas.
Elder J. L. Barlow, Iowa.
Pres. C. A. Blanchard, Wheaton College.
Rev. David McFall, Chambers St. Church, Boston.
Rev. C. W. Hiatt, High St. Church, Columbus.
Prof. Elliott Whipple, Wheaton, late of Romona Institute, Santa Fe.
Elder Nathan Callender, Pennsylvania.
Pres. L. N. Stratton, Wheaton Theological Seminary.
Rev. Henry T. Cheever, Worcester.
Rev. Joel Swartz, D. D., Gettysburg.
Miss E. E. Flagg, Author of "Between Two Opinions."
Mrs. M. A. Blanchard, Wheaton.
Mrs. A. E. Kellogg, Denver.
Hon. S. C. Pomeroy, Washington.
Hon. Halleck Floyd, Indiana.
Rev. W. H. French, D. D., Cincinnati.
Rev. M. A. Gault, Iowa.
Rev. J. M. Foster, Cincinnati.
Rev. J. S. T. Milligan, Kansas.
Rev. William Wishart, D. D., Monmouth.
H. M. Hugunin, former editor "Chicago Eve. Journal."
Capt. A. D. Wood, editor "Censor," Los Angeles.
Rev. R. N. Countee, editor "Living Way," Memphis.
Prof. A. R. Cervine, Augustana College.
Rev. H. W. Lathe, First Church, Northampton.
Rev. J. F. Avery, Mariners' Temple, New York.

But we must forbear. Who can recall these and other names like them without a thrill of happy and grateful recollections. To keep in their company a season were —"worth ten years of common life."

We invite all friends of the past to honor themselves by remaining in this company. The Cynosure gives you a noble fellowship. You can hardly afford to forsake it. Let your name then be found on the list. Do your neighbor a good turn and get his subscription also.

IN ADVANCE $1.50 PER YEAR. Address, the "CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE" Chicago.

TO ALL STUDENTS

IN COLLEGES, THEOLOGICAL SEMINARIES AND ACADEMIES.

The Board of the National Christian Association desiring to arouse an interest among American students in the topics named below, have offered cash prizes for essays on the following topics:

"Secret Societies and the Labor Problem."

"The Relation of Secret Societies to the Temperance Cause."

For the best essay on each of these topics a premium of Twenty Dollars will be paid to its author: for the second in merit a premium of Ten Dollars.

This offer is made to students of both sexes in all the institutions named above, with the following limitations:

1. The length of the essays may not be more than 2,000 words, plainly written.

2. They must be mailed to the "Essay Committee, N. C. A. office, 221 West Madison St., Chicago," before May 1, 1888.

3. The name and address of each writer must be plainly written on a separate sheet accompanying the essay.

4. The Association to have the privilege of publishing as a tract, or in their paper, the Christian Cynosure, any or all the four prize essays; and any others which may seem desirable, if satisfactory arrangements can be made with their authors.

The committee of award have not yet been chosen.

The Sunday-school is considered more as a pleasant pastime than a mighty organization for the evangelization of the city and the country. It is left almost wholly to such volunteers as may be inclined to give their services when they feel like doing so. No solemn obligation is implied when a teacher takes a class; that is, no such obligation as would be implied if the same teacher undertook to work for an earthly master and for "cash" pay for services rendered.

To almost all heroic souls there pertains a certain sternness of character, a stiffness bordering on stubbornness,—an inflexibility akin to obstinacy. Its whole value depends on what is the governing force in the man. Out of this same stuff, intolerance and ignorance make bigots; ecclesiasticism and formalism make popes and persecutors; passion and hatred make demons; and spirituality makes heroes and martyrs.—Dr. A. T. Pierson.

People love Christian singing when there is heart and soul in it, and not sung in an unknown tongue by a professional choir. In the one case it is worship, and the Holy Spirit will use the song; in the other it is entertainment, and the Holy Spirit will have nothing to do with it.

Among the rubbish which the world has heaped upon the church Luther felt round till he found the Rock of Ages.—Todd.

A THOUSAND "CYNOSURES" FOR THE SOUTH

It is but seven years since our reform began to take root in the South. The first efforts sprang from a movement to divorce missions from the secret lodge, which was aided by the Cynosure, but in which the N. C. A., as a body, at first took no special part. Bro. H. H. Hinman spent about a year in this work and was supported by special contributions for the purpose, when his salary was assured by the Association, and Rev. P. S. Feemster engaged for a time to assist him. A demand for the circulation of the Cynosure arose in connection with these efforts, and was fostered and encouraged greatly by Dr. J. E. Roy, then Southern secretary of the American Missionary Association.

Since June 1, 1885, up to the present time a little over $900 have been contributed to send copies of the Cynosure to colored pastors in the South, or an average of less than $450 per annum. The results of this circulation of the paper have been wonderful.

They are—

1. Reports from pastors in all parts of the South, thankfully acknowledging the aid thus given them to overcome the pestilent lodge influence in their churches.

2. The formation of the Good-Will Association of some twenty-five Baptist churches in and about Mobile which forbids secret societies.

3. The sustaining of Rev. R. N. Countee in his seceding from the lodge, and maintaining his paper and church until many Baptist churches and pastors of Tennessee and Arkansas are standing by him.

4. The action of the St. Marion Baptist Association of Arkansas to expel the lodge from their churches.

5. Similar action of the State Baptist Convention of Louisiana, comprising all the churches of that denomination in the State.

6. The condition of the Texas Baptist Convention which is nearly ready for the same action.

7. The founding of schools for the higher education of the colored children in New Iberia, La., and Memphis, Tenn., on the distinctive principle of opposition to secretism.

THIS GRAND WORK

has been accomplished not without the aid of brethren Hinman, Feemster, Woodsmall and others; but while the living agent or the paper could neither alone have achieved so magnificent results, the circulation of the Cynosure has been the great agency, and at the same time the least expensive. It has often been the pioneer, reaching sections where no agent has penetrated, and after his departure keeping alive the fire of reform.

In view of these facts we conceive it to be a duty to call upon the friends of this cause everywhere for means to send A THOUSAND COPIES of the Cynosure for a year to as many pastors in the South, especially the colored Baptists, that the good work now well begun among them may reach to every one of the 800,000 colored members of their churches. The Congregational churches supported by the A. M. A. are already taking the ground of separation from the lodge, under advice from the secretaries of their Association. With these churches saved to Christ from the lodge curse, and the Baptists brought up to the same line, what may not our faith ask for in this respect for the Negro race? An earnest, faithful pushing of our work may, in a few years, redeem them wholly. What more noble object now invites our aid; and to attain it what means more economical, more sure and more convenient can possibly exist than scattering a thousand copies of the Cynosure? If $900 spent in this way can show such results, $1,500 would double them. Let, therefore, every friend of the reform make an effort to contribute to this fund and share in the blessing and triumph which must follow.

A number have already been asked to each make one of a hundred to complete this fund before January, 1888. The reasons for this investment are so convincing that not one has refused. Why should not these hundred shares be immediately taken? If one person cannot assume so much alone, let clubs of two, three, five, or ten make them up. The N. C. A. Board has given its hearty endorsement of the plan; and the friends of reform and of the Negro race, now toiling under this second bondage, have only to know of it, to send back an echo, saying, THE WORK SHALL BE DONE.

The Christian Cynosure.

ON THE PROPOSED THOUSAND CYNOSURES FOR THE SOUTHERN MINISTERS.

A LETTER WORTH READING.

EDITOR CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE:—I am glad to see that you are making an effort to still more widely circulate the Cynosure in the South; and I write in the hope that I may help some in this good work. For it is truly a good work, and a great work that the paper is doing, especially among the colored people. Except the few earnest men and women, white and colored, who are bravely engaged in the reform work, no agency is more effective for good than the Cynosure. In fact, the paper can be made to do a work now that can be done in no other way. Thousands could soon be reached by the paper, and instructed and strengthened, who could not be reached in years by lecturers. Thousands have already been so reached.

Scarcely a week passes that I do not have evidence of the value of the Cynosure in opening the eyes of pastors and others to the harmfulness and sinfulness of secret societies, and in giving them courage to renounce and expose them. Within the past three months I have talked with brethren in Tennessee, Alabama, Mississippi, Arkansas and Louisiana, who have told me that the Cynosure had been instrumental in causing them to quit the lodges. All had seen the evil effects of the secret orders upon their churches and the people generally, but felt that they could not oppose them, or that it would be useless. But the Cynosure heartened them and made them strong enough to raise their voices against them.

No one not acquainted with the situation in many places in the South, where nearly all the men of influence, white and colored, judges, lawyers, doctors, merchants, and even preachers, are members of secret societies, can realize what a revelation and joy it is to our poor colored pastors, who are grieved to see the evils of these orders, but feel powerless to oppose them, to learn, as they do, from the Cynosure, that thousands of the ablest and purest ministers, statesmen and others, are opposed to secret societies, and that a great organization has been effected to expose their evils. It is especially helpful to them to learn that so many colored pastors are renouncing the lodges. Thousands, however, have not yet been reached. Men are still going among the churches and setting up secret lodges among their members, where the leaders have not been warned, who would keep the lodges out of their churches if they could read the Cynosure for a while; as a prominent brother in Mississippi did who told me a few days ago that he had recently kept a man from organizing societies in his churches. In some parts of the country nearly every church has a hall above for one or more secret societies.

The Cynosure is also of great value in our temperance work, I wish that every colored pastor on the Mississippi river and its tributaries could be supplied with it for this feature alone. And I am sure, if friends could see the situation in these regions of moral darkness as those of us do who labor in them, that money enough would soon be furnished to send the paper to all the pastors.

Last night a colored deck-hand was shot by the second-mate on the boat I came up on, the Coahoma. The mate had been drinking and used coarse language in directing the men. One protested, and he was shot down like a dog. They brought the dead man's body to his poor mother. The murderer got off at some landing. Nothing is likely to be done with him. H. WOODSMALL.

OVER ONE-FOURTH RAISED.

The Treasurer reports TWENTY-FIVE AND ONE-HALF of the $15.00 shares this week. This is cheering news. The good letter of Professor Woodsmall ought to encourage every reader of this number to resolve anew to do all in their power to save the colored churches. Every dollar sent in is immediately used and helps take the Cynosure to a colored pastor. We have kept back the names of the donors to this special fund, but it is too goodly a list to hide in a subscription book, and so here we have it:

THE NEW ORLEANS CONVENTION FEBRUARY 17 TO 20, 1888.

THE POET WHITTIER.

As this gifted American approaches his exit, the eyes of the nation turn more and more tenderly toward him, as the young Hebrew prophets followed the footsteps of their Elijah and spoke of his ascent with bated breath. None of the reviewers, not even Mr. Kennedy, who has given his memoirs before his chariot comes for him, do him justice. They compare him with Lowell, Longfellow and Emerson. It is like comparing a natural-grown forest flower to flowers of wax. Art is beautiful and genius is sublime; but nature is both in one.

In 1840, while our national furnace blast was hottest, and the wrath of the slave power bore heaviest on the scattered friends of freedom for the enslaved, a fair was gotten up in Philadelphia to raise funds for the cause, but more to unite the hearts and strengthen the hands of their advocates throughout the United States. A small volume of poems was devised and published in aid of this double object, to be contributed by the Abolitionists, to be called "The North Star." Whittier, of course, was the editor. John Quincy Adams wrote the leading article, and the editor of the Cynosure, by invitation of the committee, was one of the contributors, and, besides his special contribution, he sent a poetic tribute to Whittier himself, which the poet's modesty excluded from the volume, but which has been much published and commended as a just tribute to our national bard. It has been republished two or three times in the the Cynosure by special request, or we would insert it here. We refer to it now as a part of personal introduction of Mr. Whittier to our readers. Mr. Kennedy's life of the poet speaks clearly within the truth when he says that his poetry did as much or more to overthrow slavery than Mr. Garrison's denunciations.

The writer of this sketch was a student in Andover, Dec. 4, 1843, when Whittier and Lewis Tappan were secretaries of the first national anti-slavery convention in Philadelphia. Six thousand dollars were raised in that meeting for the cause. We went to Dr. Woods and said: The slave question will now swallow up all other questions before the American people; and we pleaded with him to commit that then great and popular "school of the prophets" in favor of abolition. But we urged in vain. And that seminary sunk the New England ministry one half by shunning the slavery issue. Garrison first went to Dr. Beecher and other leading clergymen fully expecting encouragement and co-operation. But when he saw they assented to his principles but censured his measures, while they took no meaures of their own, he became disgusted; and he and his followers, Burleigh, Weld, Oliver Johnson, McKim, Codding, Allen, Elizur and Henry C. Wright, with a host of other men, and many women, forsook the communion table and prayer-meeting, and "concerning the faith made shipwreck." Whittier was swayed by them; but though tossed for a time with doubt, he clung to his household altar, and to this day worships Christ with the orthodox Friends.

The Garrisonites forsook both church and state. Whittier was twice elected to the Massachusetts legislature, and served in other civil offices. But "Poeta nascitur non fit." He was born a poet. Why he never married we know not. That he loved we know. No man ever looked back through the dimming years and said of a young girl companion:

> "I see her still! the brow of snow,
> The mild blue eye that glanced below,
> And that high langauge of the look
> Her mind-illumined features took!"

who had not that girl's image graven not only on his memory but in his heart. Shakespeare says,

> "Hanging and wiving go by destiny."

And it would seem that not-marrying follows the same rule.

His biographer Kennedy says, Whittier's reform craze damaged him as a poet. We profoundly differ with him. Opposing slavery was feeling and acting with God, from whom all true inspiration comes. The system was a universal extinguisher of all that is God. The books written by American slave-holders could be counted on the fingers of a single hand. And as to

> "Young loves, young hopes and young remembrances;
> The melody of woods and winds and waters;"

they might as well live in the choke-damp of a mine as in the atmosphere of a plantation. And when young Whittier, whose muse had already out-sung the birds and brooks of his native woodlands, and the deep lullabys of the ocean itself near by, cast in his lot for a quarter of a century with the hated, mobbed and hunted Abolitionists, the angels sent by Christ "to gather out of his kingdom all things that offend, and them which do iniquity, then fanned the young poet's genius with their soft, invisible pinions, and his verse rose as his reputation fell. And though his idyls will live along the valley of the Merrimack while Burns's songs echo by the > "Banks and braes o' bonny Doon," the lava torrent of his appeals to the United States against American slavery will ring through the corridors of history till nations are no more.

> "Say! Shall we scoff at Europe's kings
> While Freedom's flame is dim with us,
> And round our country's altar clings
> The damning shade of slavery's curse?
> "Go! Let us ask of Constantine
> To loose his hold on Poland's throat,
> Or beg the Lord of Mammodh's line
> To spare the struggling Suliote.
> "Will not the scorching answer come,
> From turbulanced Turk and fiery Rus:—
> Go! Loose your fettered slaves at home,
> Then turn, and ask the like of us!"

But the fall of the slave power illustrates and proves the words of Christ to be true—"Without me ye can do nothing." Had we all been non-voting, non-resistant, no-Sabbath, no-prayer-meeting, no-church, no-government Abolitionists, the slave laws, slave coffles, and slave pens would be existing to-day!

Nor should we forget that the Mason lodges fell throughout the North just as the slave question was coming up; and that the Abolitionists were Anti-masons, and the whole national administration was in their hands when the shackles fell, fell by blows from arms unfettered by the lodge. God grant that our beloved Whittier, whose fathers and mothers taught him to abhor the blood-curdling oaths of the lodge, may live to put God's silver trumpet to his lips and wind a blast against "the damning shade" of Masonry's curse, which heaven shall hear and earth shall heed!

DEMONISM AND THE "VOICE OF MASONRY."

Blanchard still says the lodge is demon worship. Probably his own demonism is what he imputes to the lodge. —Voice of Masonry, December.

Then answered the Jews, Say we not well that thou art a Samaritan and hast a devil?—John 8:48.

Here were two parties charging each other with demonism. Christ and his disciples were Moody Christians, Democrats, praying people; in every-day clothes, working, singing, reading and living by the Scriptures. The Jews were priest-governed, praying on the street corners and in their synagogues "to be seen of men," wearing priest regalia, which were "long robes" with "broad phylacteries" or borders, and loved to be called of men "Rabbi, Rabbi." They held secret councils; killed Christ and the apostles; made the worship of God "vain" and his law "void" by human traditions; and their lodge-meetings and mischiefs were so secret that Christ said they were "like graves which appear not, and men that walk over them are not aware of them." Luke 11: 44.

Now will friend Brown, without bantering, but in sober, solemn earnest, tell us which of those parties were the Freemasons and secretists of that day, and which had demons or devils by whom they were led and actuated?" The Cynosure will respectfully and cheerfully publish the answer of the Voice, and make no reply till the following week. We are pleased to see that the Voice rebukes a Mason who rails at the Bible.

MORMONISM MUST GO.

The suit of U. S. Attorney Peters against the Mormon church two months ago, to have a receiver appointed, was successful. Chief Justice Zane granted the demand in an able decision on the 5th of November, and the U. S. Marshal, Frank Dyer, was appointed to the responsible duties of the receivership. In a few days he made a demand for the Temple Block in Salt Lake City, on which stand the Mormon Temple, Assembly Hall, and large Tabernacle. He also took possession of the parsonage, known as the Gardo House, and the church historian's office, leaving men in charge. A demand was also made for all the books, papers, securities, and other personal church property. On the 18th of November Marshal Dyer took charge of the effects of the Perpetual Immigration Society. The assets were nominally $585,832.84 in notes and accounts, with a credit of $167,874.34 to trustees in trust, and a large safe full of papers. The records show that at a conference several years ago the church "forgave" the debts due this society to the amount of $814,064 35. Early in December the receiver went to Ogden and laid claim to church property in that city. In all these cases he met refusal, of course, but Marshal Dyer is a man to have his way notwithstanding. The Deseret News (Mormon organ) of the 14th says that after several delays, in order to have a more amicable adjustment, the Marshal summarily seized the account books in the office of the President of Mormonism. The Mormons cry "Outrage," but in a very humble manner compared to their raving threats of two years ago. Every few days a new gang is marched to jail for six months and pay $300 fine; but this appointment of a receiver is the most crushing blow. Marshal Dyer has had many years of severe experience in Salt Lake. He is a man who will flinch at no danger in the performance of his duty. He believes the Mormon business will not be settled without bloodshed. To the writer he said last year, "There are plenty of assassins among the Mormons ready to do their work; and there is no doubt they have marked some of us who have been most active in the prosecutions. Before they give up I have no doubt they will find some opportunity to wreak their vengeance." We trust the apprehensions of the brave Marshal may be disappointed; but it cannot be concealed that the order of the court has given him a very trying and hazardous office.

OUR WHITTIER NUMBER.—It is most fitting that the Cynosure should remember "the best loved citizen of the United States" upon the occasion of his eightieth birthday, Dec. 17th, since, especially, he upholds the principles it is the mission of this paper to urge. On the 18th of February last the poet wrote from his home at Oak Knoll, Danvers, Massachusetts, to the editor of the Cynosure: "As regards secret societies, I have always kept aloof from them. I can see no good in them to compensate for the real or possible evil."

Again on the 29th of March he wrote from Amesbury: "I suppose thee knew that the Society of Friends do not allow any of their members to join secret societies, or take any oaths. I wish other sects would take the same ground."

It was a most fitting part of this birthday celebration, that the public schools of Chicago, Boston, and numerous other cities held special exercises in honor of a noble man, whose principles and piety may soon, we pray, be as much honored by our school children as they now do his name.

THE AMERICAN has of late some exceedingly able articles on its anti-secrecy page; and its general tone grows stronger and stronger. We should be glad to have its suggestions and exhortations about the New Orleans meeting Feb. 17, and to hear from the National Committee on our political duties in the campaign of 1888 which is now approaching. Will all our praying, thinking men, give us their views of our National chairman Capwell's suggestions respecting this important canvass?

—The Birmingham Free Press has secured a copy of the Sons of Veteran ritual and is printing some interesting selections, which will prove a revelation to some good people who persuade themselves that this is an innocent and harmless organization, good for a boy's plaything.

—D. Archibald, a worker in reform from Canada, is visiting in New England. While at Cambridgeport, Woburn, and other places, he wisely sought opportunities for circulating the Cynosure and tracts through the Y. M. C. A. and other agencies. We wish to commend the efforts of this brother and hope they will frequently be copied.

—Mr. D. P. Mathews of Boston, who does excellent service as correspondent of the Cynosure, we regret to learn has been quite ill, and confined to his room and bed. His letter respecting Dr. Miner's sermon on the anarchists was far enough from an intentional misrepresentation, and he will say a word in correction himself as soon as able to write.

—Rev. Edward Anderson, son of Dr. Rufus Anderson, the secretary for many years of the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions, has lately been installed "Chaplain-in-Chief" of the Grand Army at Norfolk, Conn. When in Quincy, Ill., years ago he openly defended Masonry as a member of the order, and even had the effrontery to present a paper in favor of the lodge before the Illinois State Congregational Association meeting at Princeton.

—Miss Rufina Fry, of Ligonier, Indiana, a lady whose name in the Cynosure office will always be associated with unswerving devotion to Christ in opposing secretism, has written a three-page tract, entitled, "The Sin against the Holy Ghost." She makes a strong argument from the Scriptures upon this subject, to show that the apostate who sells his birthright like Esau, can have no hope of repentance. This tract can be had of Miss Fry for distribution at the rate of 25 cents per hundred.

—The Union Signal reports that some of the Good Templar lodges of Iowa are holding open meetings with "satisfactory results." We presume this means with respect to genuine temperance work and not to the mere satisfaction of lodge leaders. If so it is but another proof of the charge so often made that these lodges are more hindrance than help to the temperance work. When they really do any good work for that reform it is done with open doors, in an open, Christian and American manner. All these orders have to do is to keep on with their open work and they will lose the taste for lodgery. But if they hold a few open meetings only to more readily catch members for their lodge initiation the curse of heaven will rest on their hypocrisy.

It was the Negro vote we are told that gave Atlanta its majority of a thousand against prohibition. But it was the ignorant and vicious Negro vote. All the educated Negroes, the teachers, the preachers, favored prohibition. All the white teachers in the colleges attended by Negroes were earnest in favor of prohibition, and so taught their pupils. If there was any lukewarmness it was on the part of one or two Negro ministers who felt that their race was not receiving fair treatment at the hands of the prohibition leaders; yet they did not help free liquor. The intelligent Negroes were not carried away by the argument that the saloon gave them their equal rights; that the saloon was the only place where they were on a level with the whites. The intelligent men did not ask for Negro equality on the road to hell. Now this is, or ought to be, a good object lesson for the better class of whites in the South. It ought to teach them that the safety of the South rests in the education of the Negro. He must be lifted up in intelligence and virtue; and the schools which teach such virtue and intelligence are the greatest boon to the South. Those who want an ignorant, drunken, dangerous Negro proletariat in the South should oppose Negro education. Those who want a New South of enterprise, temperance and virtue, should bend every energy to educate the poor, both black and white. The immense importance of this duty cannot be over-estimated, and Atlanta now emphasizes it.—Independent.

LITERATURE.

The Map Graphic is the latest and happiest of conceptions in the chart line. The January number is a four-page sheet, the first containing a beautifully printed and colored map, 17x22 inches, of the environs of Chicago from Kenosha on the north to Joliet on the south, including towns fifty miles west of this city. There are some thirty lines of railway converging toward the city, all accurately drawn; with the hundreds of suburban towns, which have begun to be absorbed in the great municipal vortex. This map itself is a valuable companion to all who are interested in the city and its environs, but beyond this is the sketches of the city and its outlying towns, with an entertaining introductory chapter of an Historical Geography of North America, illustrated by rare and valuable maps. In this department of historical research Mr. Blanchard is an enthusiast and an authority. His new enterprise is every way worthy of success. The next issue of the Graphic will probably contain a fine new map of Chicago including the late additions to the corporate limits. Compiled and published by Rufus Blanchard, 141 Wabash Ave., Chicago.

Reading the Bible with Relish By Rev. Wilbur F. Crafts. 12mo., 64 pp., 15 cts. This book contains 365 brief Bible readings for daily home worship, daily chapel exercises in colleges and schools, and daily Bible study; traversing the Bible chronologically; omitting the less important parts, but concisely epitomizing them in connecting links; introducing Psalms, prophecies and epistles where they will light up the history and be lighted up by it; "making the Bible read like a romance, like a new book." The book also contains the Bible markings of Mr. Moody's Bibles. Published by Pocket Quarterly, 74 E. 90th St., N.Y.

Pocket Quarterly for Teachers of Children, January to March. Edited by Mrs. Wilbur F. Crafts. 12mo, 40 pp. Published as above. This lesson help is suitable not only for primary teachers, but also for all teachers of children under twelve years of age, and for mothers and pastors.

The Missionary Review closed its tenth volume with the death of its founder and editor, R.G Wilder; the new volume opens a new series, the name of the magazine is enlarged, in poor taste we think, to Missionary Review of the World; nor is the caricature of an angel an inspiring object; but under the new management the scope of the magazine is to be enlarged to include the literature of missions, reports of organized missionary work, correspondence from missionaries, the international work of missions, monthly report of mission work, monthly concert and statistics. Funk and Wagnalls, the well known New York publishers, have undertaken the business management. This number contains a fine portrait of Dr. Wilder from a photograph, and Dr. Pierson's sketch of his life is a noble tribute to a man whose devotion to Christ was as unselfish as it was sincere. Other editorials on "Missionary Problems in India," and "Biography of Moffatt," with an article on the "Christian and non-Christian Religions," by Prof. Williams of Oxford, England, are excellent proof that the new magazine will easily continue to hold first place among the missionary publications, and will be a powerful factor in bringing in the day when missionary papers will be all the church papers we want.

The Library Magazine favors American writers for the present month, Henry Burroughs, Prof. Sumner and Richard Henry Stoddard appearing in its list. Biographical articles are on King Alfred, Samuel Johnson, Dinah Mulock Craik, Zola and Madame Necker. Social and political science has place in "The Boon of Nature" and "Wealth and the Working Classes," while all will read with pleasure "In Mammoth Cave," "The Russian Pacific Railway," "Missions and Missionaries in Africa," and "The Changing Status of Woman."

The poet Whittier has a ballad entitled "The Brown Dwarf of Rugen" in the forthcoming (January) number of St. Nicholas. E.H. Blashfield furnishes it with several illustrations. The eightieth anniversary of the poet's birth, just celebrated, lends interest to this the longest poem he has given to the public for some years. Prof. Phillip Schaff will contribute the opening paper in the January Century. His subject is "The Roman Catacombs," their origin and character, and their historic value. Illustrations accompany the article, showing the rough sculpture and symbolic art of the martyr's tombs.

A most novel, convenient and valuable business calendar for 1888 is the Columbia Bicycle Calendar and Stand, just issued by the Pope Mfg. Co, of Boston, Mass. In this calendar a new departure has been made, decidedly unique and different from any previous attempt at calendar construction. The calendar proper is in the form of a pad, containing 366 leaves, one for each day in the year, and a portion of each leaf is left blank for convenient memoranda.

Vick's Magazine begins a long article on Weather and Crops which a farmer would expect to find full of sage advice and prognostication. Not so with Vick. Weather and crops are all flowers and beauty with this charming floral guide and companion. House plants, and some new flowers and grapes have attractive articles.

THE HOME.

REST AT LAST.

When on my day of life the night is falling,
And, in the winds from unsunned spaces blown,
I hear far voices out of darkness calling
My feet to paths unknown.

Thou who hast made my home of life so pleasant,
Leave not its tenant when its walls decay;
O Love divine, O Helper ever present,
Be Thou my strength and stay!

Be near me when all else is from me drifting,
Earth, sky, home's pictures, days of shade and shine,
And kindly faces to my own uplifting
The love which answers mine.

I have but Thee, O Father! Let Thy spirit
Be with me then to comfort and uphold;
No gate of pearl, no branch of palm, I merit,
Nor street of shining gold.

Suffice it if—my good and ill unreckoned,
And both forgiven through Thy abounding Grace—
I find myself by hands familiar beckoned
Unto my fitting place.

Some humble door among Thy many mansions,
Some sheltering shade where sin and striving cease,
And flows forever through heaven's green expansions
The river of Thy peace.

There from the music round about me stealing,
I fain would learn the new and holy song,
And find at last, beneath Thy trees of healing,
The life for which I long.

—J. G. Whittier.

MARRIAGES.—CIVIL AND DIVINE.

Marriage is a two-fold institution. It is a legal contract which answers to the physical relations of the agreement, and many marriages, so-called, never rise above this plane because the parties entering into the covenant are incapable of any higher union.

The Negroes of the South often formed their alliances by what they called "taking up together." This idea of marriage was on the plane of their moral and intellectual development, being just one degree above the relations of the animals.

Rising in the intellectual scale, just one grade above the Negro method of "taking up together," we find the "civil contract" marriages of our day. They are rightly named—they are civil contracts, nothing more,—and of course can be "broken at the option of the parties" with rather more ease than a man can get out of a poor investment in real estate. They are only legal, and are civil perhaps during the "honeymoon." They pertain merely to the physical and financial relations of marriage.

The woman pledges herself to certain relations, with the mental reservation that they shall last only while the man's purse holds out; and if the alliance is at all equal, the man pledges himself to pay her bills, with the intention of doing so only until he sees some one that he admires more. In other words, he takes an option on a pretty girl until her health and beauty fade, when he will feel perfectly justified in seeking other companionship. When a civil contract for physical purposes is all there is of so many marriages, we cannot wonder the divorce courts have their dockets full, and human misery is daily exhibited in the newspapers. An alliance of this kind is as high as some men and women can reach, because in their intellectual and moral weakness, they cannot conceive of any higher relation.

But the institution which was ordained of God as the model relationship of life is something entirely above and beyond these lower alliances. The divine covenant between man and woman recognizes the civil tie, but the moral and spiritual union is as far above the civil code as the intellectual bond is above the physical relation.

The ideal marriage contemplated by its Divine Author can only be attained by parties who are capable of appreciating its purity and strength. As well might we call the relation between parent and child a civil one, as to call a perfect marriage a civil contract.

There is a legal relation between parent and child, and among immoral people it is sometimes necessary to enforce it, but in the genuine mother or loving father, this fact is overwhelmed and lost in the resistless tide of parental love.

When high moral natures meet upon the tide of life, and clasp hands in perfect union, their intellectual and spiritual natures are blended together. Their moral strength is united, and their whole beings are so interwoven with each other that they become indeed "one flesh." These are they "whom God has joined together," and it is from these divine unions that the children are born who become brain and moral strength of the world. In humble cottages, lighted by the watchfires of love, are rocked the cradles that contain our poets, scientists, reformers and statesmen.

In a perfect marriage the civil tie is merely an incident in the divine covenant; so deep and strong and pure is the bond that the devil himself cannot break it, for it is born of God and belongs to him. It is the one element of original purity left to man, and the curse has touched only its physical relations.

The deep, quenchless tide of self-sacrificing love sweeps on within its sacred domains until it flows into the broad river of life. This never-failing love that God has bequeathed to man gleams like the stars upon eternity's ocean, until its rays are mingled with those of "the bright and morning star."

The sacred light of connubial love was lighted at the watchfires of the angels in the morning of time, and it shall illumine the bright altars of home until it is blended with the radiant light of God's city. Afflictions cannot drown it, darkness cannot hide it, poverty will not harm it, evil influences cannot conquer it, time will not crush it, and death itself cannot kill it, for it shall arise with a new glory on the resurrection morning and gleam anew in living, loving hearts, where perils cannot reach it and God's own loving hand shall crown it.—Mrs. H. V. Reed, in the Union Signal.

STRONG FOUNDATIONS.

A story is told of Lepaux, a member of the French directory, that with much thought and study he had invented a new religion to be called "Theophilanthropy," a kind of organize Rousseauism, and that being disappointed in its not being readily approved and adopted, he complained to Talleyrand of the difficulty he found in introducing it.

"I am not surprised," said Talleyrand, "at the difficulty you find in your effort. It is no easy matter to introduce a new religion. But there is one thing I would advise you to do, and then, perhaps, you might succeed."

"What is it? what is it?" asked the other with eagerness.

"It is this," said Talleyrand. "Go and be crucified, and then be buried, and then go on working miracles, raising the dead, and healing all manner of diseases, and casting out devils, and then it is possible that you might accomplish your end!"

And the philosopher, crest-fallen and confounded, went away silent.

The anecdote shows, in a fresh and striking light, how firm the foundation on which Christianity and the faith of the Christian rest. "Ransack all history," says an able writer, "and you cannot find a single event more satisfactorily proved than the resurrection of Christ from the dead." And says another, a distinguished jurist: "If human evidence has ever proved, or ever can prove anything, then the miracles of Christ are proved beyond the shadow of a doubt." And yet the miracles and resurrection of Christ prove his divinity; and as Napoleon said, "His divinity once admitted, Christianity appears with the precision and clearness of algebra—it has the connection and unity of a science."

And on this strong foundation it is that Christianity and the Christian faith rest. And how absolutely immovable that foundation is, how absolutely convincing the evidence from this source, we hardly realize until, like Talleyrand, we call on the objector himself to be crucified, himself to rise from the dead, and himself to work miracles, as Christ did throughout Jerusalem and all Judea, in the presence of thousands and tens of thousands, both enemies and friends.

It was a most assuring as well as comforting thought, that this external evidence from without can never be shaken while human testimony has value or meaning. And when we add to this the internal evidence—the fact that thousands and millions of Christians have felt, in their own experience, that the Gospel is true, just as the hungry man knows when he is fed, or the thirsty when he has drank; just as we know the existence of the sun because we see its light and feel its heat—then the foundation on which as Christians we rest, stands doubly sure to the soul. Heaven and earth may pass away, but God's Word and all that rests upon it shall abide forever.—Words and Weapons.

For the church that is not active, "the Lord has no use, the world has no respect, and the devil has no dread."—McArthur.

No grace is more necessary to the Christian worker than fidelity, the humble grace that marches on in sunshine and storm, when no banners are waving and there is no music to cheer the weary feet.—Nichols.

"IF I HAD ONLY SPOKE HIM FAIR AT LAST."

The morning after I lectured in Wilkesbarre there was a great colliery explosion. Hundreds of Cornish miners were killed and their corpses lay at the mouth of the coal mine for recognition. Wives were wringing their hands and children were crying, and a wail of desolation filled the air.

Sitting at the mouth by a pale corpse was a young wife. She looked at her husband, but uttered no cry; her eyes were dry. She rocked herself to and fro, her face white with anguish.

"Oh, that I had spoke fair to him at the end!" she moaned. "Oh, that he would come to life one minute that I could say, 'Jimmy, forgive me,' but nothing can help me now. Oh, I could bear it all if I'd only spoke fair to him at the end!"

And then at last, the story came. They had been married a year, she and Jim; and they both "had tempers," but Jim, he was always the first to make up. And this very morning they had had trouble.

It began because breakfast wasn't ready, and the fire wouldn't burn; and they had said hard words, both of them. But at the very last, though breakfast had not been fit to eat, Jim had turned round at the door and said:

"'Gi'e me a kiss, lass. You know you love me, and we won't part in ill-blood.'

"No, Jimmy, I don't love you!" I said, petulantly.

"'Gi'e me one kiss, lass,' pleaded Jimmy.

"No, not one! And now —," and then the tears rushed to her eyes. With awful sobs she flung her arms around the corpse.

"Dear Jimmy! Darling Jimmy, speak to me now," she mourned. "Say you forgive me!"

"Do not grieve so hopelessly," I said; "perhaps Jimmy knows what you feel now."

But the mourner's ears were deaf to all comfort, and the wailing cry came again and again:

"Oh, if I had only spoke him fair at the last!"

It is not an uncommon story, this. We quarrel with those we love, and part, and meet and make up again; and death is merciful, and waits till we are at peace; yet how possible is just such an experience to any one of us, who parts with some dear one in anger, or who lets the sun go down upon wrath.

But it is always the noblest nature, the most loyal heart, which is the first to cry, "I was wrong; forgive me."—Eli Perkins's Book.

A LITTLE GIRL'S LEGACY.

A little girl, ten years old, lay on her death-bed. It was hard to part with the pet of the family; with her golden hair, her loving blue eyes, and affectionate nature, how could she be given up? Her father fell upon his knees by his darling's bedside and wept bitterly. He tried to say, but could not, "Thy will be done." It was a struggle and a trial such as he had never before experienced. His sobs disturbed the child, who had been lying apparently unconscious. She opened her eyes and looked distressed. "Papa, dear papa," she said at length. "What, my dear?" answered the father. "Papa," she asked in faint, broken accents, "how much do I cost you every year?" "Hush dear; be quiet," he replied, in great agitation, for he feared that delirium was coming on. "But, please papa, how much do I cost you?" To soothe her he replied, though with a trembling voice: "Well, dearest, perhaps $200 or $300. What then, darling?" "Because, papa, I thought maybe you would lay it out this year in Bibles for poor children to remember me by." With a bursting heart, her father replied, kissing her clammy brow: "I will, my precious child; yes!" he added, after a pause, "I will do it every year as long as I live; and thus my Lillian shall yet speak and draw hundreds and thousands after her to heaven."

Would it not be better and more advisable for some of the professors of Christianity to spend more for the poor, and not so much for the unnecessary worldly things which are so much seen among Christian professors? Oh, how many poor children could be clothed and fed with the money which is spent unnecessarily and to keep up with the fashions! Let us learn a lesson from this incident which has been selected for our consideration.—Selected.

A GENEROUS HORSE.

A number of horses are kept together at Independence. A few days ago a load of alfalfa hay was brought and put in the yard near the stable. One horse was loose in the yard, the other two being tied up in the stable, the door being left open. After eating a few bites of the alfalfa, of which he is very fond, the loose horse appeared to remember that his companions were debarred from the feast. He took large mouthfuls of the alfalfa, carried it into the stable, and placed it before the other horses.—Inyo, Cal., Independent.

HOW TO DO IT.

The fields are all white,
And the reapers are few;
We children are willing,
But what can we do
To work for our Lord in his harvest?

Our hands are so small,
And our works are so weak,
We cannot teach others;
How then shall we seek
To work for our Lord in his harvest?

We'll work by our prayers,
By the pennies we bring,
By small self denials—
The least little thing
May work for our Lord in his harvest.

Until, by and by,
As the years pass at length,
We too may be reapers
And go forth in strength
To work for our Lord in his harvest. —Sel.

MIND THE DOOR.

Have you ever noticed how strong a street door is? how thick the wood is? how heavy the hinges? what large bolts it has? and what a grim lock? If there was nothing of value in the house, or no thieves outside, this would not be wanted; but as you know there are things of value within, and bad men without, there is need that the door be strong; and we must mind the door, especially as to barring and bolting it at night.

We have a house—our hearts may be called that house. Wicked things are forever trying to break in and go out of our heart. Let us see what some of these bad things are.

Who is at the door? Ah, I know him! It is Anger. What a frown there is on his face! How his lips quiver! How fierce his looks are! We will bolt the door and not let him in, or he will do us harm.

Who is that? It is Pride. How haughty he seems! He looks down on everything as though it was too mean for his notice. No, sir, we shall not let you in, so you may go.

Who is this? It must be Vanity, with his flaunting strut and gay clothes. He is never so well pleased as when he has a fine dress to wear, and is admired. You will not come in, sir; we have too much to do to attend to such fine folks as you.

Mind the door! Here comes a stranger. By his sleepy look and slow pace we think we know him. It is Sloth. He likes nothing better than to lie in my house, sleep, and yawn my life away, and bring me ruin. No, no, you idle fellow! work is pleasure, and I have much to do. Go away, you shall not come in.

But who is this? What a sweet smile! What a kind face! She looks like an angel! It is Love. How happy she will make us if we ask her in! Come in! Come in! We must unbar the door for you.

Oh, if children kept the door of their hearts shut, bad words and wicked thoughts would not go in and out as they do. Open the door to all things good; shut the door to all things bad! We must mark well who comes to the door before we open it, if we would grow to be good men and women. Keep guard—mind the door of your hearts!—Young Churchman.

TEMPERANCE.

TRUE INDEPENDENCE.

BY I. N. KANAGA.

This implies perfect freedom from any dominant power. It is an assured liberty from all servility and bondage. To be truly and pre-eminently free we can in no sense become slaves. Independence in its noblest sense presupposes that we are in no wise bound by any coercive law or ever pay servile homage to the passions and appetites of our lower nature. For if we are verily God's freemen we "are free indeed." Then if free we cannot be in bondage to any being or any thing.

Hence, if we are, as a nation, independent indeed in the best sense of that term, we must not, we can not be truckling slaves. So then we must be delivered entirely and forever from the vile and ruinous use of opium, tobacco and strong drink. These and all other poisonous or hurtful causes of mental, moral and physical degeneracy and ruin must be entirely put away and renounced forever if we would be truly free and nobly independent.

In this light—and is it not the true light on this momentous subject—how far as a people, as a nation are we from a noble, veritable independence? Have we not in a great measure, at least in the opium, tobacco and liquor traffic, riveted our own chains of a most servile and base slavery? Let us arise, therefore, in the strength of our God and put away these villainous national idols, these perpetual curses and perils to our liberty, happiness and perpetuity! Then and only then shall we be able to say:

"We bow to no power, save One that's on high,
Nor bend to a mortal a suppliant knee,
But the stars and the stripes float out on the sky,
Distinct as the billows, but one as the sea!"

Newark, N .J.

AFTER THE BABY CAME.

There had been little joy in the married life of Peter and Margaret Smith. "Times went hard" with them after Peter lost his place in a large store. His wife knew why he had been sent away, and so did the keeper of the corner saloon. Margaret had been forced to earn their daily bread by washing—new work for her, and a bitter trial. Exhausted with her toil, she often reproached her husband. And Peter, as savage as a wounded lion, after unsuccessful efforts to get a situation, would rush away to that dreadful corner. Margaret saw this earthly prop growing daily more and more insecure, and knew not how to turn to Christ for comfort.

Just then the baby came, their first.

"What a pity, and they so poor!" said the neighbors, and Margaret thought so too, as she lay upon her bed faint and hollow-eyed. But despite the lack of comforts and the gloomy future, a great peace suddenly fell upon her. It was the pure joy of motherhood that filled the poor ignorant woman's heart. Poverty could not stifle it, and in Peter's eyes it crowned her with all graces. The tiny thing that had come to them seemed too sacred for their keeping.

"It can't be she belongs to such as we, Maggie!" he would say, brokenly, scarcely touching the new comer with the tip of his finger. Then, as he noted the new expression on his wife's face, "It's like her mother she'll be, and a fine woman, too!"

And Margaret, watching the infant in the long hours when Peter was off, would say:

"The child favors her father. Peter is not like other men. If he'd only keep away from the corner, I'd be happy!"

Strangly enough, Peter left his old haunt after the baby came. Every spare moment was given to it and the mother. She was so quiet and loving that he feared he would lose her.

"If she'd be a bit cross with me now and then, I'd feel easier," he mused, brushing his eyes with his coat sleeve.

" 'Taint natural that her and me should agree so well."

But when he told the sick woman this she smiled and took gently his hand.

"I hope I shall be a better wife to you, Peter. I want to speak to you as I would have the child speak when she grows up."

"It's a sight more comfortable if you feel just as well," admitted her husband.

When Margaret was well again she proposed to go out washing, but Peter would not hear of it.

"It's a pity if I can't earn enough for two of us and the child. She would grieve for ye; do ye bide at home with her, Maggie!"

Peter managed somehow, with Margaret's economy, and they were "not a bit the poorer for the baby."

It was a wonderful child, even the neighbors thought, as it grew in beauty and intelligence. How they planned for the future in the happy evenings when Margaret sewed and Peter held his tiny daughter! And if there was a bit of money to spare, Peter invested it for the child, bringing home queer specimens of bonnets and strange dress paterns, which Margaret thought beautiful because he bought them, as she cut the wee girlie's dresses after a fashion of her own. The baby was borne in its proud father's arms in the summer evenings—a quaint picture, but very winsome, with its sweet face and wistful blue eyes. Peter was often awestruck as the babe looked at him in her gentle, grave way. Margaret cradled her tenderly.

Before the summer ended the child drooped.

"Put on the little maid's bonnet and her best dress, Maggie; I'll take her out on the bridge. Mayhap the ocean air 'll 'liven her a bit."

The baby coaxed him to take her with upheld arms, and Peter started out. He had to pass the corner. An old comrade called to him:

"Don't slight friends, Peter; come in and have a drink."

This seconded by a fierce prompting from his old appetite, Peter turned to go in. He glanced at the child he bore; her eyes were upon his face, wistful and loving. He paused.

"Signed the pledge, comrade?" said the other.

"Not I," said Peter; "but it's no place for the child."

While he hesitated his friend rose upon his unsteady feet to "see the little lass." Peter's whole soul went against this. His baby daughter was too precious for such company. He hurried away battling with new thoughts. If the rum shop and drinking men were unfit for her, surely he, who was her guide and companion, ought to shun them, also. For the first time he realized his responsibility; it seemed awful. A prayer sprang to his lips:

"Our Father who art in heaven, make me fit to be the father of this child."

Peter never doubted that the petition was heard and that his steps turned in the better way on that sultry afternoon when the baby kept him from his old temptation.

"It came to me as if it were sent," he told Margaret, "the wrong way I was going, after the baby came. Let us take a new start, Maggie. We'll go to church, if we havn't good clothes; we'll get us a Bible and read in it every day. I believe the child was sent for this purpose," added Peter. "There's somewhat about her different from others."

Thus they were led to the feet of Jesus. The family altar was established in their humble home, and Peter and Margaret mingled with God's people. They have no child now; those wistful eyes are closed forever, but her parents are not wholly desolate, for He who once entered earth in the form of a babe has given them the blessed hope of meeting her again.—Christian Herald.

A SIGHT TO BEHOLD.

What a crowd! Look at them! Choice company! Beloved of unprincipled politicians! Holding the balance of power in the city. Look at them, an army of 8,034 liquor dealers in New York city. What is their record? This: 2,864 of the mean crowd have been inmates of the county prison; 1,764 have been confined in police stations; 1,616 have been tried and escaped justice; 6,090 are Germans and Irish, and only 100 are Americans; 3,560 are women; half of the whole number are said to be convicts or attaches or frequenters of gambling hells and brothels. Choice company!—Evangelical Messenger.

The Signs of the Times gives this answer to the tobacco question. "Is it possible that a man who is bound with such fetters is a Christian? We say, No. He may say, 'Lord, Lord,' but he is not a Bible Christian. The Christian must seek first the kingdom of God and his righteousness; he must hunger and thirst after righteousness; his condition is described in the words of the Psalmist: 'My soul longeth, yea, even fainteth for the courts of the Lord; my heart and my flesh crieth out for the living God.' Psa. 84: 2. But the habitual tobacco-user seeks first his tobacco; his flesh cries out for tobacco above everything else. If he is a professed minister of the Gospel, he depends upon his cigar even for the inspiration to make a fervent prayer or write or deliver an elegant sermon; so that even in his professed service for the Lord he depends, not upon the Lord, but upon his tobacco. We say that it is the worst form of idolatry, when tobacco is depended upon to help do the work of the Lord. And everyone who is addicted to the use of tobacco is held in the same kind of bondage. No man can have the Lord, nor even his family or his business, first in his thoughts, if he uses tobacco. The vile stuff will assert and maintain its claim to have the first place. Once more. The Apostle Paul exhorts us to 'cleanse ourselves from all filthiness of the flesh and spirit, perfecting holiness in the fear of God.' 2 Cor. 7: 1. Certainly this includes tobacco; for all the other filthiness of which the flesh is capable cannot outrank the filthiness which comes from tobacco-using. Again, we are told of those who expect to see Christ as he is, and be with him when he comes, that 'every man that hath this hope in him purifieth himself, even as he is pure.' 1 John 3: 3. The Christian must be like Christ; but can anyone imagine Christ using tobacco? The very thought is abhorrent, and seems almost blasphemous. But if tobacco-using were not a sin, it would not be difficult to associate it with thoughts of Christ for sin is the only thing that is foreign to Christ's nature."—Reformed Presbyterian and Covenanter.

RELIGIOUS NEWS.

THE REVIVAL IN COLUMBUS, OHIO.

Rev. C. W. Hiatt of High Street Church writes as below to the Advance of Dr. Munhall's work:

"The five weeks' series of evangelistic meetings which were held by the pastors' Union, of Columbus, under the direction of Rev. L. W. Munhall, closed Thanksgiving night. The progress and results of the movement have proved most satisfactory. Dr. Munhall has few, if any, equals as a leader. He indulges in no sensationalism and rushes to no extremes. His method is entirely Scriptural, and every position he takes is fortified by a "Thus saith the Lord." It was easy to see at the outset that if any results were to be realized they would come in demonstration of the power of the rightly divided Word. Great has been the benefit of this Bible unfolding.

"First, it is well known that two thousand people have made public confession of Christ, at least a thousand of whom are now under the special care of the pastors. These are not children save in small proportion. At one meeting for young men only, one thousand manly fellows arose for prayers, and four hundred accepted Christ. Such a scene is rarely witnessed in a lifetime.

"Second, the membership of the twenty-three churches have been wondrously revived and strengthened in the faith. Had there been no soul reached beyond the pale of the church, such an awakening within it would have more than repaid the cost and labor of the meetings. It is greatly encouraging to the ministers to note the large increase in the number of those who carry their Bibles to Sabbath services, and to mark the growth in all the congregations as well."

THE TEXAS FREE METHODIST CONFERENCE in its report on reforms voted: "We are in favor of radical reforms, and are opposed to all that is opposed to the will of God, and that will hinder the salvation of souls in our midst, and we are ready to assist in every true reform, either social or religious." In addition to a strong condemnation of the liquor traffic and tobacco, the following was said of the lodge: "We believe that oath-bound, secret societies are opposed to both the letter and the spirit of the Gospel of Jesus Christ, and that no one with the true light of God in his soul can be a Christian and belong to any of them. We believe that they are a hindrance to the work of God in substituting in many instances their pagan rites and ceremonies for the religion of Jesus Christ, thereby deceiving the souls of men.

"Masonry, especially, has laid its unhallowed hands on the Bible, and professes to shed forth the light of truth upon its votaries, through the silly mutterings and solemn mockeries of its Christless forms. It tries to get control of the affairs of state. It enters our halls of justice, seeking to influence our judges and corrupt our juries; and it shields its sworn votaries, whether right or wrong. In many instances it has got into the church, and there guards the door of conferences, controls the appointments, and with its iron grip compels ministers to bow to its mandates, or be driven from the conference.

"Resolved, That we as a conference will do our utmost to destroy these evils from our midst."

—Bro. J. Augustus Cole of West Africa preached morning and evening on a late Sabbath in Syracuse, New York. A deep interest is being taken in the African mission, which he is about inaugurating, by the Wesleyan churches.

—Rev. L. Swartz, late of Belvidere, Ill., has been assisting in revival services in the Wesleyan church at Wheaton.

—A very interesting revival work is going on in connection with the labors of Prof. H. A. Fischer of the N. C. A. Board in Prospect Park, Ill. Ever since he preached a sermon warning against the secret societies the work has grown steadily in power; and among the adults who have come out for Christ is a gentleman who was a lodge missionary a few years ago, belonging to almost every order he could get into, as his friends said, among them the Scotch Rite Consistory of 32° Masons in this city. He has now begun to pray with his family and praise God for a better salvation than Masonry can supply.

—It is said since prohibition has been enforced in Kansas, church membership has increased from ten to forty per cent.

—The Presbyterian Synod of Nebraska has declared the high license system of that State a failure, and strongly advocates prohibition.

—The Swedish Evangelical Mission, Lutheran, on the North Side, Chicago, has just finished its new church edifice, located on the corner of Market and Whiting streets. This is the largest Swedish church in the city, having seating capacity for 2,000 persons. The dedication services, in English, were held last Sunday, Dec. 18, at 2:30 and 7:30 P. M., when addresses were given by Drs. Noble, Goodwin, and D. C. Marquis.

—Mr. Moody concluded his labors in this city on last Sabbath, says the United Presbyterian of the 15th. The meetings during the week were largely attended, some of them by more than could be comfortably accommodated in the rink. Every evening, after Monday evening, the audience was composed of men only, and an effort was made to secure the attendance of none but those who were not in the habit of attending church. How far this effort was successful may be questioned, but it is certain that many were present who are not regular hearers of the Gospel. Mr. Moody made some of his most powerful appeals to these men, and showed his wonderful skill in holding and moving an audience. That he did not speak in vain was evident from the number who sought the inquiry room that they might learn more of the way of salvation.

—The committees appointed by the last General Assemblies of the Northern and Southern Presbyterian churches met in Louisville last week for the purpose of taking steps looking to a union of the two bodies. The conference is the result of harmony of action and opinion evidenced at the last General Assemblies, at which the committees were appointed. No definite action can be taken at the meeting, the province of the committee being only to report and recommend the General Assemblies at the ensuing annual meeting.

—Concordia Seminary, St. Louis, has just lost another devoted teacher and learned man, in the death of Prof. Schaller, from paralysis on the 29th ult.

—The Paris Missionary Society established in 1822, dedicated its new seminary at Paris on May 31st, and paid for its price of $50,000. It wiped out a deficit of $14,000 and had money enough in its treasury to start the Congo mission besides supporting the older fields in South Africa, on the Senegal and on the Tahiti Islands. The latter field is severely suffering from the intolerance of the French colonial government, which is atheistic at home and jesuitic in foreign parts.

—Pera Johannes, a Persian, educated at Hermannsburg, is patiently working among his countrymen, the Nestorians, in Persia (Kurdistan). He has lately established four primary schools, the teachers of which had studied with him the small catechism. Johannes preaches four times on Sunday and twice every week day.

—The Tompkins Avenue Congregational church of Brooklyn has increased greatly in numbers since the Rev. Dr. Meredith began his pastorate, and it has been determined to erect a new and more spacious edifice a short distance from the present church. The building now used as a church will be used as a Sunday-school hall.

—The Independent finds that there are about one thousand unemployed Congregational ministers in the United States, or one-fourth of the entire ministerial force of Congregationalism in this country, while there are hundreds of pastorless churches in New England, and asks, Why not get these needy churches and needy ministers together?

—There are now in the city of Constantinople, besides the missionaries of the American Board, and the missionaries of the Baptist Publication Society, Campbellite missionaries, a Quaker missionary and a Mormon missionary. The field of these laborers is mainly among the members of the existing evangelical churches, who are thus beset on all sides by offers of a better way than that which they have learned. Of course there are some in every church who are ready to hear any new thing, and to be carried about by every wind of doctrine. The sole convert of the Mormon missionary, so far, is a man who became a Protestant in one of the towns of Asia Minor and on coming to Constantinople was led to become a Baptist. He next became a Campbellite; not being satisfied with the doctrines of this church, he fell into the hands of the Mormons and was baptized in the sea of Marmora.—Independent.

—The Indian Witness says that the Madras Presidency contains by far the largest Christian population of all India, the actual number of native Christians, including Roman Catholics, amounting to 700,000. This shows that out of every 1,000 of the population 23 are native Christians. But it is in educational matters that the native Christians have shown most satisfactory progress. According to the latest census return, in the municipal towns, while the percentage of educated Hindu males is 36.30 and of Mohammedans 30, that among the male native Christians is 53.67. The proportion of educated females is equally striking, and largely in favor of the native Christians. Taking the total population, male and female, of the three creeds throughout the Presidency, we find the averages to be Hindus, 9 90 per cent., Mohammedans 8.57, and Christians 16.53.

—The editors of the Conservator, Dayton, are welcomed in many United Brethren churches. On a late Sabbath both brethren Dillon and Floyd were dedicating new churches, one in Sunfield, Michigan, the other at Elida, Ohio.

—There are five denominations of Methodists in England. The indications are that they are drawing nearer to each other, and that union may reasonably be looked for in a few years. It is said there will be a remarkable economy of men and means as a result of union.

—The Presbyterian church has twelve theological seminaries, which had last year 705 students. Princeton leads with 161; Union next with 134; McCormick next with 113. Yet the Presbyterians are looking to our branch of the Reformed church for pastors for important churches.

—London has a population of 5,416,006, and the sittings in the churches afford accommodations for 1,903,509, which perhaps is about one-half of the adult population. Of these sittings the Established church furnishes 49.5 per cent, and the free churches 50.5 per cent.

—The daughter of the Princess Beatrice, daughter of Queen Victoria, was baptized at Ballater, near Balmoral, on Nov. 23d, by the Rev. Dr. Lees, of St. Giles's, Edinburgh. It is reported that this is the first time a royal infant has been baptized into the Presbyterian church of Scotland.

—The Lutheran Observer claims that it has sufficient evidence that the support of the Sunday papers come not from "the irreligious crowd of worldly and vicious people who care nothing for God or his Sabbath," but from Christians who buy those papers or subscribe for them and give them advertising patronage.

—The Norwegian Mission Society has made four hundred converts in its Zulu Mission since 1873, and in Madagascar, since 1867, about seven thousand heathen have been baptized, and about thirty thousand children instructed in the mission schools.

—Jacob Scheinman, a Polish Jew, twenty years ago, came to the conclusion that Jesus Christ was the true Saviour. The strict Talmudic Jews got him transported to Siberia, where for fifteen years he has labored almost unheeded to awaken faith in his fellow exiles, with some encouraging results.

—During the year 1886, 3,640 adults were baptized in Japan, making a total membership of 14,815. There are now 193 organized churches, sixty-four of them self-supporting; ninety-three native ministers and 169 theological students; $26,886.01 were contributed by the native converts.

—Of the 17,743 Fijians inhabiting the Fiji Islands, more than nine-tenths attend church with fair regularity; the Fiji children know much less of cannibalism than the older missionaries can tell them; where fifty years since there was not a single Christian, today there is not a single avowed heathen; all the Fiji children are in the schools; the schools and churches have wholly displaced the heathen temples.

—It is stated that thirty-three missionary societies now have workers in Africa. The dark continent is encompassed on every side, and like the divisions of an investing army these missionaries are moving toward the center and closing in upon the last strongholds of heathenism and the slave trade. Hundreds of natives in the seminaries are preparing to labor as preachers or teachers, and thousands of children are receiving Christian instruction. It is said that the Scriptures have been translated in whole or in part into sixty-six of the dialects of Africa, while the whole Bible has been rendered into eleven languages, spoken by multitudes of natives.

—Quite a sensation has been created in church circles in Davenport, Iowa, by the announcement that the Rev. M. L. Williston, of the Edwards Congregational church, has declared his intention of leaving the Congregational church and becoming an Episcopalian. He has already made application to Bishop Perry as a candidate for orders, and the date of his ordination has been fixed. Mr. Williston is a graduate of Amherst College, and has sustained an excellent reputation in the denomination to which he has up to this time belonged.

LODGE NOTES.

An old man was unmercifully whipped and almost drowned by White Caps at English, Crawford county, Ind., and a lynching party has gone after the miscreants.

The executive committee of the council of administration of the Grand Army of the Republic has decided to hold the next national grand encampment at Columbus in the second week in September next.

Some time ago Supreme Chancellor HowardDouglass of the Knights of Pythias instructed all grand lodges to change their constitutions so as to be in accord with the supreme laws. All the States excepting Pennsylvania, Delaware, Oregon and Nebraska have complied. The Supreme Chancellor has issued a notice to the Grand Lodge of Pennsylvania informing them that if his instructions are not complied with he will suspend that grand jurisdiction. In the case of Illinois, Supreme Chancellor Douglass had to face the very strongest opposition. In the Grand Lodge George W. Herdman and E.C Race, together with the Grand Keeper of Records and Seal, Henry P. Caldwell, cast their influence against the authority of the Supreme Chancellor. There is every appearance of a beautiful row among these devoted knights, sworn to be friends to the death.

Another of the occasional murders in the Chinatown of San Francisco has revealed the work of the secret societies among the Chinese in this country. The Sam Jup Company, a large and powerful organization, which made its own laws for the Chinese belonging to it,split some time ago into two factions called the Bo Sin Seer and the Kie Sin Seer. Some of the highbinders of the Kie Sin Seer killed two men of the Bo Sin Seer, and the latter faction commissioned a trusty cutthroat named Leong Ah Tick to avenge the slaughter of its members. Leong Ah Tick accordingly killed Lee Wy, who happened to be the first Kie Sin Seer man who came in the range of his pistol. After the latter murder, a party from the Kie Sin Seer went to the headquarters of the Bo Sin Seer faction and tearing down the sign over the door chopped it to pieces. This is considered the greatest indignity that can be offered a highbinders' organization and can only be wiped out in blood.

Safety Lodge, No. 16, Knights and Ladies of Honor, says the Inter Ocean of Friday last, was fully represented at the Armory Police Court yesterday morning, when eight ladies and ten knights were charged before Justice Lyon with disorderly conduct. It was an excited lodge that gathered around the bench and told the story of the trouble. Dr. Edward P. Koch was blamed by some of the members for it. He was formely Supreme Regent of the order, and October 27 was deposed by the board of directors. He appealed and says that nineteen of the twenty six lodges in the city supported him. At any rate he continued to visit the various lodges, and paid particular attention to No. 16. His appearance seemed to create dissension in that body, for about three weeks ago Charles D. Wilson, the Grand Protector of the lodge, was accused of some misdeeds, and the question of his deposition was put to vote. What the result of the vote was has never been officially announced, but a faction claimed that he must abdicate, and Frank Palmer was elected in his place. But some of the members would not recognize Mr. Palmer, and in consequence the meetings for the past few weeks have broken up in disorder Wednesday evening Mr. Wilson took time by the forelock, and at 8 o'clock sharp took possession of the chair. Dr. Koch was present and demurred at Mr. Wilson's action, whereupon Mr Wilson said that Dr. Koch had no business in that lodge. Dr Koch took umbrage at this remark and advanced upon the acting Grand Protector. Fortunately for the latter, the doctor tripped and fell before he reached the platform just as Mr Wilson tapped him on the head with the charter of the lodge. As the doctor fell, Treasurer Weimer jumped upon him and caught him by the throat. Mrs. Augusta Kuntz ran to help the doctor, and in a moment all the knights and ladies were fighting and scrambling all over the room. Officers Ryan and Weber appeared at this juncture, and two patrol wagon loads of "knights" and "ladies" were taken to the Twenty-second Street Station, where they gave bonds for their appearance yesterday morning. Justice Lyon fined nine of the knights and ladies sums ranging from $1 to $5 each and discharged the others.

BEREA EVANGELIST,

A monthly journal whose aim it is to advance

CHRISTIANITY

and to help break down everything that hinders its spread.

It teaches that men need to be converted to the personal Christ, and not simply to a system of truth, and that there must be implanted in them a divine life as well as a correct belief. The

EVANGELIST

seeks to show that the division of Christians into sects is a great wrong, and a very serious obstacle to the advancement of the Redeemer's kingdom, and it seeks to show Christians how they may be one in Christ, and to persuade and help them thus to unite. The

EVANGELIST.

also opposes Intemperance, Secret Societies, Worldliness, and the spirit of Caste, and aims to "war a good warfare" against all wrong.

The Master's Carpet

BY

F. Ronayne.

Past Master of Keystone Lodge No. 631 Chicago.

Explains the true source and meaning of every ceremony and symbol of the Lodge, thus showing the principles on which the order is founded. By a careful perusal of this work, a more thorough knowledge of the principles of the order can be obtained than by attending the Lodge for years. Every Mason, every person contemplating becoming a member, and even those who are indifferent on the subject, should procure and carefully read this work. An appendix is added of 32 pages, embodying which gives every sign, grip and ceremony of the Lodge together with a brief explanation of each. The work contains 232 pages and is substantially and elegantly bound in cloth. Price, 75 cents.

Freemasonry at a Glance,

THE SECRET ORDERS OF WESTERN AFRICA.

BY J. AUGUSTUS COLE, OF SHAINGAY, WEST AFRICA.

Bishop Flickinger of the U. B. church says that, "This volume will well repay a careful reading not only for its discussion and exposition of these societies, but because it gives much valuable information respecting other institutions of that great continent."

J. Augustus Cole, the author of this pamphlet is a native of Western Africa, and is of pure negro blood. He has given much time and care to the investigation of the secret societies and heathen customs of Western Africa. He joined several of the secret orders for the purpose of obtaining full and correct information regarding their nature and operation. His culture and superior powers of discrimination render what he has written most complete and reliable.

TIMELY TALKS ON AN IMPORTANT SUBJECT.

The Papers Say of this Book:

"It is well to remind the world of the great law of human brotherhood, but how to make the 'more general application of it?' 'Aye, there's the rub!' Our author contributes his mite in that direction, and his voice and reasoning will reach some ears and perhaps touch some understandings and move some selfish hearts that are buttoned up very closely and hedged around by over much respectability and comfortable prosperity."—Chicago Tribune.

"The writer does his work in a way remarkable alike for its directness, its common sense, its impartiality, its lucidity and its force. He has no theories to support; he deals with facts as he finds them; he fortifies his assertions by arrays of demonstrative statistics. The work is among the best of the kind if it is not the best that we have seen. While it is scarcely possible for it to be put in the hands of all our wage-workers, we wish it could be read by every one of them."—Chicago Interior.

HOME AND HEALTH.

INDIGESTION AND DISEASE.

Dr. Henry Reynolds has an article in the Phrenological Journal on indigestion which seems to define the nature and symptoms of the complaint very closely.

Many suffering from dyspepsia will find their own feelings described in the following extracts, taken from Dr. Reynolds' paper, and we hope some will derive benefit from his hints:

The important relation of indigestion to many diseases which people suffer is not sufficiently realized. Difficulty in breathing, occurring spontaneously, or on slight exertion, may be caused by indigestion.

Indigestion causes alterations in the general nutrition of the body, which are manifested in various ways, among which are the following: Anæmia, or a depraved state of the blood, involving a deficiency of the red globules of the blood, and causing persons thus affected to be unnaturally pale, especially about the lips; decay of the teeth; grayness of the hair; excessive liability to inflammation, from slight causes, of the mucous membranes, especially the eyes and throat; to which may be added in cases of those predisposed to such affections, liability to gout and rheumatism and affections of the lungs and kidneys. Consumption has frequently been regarded as due in many cases to long continued derangement of the digestion, whereby the general nutrition of the system has become impaired.

The inflammation of the mucous membrane of the throat, known as "clergymen's sore throat," is a product of indigestion, and the removal of the cause by the adoption of a suitable dietary, exercise in the open air, and observance of the laws of health generally will be the best treatment for it.

Indigestion is the cause of various alterations in the skin manifested by general coldness or chilliness, especially of the extremities, by changes in its color texture, which may be earthy or sallow in tint, or dry and coarse, and by various eruptions, among which are the well known eczema, acne, impetigo and nettle rash. Most of the cases of skin diseases affecting children are best treated by attention to the diet, making the diet easily digestible and sufficiently limited to insure complete digestion.

The cause of indigestion may be due to the food or condition of the stomach. The food may be defective in quality. There may be excess or deficiency of the normal ingredients, saccharine, starch, albuminous or fatty, or some of the naturally indigestible materials which form a part of all food. The food may be introduced in an indigestible form on account of defects in the cooking of it, or imperfect mastication, or from its having undergone putrefaction or fermentation, which arrests the functions of the stomach. Imperfect mastication of food is a very common cause of indigestion among Americans.

Eating too much is probably the most common of all causes of indigestion. The secretion of the gastric juice in the stomach seems to be proportioned to the amount of material required for the nourishment of the system. Food taken in excess of this amount acts as a foreign substance undergoing fermentation and putrefaction, and occasioning much disturbance in the system.

Much may be done for the cure of indigestion by eating very abstemiously of suitable food, thoroughly masticated, taking exercise in the open air, and observing the laws of health generally. The amount of food should be reduced until the quantity is reached the stomach can digest without evincing any symptoms of indigestion.

Rubbing a bruise in sweet oil and then in spirits of turpentine will usually prevent the unsightly black and blue spot, which not only tells tales, but deforms.

When there is an unpleasant odor about the feet, a small quantity of a weak solution of salicylic acid in the foot bath is a sure destroyer of the offence.

For the disagreeable sensation known as heartburn, which so often accompanies indigestion, a saltspoonful of common salt, dissolved in half a wine-glass of water and drank is as effective a remedy as saleratus water, and a much pleasanter and safer one.

Don't neglect personal cleanliness, but use the bath with moderation and in accordance with your general health. The daily cold bath is right enough with the rugged, but it is a great tax upon the vitality of persons not in the best of health, and should be abandoned if the results are not found to be favorable, and tepid water used instead. Each man in these things should be a judge for himself; that which is excellent for one is often hurtful for another.

By Rev. John Lee, A. M., B. D.

General Viscount Wolseley: "Int resting."
Chicago Inter-Ocean: "A searching review."
Christian Cynosure: "It deserves a wide circulation at the present time."
Bishop Coxe, Protestant Episcopal, of Western New York: "Most useful publication; a logical sequel to 'Our Country,' by Josiah Strong."
Emile De Laveleye of Belgium, the great publicist: "I have read with the greatest interest your answer to Cardinal Manning. I think Rome's encroachments in the United States ought to be carefully watched and resisted."
Rev. C. C. McCabe, D. D.: "It is a useful book and ought to have a wide sale. You are dealing with a question which will soon dominate every other in American politics. The Assassin of Nations is in our midst and is approaching the Temple of Liberty with stealthy tread. The people of this country will understand the Belfast frenzy some day better than they do now."
The Right Hon. Lord Robert Montague: "I have read it with the greatest pleasure, and with amazement at the intimate acquaintance with the acts of Romanism in our midst which you have evinced. I only wish that, instead of publishing your pamphlet in Chicago, you had sown it broadcast over England, Scotland and Ireland."

FARM NOTES.

HANG UP THESE APHORISMS.

Farm animals are hurt more by medicine than by the lack of it. When an animal needs medicine, it needs a competent physician.

Pure water and a variety of wholesome food regularly given, with comfortable shelter and kind treatment, are the best preventives of disease.

A mortgage on the home makes the fireside gloomy, for it shuts out the sunshine of prosperity and freeheartedness.

Some men look at the sky only to forecast the weather, see more beauty in a dollar than in a bed of flowers, and will hear the crow in a cornfield quicker than the lark in the air.

Better is it to have one pair of trousers with money in the pockets than two pairs with empty pockets.

The horse knows all that the colt learned, and boys tormenting the colt are not teaching it what it should know.

System worked ten hours a day and was done. Hap hazard got up at four in the morning, hurried all day, and was doing the chores at half-past nine at night.

Job had much patience; yet it was fortunate for him that he did not join fences with a neighbor who kept breachy stock.

The man who fills his ice house provides himself with a conservator of health and a servant of pleasure.

What is said about keeping animals warm during the winter, does not apply to manure. Smoking is more injurious to the compost heap than to boys.

The man too poor to take the American Agriculturist, or to buy his wife a calico dress without grumbling, is rich enough to afford the lightning rod peddlers and sickle grinder frauds fine picking.—American Agriculturist.

THE CHEERFUL FARM KITCHEN.

A spacious farm kitchen, when there's a clean and loving mother presiding over it, is about as pleasant as any spot on earth. The great stove, with its cheerfully singing kettle, the smooth painted floor, the braided rug for mother's feet, the dear little squeaking rocking chair in which she knits and sews, the geraniums and petunias and other easy growing plants in the windows, the big long table with plenty of room for everybody and some to spare—on which are served such meals as only mother can prepare. Ah! we are sorry for the poor child that does not get a life start in such a room! It is to this big, pleasant-atmosphered kitchen that the children can look for comfort and pleasure in this growling winter weather. There is school, to be sure, but night sets in almost as soon as school closes, and in the hours between four o'clock and bedtime something must be done for the child whose natural, healthful cry is for "something to do."—Idem.

PLEASANT PHASES OF FARM LIFE.—It is a common complaint that the farm and farm life are not appreciated by our people. We long for the more elegant pursuits or the ways and fashions of the town. But the farmer has the most sane and rational occupation, and ought to find life sweeter, if less highly seasoned, than any other. He alone, strictly speaking, has a home. How can a man take root and thrive without land? He writes his history upon his field. How many ties, how many resources he has; his friendships with his cattle, his teams, his dog, his trees; the satisfaction in his growing crops, in his improved fields, his intimacy with nature, with bird and beast, and the quickening elemental forces; his co-operation with the clouds, the sun, the seasons, heat, wind, rain, frost. Nothing will take the various social distempers, which the city and artificial life breed, out of a man like farming, like direct and loving contact with the soil. It draws out the poison. It humbles him, teaches him patience and reverence, and restores the proper tone to his system.—John Burroughs in "Signs and Seasons."

POPULAR COMMENTARIES

In the critical biblical literature of the century few books have been so unqualifiedly endorsed as
Jamieson, Fausset & Brown's Commentary
On the Old and New Testaments. It has been tried, tested and proven, during one of the most active periods ever known in biblical research. That it has not been found wanting is evident in the still unabated demand. At considerable outlay we have issued a new edition of this valuable work in clear type, attractively bound, and at a price much lower than any complete commentary ever before issued.

"The BEST condensed Commentary on the whole Bible is the Commentary on the Old and New Testaments, by Jamieson, Fausset & Brown. It contains notes of the choicest and richest character on all parts of the Holy Bible. It is the cream of the commentaries carefully collected by three eminent scholars. Its critical introduction to each book of Scripture, its eminently practical notes, its numerous pictorial illustrations, commend it strongly to the Sunday-school worker and to the clergyman. Then it is such a marvel of cheapness."—Rev. J. H. Vincent, D. D., in "Aids to Bible Study."
The leading clergymen and college professors of the country unite with Dr. Vincent in placing this commentary in the first rank of all biblical aids.

The Facts Stated.

HON. THURLOW WEED ON THE MORGAN ABDUCTION.

This is a sixteen page pamphlet comprising a letter written by Mr. Weed, and read at the unveiling of the monument erected to the memory of Capt. William Morgan. The frontispiece is an engraving of the monument. It is a history of the unlawful seizure and confinement of Morgan in the Canandaigua jail, his subsequent conveyance by Freemasons to Fort Niagara, and drowning in Lake Ontario. He not only subscribes his NAME to the letter, but ATTACHES HIS AFFIDAVIT to it.
In closing his letter he writes: I now look back through an interval of fifty-six years with a conscious sense of having been governed through the "Anti-Masonic excitement" by a sincere desire, first, to vindicate the violated laws of my country, and next, to arrest the great power and dangerous influences of "secret societies."
The pamphlet is well worth perusing, and is doubtless the last historical article which this great journalist and politician wrote. [Chicago, National Christian Association.] Single copy 5 cents

OF
A Happy Life.
28th THOUSAND.

Baptist Commendation.
"We are delighted with this book. It reaches to the very core of Christian experience, and is eminently experimental in its teachings. It meets the doubts and difficulties of conscientious seekers after the bread and water of life, but whose efforts result only in alternate failure and victory. The author, without claiming to be a theologian, sends out the results of a happy and rich experience to help others into a happy Christian life."—Baptist Weekly.

Presbyterian Endorsement.
"The book is so truly and reverentially devout in its spirit that it disarms criticism. It contains so much that is sound and practical, so much that, if heeded, will make our lives better, happier and more useful, that the intelligent reader who really wishes to lead a life 'hid with Christ in God' can scarcely fail to derive profit from its perusal."—Interior.

Methodist Word of Praise.
"We have not for years read a book with more light and profit. It is not a theological book. No fort is made to change the theological views of any one. The author has a rich experience, and tells it in a plain and delightful manner."—Christian Advocate.

United Brethren's Approval.
"We have seldom met with a more interesting volume, abounding throughout with apt illustrations; we have failed to find a dry line from title-page to finis."—Religious Telescope.

Congregational Comment
"It contains much clear, pungent reasoning and interesting incident. It is a practical and experimental lesson taught out of God's word, and is worthy of universal circulation."—Church Union.
This enlarged edition is a beautiful large 12mo volume of 240 pages.

FIFTY YEARS and BEYOND;
OR,
Old Age and How to Enjoy It.
A most appropriate gift book for "The Old Folks at Home."
Compiled by REV. S. G. LATHROP.
Introdnction by
REV. ARTHUR EDWARDS, D. D.,
(Editor N. W. Christian Advocate.)

The object of this volume is to give to that great army who are fast hastening toward the "great beyond" some practical hints and helps as to the best way to make the most of the remainder of that now is, and to give comfort and help life that is to come.
"It is a tribute to the Christianity that honors the gray head and refuses to consider the oldish man a burden or an obstacle. The book will aid and comfort every reader."—Northwestern Christian Advocate.
"The selections are very precious. Springing from such numerous and pure fountains, they can but afford a refreshing and healthful draught for every aged traveller to the great beyond."—Witness.

ANTI-LODGE LYRICS.
Sing the Reform
Into the Hearts of the People
One of the most popular books against lodgery is the latest compilation of George W. Clark,
The Minstrel of Reform.
A forty-page book of soul-stirring, conscience-awakening songs, appropriate for lectures, conventions and the home circle. What can add more to the interest of a meeting than a song well sung? What means will more quickly overthrow the power of the secret lodges than to sing the truth into the popular conscience?
Get this little work and use it for God and home and country. Forty pages.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

WASHINGTON.

The Senate Committe on Education held a meeting and unanimously ordered a favorable report on the Blair education bill. It will be reported as it passed the Senate in the last Congress.

A committee of citizens of Utah, headed by Delegate Caine, waited on Speaker Carlisle and Senator Ingalls and presented to them copies of the State constitution adopted at the last Utah convention.

Mr. N. M. Bell, superintendent of foreign mails, has gone to New York to meet Mr. McClellan, the Postmaster General of Canada, for the purpose of negotiating a parcel post convention between the United States and Canada, similar to those recently put in operation between this country, Jamaica, Mexico and Bermuda.

Arrangements are now being made at the Treasury Department for the payment on Jan. 1 next of $8,414,670 interest on United States bonds and Pacific Railroad bonds. This is in addition to $848,452 interest which would have fallen due on that date.

Five hundred bills and more have already been introduced in the Senate. It is not extravagant to estimate that the number of bills likely to be introduced in the House at the first time set apart for the reception of bills will be 5,000. There were more than 15,000 bills introduced in the last Congress, of which 12,000 failed. A very large proportion of these 12,000 bills are to be reintroduced in the Fiftieth Congress.

COUNTRY

In boring an artesian well in Fairview, Southern California, six miles from Santa Ana, natural gas was struck in a large quantity. When indications of gas were discovered the workmen bored deeper, and after going six feet, struck gas which burns strongly on emerging from the well.

The heaviest snowstorm in the memory of the oldest inhabitant is reported throughout Western Texas, four to six inches having fallen in some places.

A serious coal famine now prevails in Western and Southwestern Kansas, many communities being entirely without coal and unable to get it. The Railroad Commissioners are investigating the subject and have addressed a letter to General Manager Goddard of the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe railroad calling his attention to his responsibility.

The Distillers' and Cattle Feeders' Trust was fully organized Friday at Peoria, to go into effect Jan. 1 next. It is said the contract is of a cast-iron description and the Spellman, Pekin and Nebraska distillers that were holding out have finally signed the document.

R. Porter Lee, a defaulting bank cashier, who swindled numerous farmers and stock raisers in Michigan, has been pardoned by President Cleveland, to the great surprise and dissatisfaction of his numerous victims.

Mrs. Alexander Yarsen, wife of a wealthy resident of Corunne, Mich., who was placed in an insane asylum two weeks ago, has been released, the court finding that the woman is sane. She will now, it is said, sue her husband for divorce, and bring civil suits against the physicians who issued the insane certificates.

An explosion of a twenty horse power boiler in the Edison Electric Company's works at Chester, Pa, caused the death of five persons and injured three others. The boiler was lifted from its foundations and propelled through the base of a ninety-foot high stack, which instantly fell. Superintendent Walter Embree was engaged with a force of men close to the stack unloading a new boiler, and the whole party was buried beneath the falling bricks.

A hotel at Crescent, near Los Angeles, Cal., was blown down by a storm Wednesday. Two persons were killed, and fourteen others badly wounded.

In a swamp near Hawesville, Ky., were found a baloon and the remains of an unknown aeronaut. The body had been almost reduced to a skeleton, and it is supposed the man perished days ago in the upper air from hunger and extreme cold.

E. L. Harper, the Fidelity banker, was found guilty Monday at Cincinnati as set forth in the thirty-three counts of the indictment, and was sentenced to ten years in the Ohio Penitentiary, whither he was taken in the afternoon.

It is rumored in New York and Boston that the United States Supreme court will decide the telephone suits adversely to Mr. Bell. On this report Bell telephone stock dropped forty points in one day.

FOREIGN.

A Paris journal says that President Carnot will pardon all political prisoners Jan 1.

Owing to German influence the Porte is extending the fortifications on the Bosphorus.

The Duke of Norfolk presented Queen Victoria's congratulations to the Pope Saturday.

Government circles in Berlin and Vienna are becoming convinced that the allies will attack Russia in the spring. The same feeling prevails in the English foreign office.

For eleven months of the present year the passengers from Canada to the United States numbered 65,621, against 48,587 in the corresponding period of 1886. Immigration to Canada shows a comparative reduction of 171,330.

John V. Ellis, of St. John, N. B., member of the Canadian Parliament, publishes an editorial in his paper, the St. John Globe, favoring Canadian annexation to the United States.

Ching Chow and ten other populous cities in the province of Honau, China, were destroyed on the night of Sept. 28 last by the bursting of the banks of the Hoang Ho, or Yellow River, a former rich plain of great extent being now ten to thirty feet under water. Thousands of lives were lost and millions of people are reported naked and starving. The catastrophe is said to be the most apalling occurrence of modern times.

Count Kalnoky, the Austrian minister, after conference with the Emperor, it is reported, will now agree to a joint note from the powers to Russia demanding an explanation of her military preparations.

The Vienna correspondent of the London Times telegraphs that a strong feeling exists in the city in favor of sending an immediate ultimatum to Russia, to be followed in case of an unsatisfactory reply by a rapid march of the German and Austrian forces on the Russian frontier. It is feared that war will occur in the spring. The feeling is intense.

THE CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE,

The CYNOSURE represents the Christian movement against the Secret Lodge System; discusses fairly and fearlessly the various movements of the lodge as they appear to public view, and reveals the secret machinery of corruption in politics, courts, and social and religious circles.

There are in the United States
Some 200 different Lodges,
With 2,000,000 members,
Costing $20,000,000 yearly.

This mighty world power confronts the church and seeks to rule and ruin every Christian Reform.

No Christian Reform Movement of the day is so necessary, yet so unpopular and beset with difficulties, as that which would remove the dark pall of oaths, dark-lantern meetings, secret signs, mysterious and pagan worship about altars condemned by the Word of the Living God.

No other paper gives the best of its correspondence and editorial strength to this vitally important reform. The CYNOSURE should be your paper in addition to any other you may take.

Because it is the representative of the reform against the Lodge, with ablest arguments, biographical and historical sketches, letters from lecturers, seceders and sufferers from lodge persecution. The ablest writers on this subject from all denominations and all parts of the country contribute. Special departments for letters from our metropolitan centers, on the relation of secret orders to current events.

The CYNOSURE began its twentieth volume September 22, 1887, with features of special and popular interest.

TERMS: $2.00 per year; strictly in advance, $1.50. Special terms to clubs. Send for sample copy.

A HAPPY NEW YEAR to all the dear Cynosure readers, one and all. We have closed our work for 1887. The record is with God. It is imperfect, but our aim has been to hasten the coming of our Lord Jesus and his kingdom. Pray for the Cynosure, that it may be used of God in 1888. Pray as you read, that it may be powerful in converting men to the truth and help to save the churches of Christ and our God-given state from the clutches of our adversary. As we pray, so shall this be a good year for us all. May God grant a twelve months of blessing.

The first platform of the American party, adopted in Chicago in 1872, contained this plank: "11. That reciprocal free trade is the true basis of commercial interchange among nations, and that a gradual approach toward free competition in all the marts of trade is the true policy on the tariff question." The last platform, adopted in Chicago in 1884, repeats the idea in different terms, thus: "13. That it should be the settled policy of the government to reduce tariffs and taxes as rapidly as the necessities of revenue and vested business interests will allow." The American party has thus been from first to last in favor of tariff for revenue only, not for protection. The first was introduced by Alexander Hamilton, the greatest of American financiers, when Secretary of the Treasury in Washington's first administration; protective tariff came from Henry Clay in 1824. As the Cynosure has ever maintained this platform as the index of its political principles, it is with great satisfaction that we have now a President openly committed to one of our American principles, and by all the influence of his administration pushing it to an issue. It is also very satisfactory to note that the people are endorsing Mr. Cleveland in spite of party. We hope for the day when the nation will accept all our principles; and wish to say this much at present in answer to a few forgetful friends who think we are following the President. On the contrary he is following where we pointed the way before he was even a sheriff.

Sir George Trevelyan, in a recent speech at Carnarvoon, Ireland, upon the Irish crisis, said that among the tenants upon his estate there was no pauperism and absolutely no discontent. The reason suggested for this remarkable condition of peace, while the country all about is in an uproar, is significant. There has been no tippling house in the region for thirty years. Why should not Mr. Parnell, in his supreme love for his countrymen, make a fight against Irish whisky. It is better than a guess that the same effort for temperance in Ireland that has been expended upon Home Rule agitation would have produced two-fold the results in respect to the actual comfort and happiness of the people.

Reports from the West of the storm of last week are full of singular contradictions. News that many persons had perished in western Kansas, was followed by as positive declarations that the first reports were exaggerated and no such suffering and destitution was known. It is a fact that settlers in western Kansas have been so nearly destitute of fuel that they stopped trains by force and helped themselves, and that the railway commissioners of the State called upon the railway companies to no longer neglect the settlers. Large supplies have also been forwarded to the western counties, and there is no doubt of considerable destitution, and with this must come suffering and probably death in many cases. If the report of fatalities in the last storm shall not be confirmed, the condition of the people is yet such as to call for sympathy and substantial efforts to relieve them.

We have at length the end of the McGarigle farce. The Freemasons claim to have turned all the boodlers out of their lodges, but they have only cast out the poor dogs who are under the ban of public opinion. No body else was touched by this most virtuous order. Like the Spartan rule, the vengeance of Masonry falls only upon those thieves who are so stupid as to be caught. A Dr. St. John helped McGarigle to get upon Captain Freer's schooner. He was arrested months ago. The trial came off Wednesday. Grinnell had put off this case upon his successor in the prosecuting attorney's office. This gentleman seemed not to care about troubling the special agents of the runaway and agreed that the judge should order a verdict of not guilty. But how about the Masonic agents—the real ones? Who shall try them? Will not our immaculate Chicago Freemasons undertake this business also?

A great fight is on between the Philadelphia and Reading railway and its train men. The company had occasion to discharge five men, and it transpired that the new men put in their place had never learned the lodge grip or sworn the lodge oath. The Knights of Labor at work with the new men immediately quit work, as if their companions were lepers or plague-stricken. The infection spread until over 1,000 men quit work Friday afternoon. Switches were closed, wheelbarrows dropped, fires raked out of engines and the whole freight business of the road stopped. The company, thus forced into a fight, has resolved to employ no more union men or Knights of Labor, whose lodge relations make such petulant and dictatorial workmen. The Reading road handles a large portion of the product of the Pennsylvania coal fields, so that this strike will have many aggravating consequences. If the company is in any collusion in this matter in order to advance the price of coal it deserves as little sympathy as do the men for their contemptible insubordination at the bidding of the lodge.

Mr. Powderly says that "for every man the Knights of Labor have lost on account of their temperance clause they have gained five hundred." Since the order has been steadily and rapidly going down for over a year Mr. Powderly's mathematics seem to work by a peculiar rule.

In the Senate Thursday Mr. Dolph, having introduced a bill for the payment of damages by Indian depredations, amounting to some $15,000,000, soon after followed with a speech on his joint resolution of the week before proposing a Constitntional amendment on the subject of marriage and divorce, and prohibiting bigamy and polygamy. The proposed amendment is in the following words: "Congress shall have power to legislate on the subject of marriage and divorce by general laws applicable alike to all the States and Territories, and neither bigamy nor polygamy shall exist or be permitted within the United States or any place subject to its jurisdiction." Mr. Dolph claims to be unalterably opposed to the admission of Utah so long as there is any possibility that the Mormon hierarchy may continue its domination. But the gentleman ought also to know that the Mormons are rather glad than otherwise of his measure, hoping that it will relieve them of the irksome supervision of courts and receivers. Other Senators wish to be heard on this resolution and it is laid over till after the holiday recess.

THE MARCH OF THE YEARS.

One by one, one by one,
The years march past till the march is done;
The old year dies to the solemn knell,
And a merry peal from the changing bell
Ushers the other, one by one,
Till the march of the years shall at last be done.

Bright and glad, dark and sad,
Are the years that come in mystery clad;
Their faces are hidden and none can see
If merry or sorrowful each will be.
Bright and sad, dark and glad,
Have been the years that we all have had.

Fair and subtle under the sun
Something from us each year has won.
Has it given us treasures? Day by day
It has stolen something we prized away;
We meet with fears, and count with tears
The buried hopes of the long-past years.

Is it so? And yet let us not forget
How fairly the sun has risen and set;
Each year has brought us some sunny hours,
With a wealth of song, and a crown of flowers,
Power to love and time to pray,
Its gifts have been ere it passed away.

We hail the New that has come in view;
Work comes with it, and pleasure, too;
And even though it may bring some pain,
Each passing year is a thing of gain;
We greet with song the days that throng;
Do they bring us trouble? 'Twill make us strong.

With smiles of hope, and not with tears,
We meet our friends in the glad new years;
God is with them, and, as they come,
They bear us nearer our restful home.
And one by one, with some treasure won,
They come to our hearts till they all are gone.

ORANGEISM.

BY REV. S. O. IRVINE.

Its hoodwink has not been over my eyes, nor its "Brand" over my heart, but I think few, if any, of the uninitiated in this country know Orangeism so well as I. My acquaintance with other secret orders has given me such an advantage that I could more readily acquire light; and as I let the light shine many were led to contend with me, but their admissions and evasions have given me the clue to other things.

Persecution has followed the preaching of the truth, and some, more loyal to the truth and to their church than to the lodge, stand by me. One Orangeman is represented as saying, "He preaches nothing but the truth, and I can say, Amen, to all he says." Another said, "There is no more need of Orangeism in this country than for a third wheel to a cart."

Several have left the lodge. One admitted that it was no use to longer argue the question, for he was beaten on the ground of his own choosing, that what he had supposed to be good was shown to be evil. He has since washed himself clean from "Black" Orangeism and "Blue" Masonry, and wrote a letter for me to read to the church, calling on all Christians to leave their secret lodges. I read this letter to a full church at a sacramental service. The following day my official board met. Some discussion on secretism took place, as they were nearly all Orangemen. I had ready a lengthy letter by which I offered to convince the most skeptical that I knew something of Orangeism. They waived the reading of the letter, and gave me a unanimous invitation to remain their pastor another year. Both mover and seconder of the resolution were Orangemen. So much for the triumph of conscience over lodge loyalty. No wonder that Christians are considered the weak timbers in the lodge edifice!

One of the members of that official board told me he had challenged members of his lodge to name five members who were not perjured men! Another said he left the lodge before he saw me, because of the way the Scriptures were prostituted to lodge purposes. An adhering Orangeman said he was convinced that the man who had never joined was the freest man.

Some months ago I met, for the first time, one of our ministers who is both an Orangeman and a Mason; he told me he was going to lecture that week in Winnipeg on Orangeism. I said I was sorry I could not be there to add to the interest by taking the "Anti" side. I gave him his "Two-and-a-half grip" (referring to the two-and-a-half tribes), a pressure on the middle of the upper half of the third finger. I gave him also the "Night Challenge," a part of his initiation when he is thrown from "Jacob's Ladder" and caught in a great sheet, by which he is tossed up "between heaven and earth, where there is no eye to pity, and no arm to save," etc. I asked him to deny if he could, but he did not, though the laugh was turned on him by a lady remarking, "Silence gives consent."

I gave him his Masonic oaths, and said, "If I were a robber I could come to you a minister, and say, 'Bro. ——, I give you as a Masonic secret a statement of my latest robbery, and demand that you hitch up and drive me away to escape the officers of the law.' You would have to help extricate me from my present difficulty."

He replied, "I would deliver you into the officer's hands."

I said, "You would thereby break your Masonic oath."

"Well," he answered, "I told you I was not a very good Mason."

When at a missionary meeting with a brother minister, an Orangemen, we talked freely on the subject and agreed pretty well about the matter, with the exception of letting the light shine to save our people from these alliances with the world. When we got to the parsonage at night I was introduced to his wife as a backslider from Orangeism. This was a feather in my cap with her, but I proceeded, to the amazement of my dear brother, to explain that I had never been an Orangeman.

At our last Annual Conference I was asked by a delegate if I knew anybody of my name in Southern Manitoba who was exposing Orangeism. I pleaded guilty, and was informed if I had ever been an Orangeman I ought not to do as I was reported to have done. He said my name was up in the Grand Lodge of Manitoba, which met in Winnepeg, and that some very hard things were said about me. I gave him to understand that what I had said I had said, and God helping me, would still say and defend. I well knew this man in Ontario, and knew him to be a "thorn in the side" of more than one church. He could be depended on for loyalty to the Queen and whisky on the 12th of July.

I am told on credible authority that one of my members here, a man of more than ordinary intelligence, says he could innocently take the life of an Orangeman who had revealed its secrets. The students of Masonry will know what that means.

Methodist ministers have preached for above fourteen years at one appointment on this mission at an annual loss of $75, missionary funds. Almost all who could be were Orangemen or became such, but not one soul in all of the years joined the church. I gave them for six months a Gospel of love and labor, of separation and consecration, and then concluded there was not enough of the clucking hen in me to sit longer on bad eggs. I "sat" on them once more real hard, and barely escaped the odorous nest by flight to a poor, neglected people, where we began without a member, and already have twenty-four, with the prospect of building a church. I have just heard this week that at the place above-mentioned the lodge took fever and chills from the "breeze" I gave them, and expired last month.

I have in preparation a brief exposure of Orangeism. My object in writing, as in preaching, on this subject is to save those who fear God from delusive, counterfeit religions and alliances with the ungodly, which hurt themselves, weaken the church and dishonor God. Any information or incidents in the possession of readers of this article regarding Orangeism will be thankfully received if sent to my address.

AN APPEAL TO THE KNIGHTS OF LABOR AGAINST LODGERY.

BY A. E. BURT.

Much has been said, and a vast amount of thought has been exhausted, in trying to solve the Labor Problem, and as yet no one has been able to quiet this burning unrest or restore to a wronged and oppressed people the confidence that has been infamously betrayed so many, many times. The element that is sapping the life-blood of our nation is the unconstitutionally chartered secret societies. Some may scoff at or laugh to scorn thoughts I here advance, but when strikes, riots, bloodshed and murder are of almost daily occurrence, it is time some one rose up and sounded the order to halt, till we at least have time to investigate, and if possible check this iniquity in its onward course.

But, Knights of Labor, those of you who have the welfare of the nation at heart; who furnish bone, sinew and muscle to every calling that is honorable and legitimate; you who are pioneers in all kinds of industry; you who have borne for so many years your unconstitutional and unlawful burdens; you who, when the conflict raged so fiercely, threatening the very existence of our Union, manfully faced the storms of shot and shell, that the perpetuation of the Union and of equal rights unimpaired might be handed down to your posterity, and that your descendants for all generations to come might enjoy the blessings of liberty and of equal rights,—I now ask you to halt in this, your first, and, as I may say, your only mad career. Prompted to acts of violence as you have been by the oppressions of the privileged few, I do not wonder that your situation is dark and gloomy indeed; but for all this halt, consider, reflect. Do not in the heat of passion for a single instant dethrone reason, by which alone you can obtain redress for your grievances. Do you expect to relieve or extricate yourselves from the unjust burdens of which you are so bitterly complaining by adopting and making use of the same unlawful weapons that are made use of in oppressing you? If this is to be the theory, you have made a mistake that will prove fatal unless you now heed the warning.

Fellow laborers, it becomes us to assert our rights openly and publicly before the world, for our cause is just and the reward which we seek is fully and legitimately merited. Can you expect aid, comfort, consolation and redress from a government which you have made subservient, by means of a charter, to the organization which you now represent; a government, the functions of whose offices and the constitution and laws of which, through a charter, you are at liberty to recognize, or by the same means violate or reject any or all laws that may be enacted by and for the people? Can a greater evil exist in this country than that the Constitution and printed laws of the United States and of each State should be secondary to the grips, signs and passwords which are known to but a privileged few, who have no more honor than to steal from us our liberties and enthrone the right to rob, which means to oppress, upon their chartered altars.

Men of labor, do you ask, Is capital our oppressor? I answer emphatically, No! Capital is subject at all times to the sharp eye of investigation. Capital is, always has been, and always will be, a benefactor to labor. You ask again, Who is our real oppressor? I answer by asking you several questions. Do you not, as a secret society, expect to obtain control of this government? Have you not learned from experience that, as a secret organization, you never can obtain control? Do you not know that Freemasonry is a secret organization and is now in control of this government? Do you not know it has ruined your institution as effectually as it has paralyzed ours, the best government on earth? Do you not know that Freemasonry must step down and out if you ascend to power? Then will you not learn that Freemasons are your Royal Arch enemies? Do you not know that the Freemasons have their spies in your ranks, creating dissension here and dissension there in order that your progress may be retarded? Did not the impeachment of Milo H. Dakin from the legislature of Michigan speak to you in thundering tones that, as a secret organization, you never can destroy this chartered system of oppression?

But you ask, Shall we disband? My answer is, Never! Discharge your sentinel. Open your doors; and ask the honest millions to aid you in putting down this monster demon of oppression. Who should be counted among the anarchists of this country if not the Freemasons who have instituted and put in force the foulest system of oppression that ever disgraced the history of the world. Chartered Freemasonry is the most cowardly system of oppression as well as the lowest avenue to crime that was ever instituted or conceived of by men. Remember the fact that these charters are to be perpetual, and that they forever deny to the government the right of investigation, and you will no longer marvel that instead of enjoying the blessings of a republican government we as a nation to-day are cursed with an omnivorous oligarchy.

THE COVENANTER.

A SERMON BY REV. C. H. SPURGEON, SUITABLE FOR THE NEW YEAR SEASON.

"All the paths of the Lord are mercy and truth to such as keep his covenant and his testimonies.—Psalm 25:10.

In my text I see two things worth talking about. The first is the spiritual covenanter—"such as keep his covenant and his testimonies;" and, secondly, here is his notable experience—"All the paths of the Lord are mercy and truth unto such as keep his covenant."

I. Observe in the text the footprint of the spiritual covenanter. You have heard of the old Covenanters of Scotland, their decision of mind and force of character. Their theory of government for the kingdom of Scotland was quaintly unpractical, but it grew out of true and deep fear of the Lord.

These stern old men, with their stiff notions, have gone. And what have we in their places? Indifference and frivolity. Self-contained men, men in whom is the true grit, are now few and far between as compared with the old covenanting days.

But I want to speak this morning, not of the old Covenanters, but of those who at this day keep the covenant of the Lord. The true covenanter is one who has found out God, and therein has made the greatest discovery that was ever made. He has discovered, not only a God, but the living and true God; and he is resolved to be on living terms with him for time and for eternity. He will henceforth never shut his eyes to God, for his longing is to see more and more of him.

Already, too, this man has discovered another covenant, whose ruins lay between him and God, and block the road. He reads of the first covenant, the covenant with our first father, Adam, which was broken by disobedience, whose fatal breach has brought upon us losses and woes unnumbered. This covenant the believer has not ignored, for he has felt his share in its failure, and come under the condemnation of it. Brethren, we are condemned under the first covenant, not only by the act of our representative, but also through our personal endorsement of his rebellion by our own actual sin. That covenant, which should have been a covenant of life, has become a covenant of death unto us.

This covenanter of whom I speak is one who has, through divine enlightenment, perceived a better covenant, and sure salvation therein. He has seen the Son of God arrayed in blood-stained garments coming from Gethsemane; he has seen him answering at the bar for the broken law, scourged with the chastisement of our peace, and bound with the bands of our condemnation. Oh, my soul, hast thou not seen thy Lord bareheaded amid the tempest of divine wrath for sin? Our soul has stood in the midst of the horrible tempest, half-blinded by the lightning and deafened by the thunder; at last there has been a rent in the black mantle, and a shower of wondrous love has followed the black tempest, and a voice has been heard, sweeter than the harps of angels, saying, "It is finished." Thus have the Lord's covenanted ones come forth from under the old covenant into a covenant of grace, in which peace and joy abound. Now are we in happy league with God. Our covenant with him shall compass all our life; we are his, and he is ours.

The covenanting man does not regard himself any more as one by himself, for he is joined unto the Lord, and has entered into the closest fellowship with him. None can separate him from God—the union is vital and complete. You ask me what it is which thus binds the man to God. I answer: he feels that he is henceforth joined unto the Lord for many reasons, and among the rest because the Lord has chosen him to be his own. He is old-fashioned enough to believe that God has a choice in the salvation of men, and he perceives, because faith has been granted him, that the Lord has evidently chosen him unto salvation. Now, the man that believes that God has chosen him, that is the man to enter into covenant with God, and to keep that covenant.

Moreover,in addition to the choice of God this covenanter sees a blood-mark upon his body, soul and spirit. The redemption made on the cross,whatever its other bearings, is seen by the believer to be specially for him. He cries, "For me the bloody sweat; for me the spitting and the scourging; for me the nails and the spear. Truly, I am not my own, I am bought with a price."

Besides, the covenanting believer feels that he has been the subject of a special call. Whatever God may have done with others, he knows that he has dealt specially with him in a way of grace and mercy. A voice has called him from his kindred and from his father's house as surely as Abraham was called. The Lord himself has brought him out of darkness into marvelous light. Omnipotent grace has aroused the echoes of his soul.

Yes, I can say something more, for this true covenanter feels that he is now united to God in Christ Jesus. Matchless doctrine, unity with God through Jesus Christ! We talk of aristocrats, but believers are the aristocrats of heaven and earth. We often hear the words "royalty" and "blood royal;" the blood royal of the universe is in the man that believes in Jesus. By virtue of our union with Christ we are one with God and partakers of the divine nature. The day shall come when all the gewgaws and trappings of courts shall be laid aside as faded tawdriness; but then the true dignity and honor of the twice-born, the quickened by the Holy Ghost, shall be truly seen. To be members of the body of Christ—this means glory indeed. To be married unto the King's Son, even to the Lord Jesus—this means such bliss as angels cannot reach. Do you wonder that because of such immeasurable privilege we make a sure covenant with God?

There are three or four things I would say briefly about this true covenanter: the Lord make each one of us to be of his stamp! You may know him by his attachment to the Lord Jesus, who is the sum, substance, surety and seal of the covenant; as also by his zeal for the Gospel through which the covenant is revealed to the sons of men. He will not hear anything which is not according to the old Gospel, for he counts another gospel to be a pestilent evil. He is very fond of the word "grace;"and with the thing itself he is altogether enamored. The man that is in covenant with God cannot bear the idea of human merit—he loathes it:it raises his indignation. Others may feed on philosophical morality,but nothing but the grace of God will do for us. Our keeping the covenant and the testimonies binds us to a firm adherence to the inspired Gospel, and the grace of God, which is the glory of it.

He who is indeed in covenant with God is known by his continual regard to the life,walk and triumph of faith. He has faith, and by that faith he lives and grows. He is and has and does all things by faith,and you cannot tempt him away from that faith wherein he stands.

This covenanting man will also be known by his stern resolve to preserve the Gospel in its purity and hand it on to others. When the truth of God was made known to Abraham, it was committed to him and to his descendants as a sacred deposit, of which they were to be the guardians and trustees. It was theirs to keep that lamp burning by which the rest of the world would, in due time, be saved from darkness. At this hour the eternal truths of the Gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ are given over to certain chosen men and women,to be preserved by them till the coming of the Lord. This keeping is to be accompanied with a constant proclamation, so that the truth may spread as well as live, and may go on conquering and to conquer.

II. Under our second head let us now study the covenanter's notable experience. The text says:"All the paths of the Lord are mercy and truth unto such as keep his covenant and his testimonies."

Observe, first, that the Lord makes many approaches to covenanting men. He does not leave them alone, but he comes to them and manifests himself to them. By the expression, "All the paths of the Lord," I learn that the Lord has many ways of drawing near to his chosen. Not in the public highways of grace only doth he meet those with whom he is on terms of peace, but in many private and secret paths. He makes ways for himself, and comes along them quietly, taking his people at unawares. On a sudden he whispers a word of heavenly promise, and then is away again. But he is not long gone; he makes another path, and comes to us with new unction and fresh revealings. What a life is that to which the Lord makes innumerable paths! Happy shall he be who shall attain to it!

Note, next, that all the dealings of God with his people are in a way of mercy. "All the paths of the Lord are mercy." This is well, for the best of the saints will always need mercy. Those who keep his covenant are still kept by his mercy.

That mercy will always be "tender mercy," abiding mercy, and abounding mercy. His mercy is constant as the day, fresh as the hour, new every morning,

The Psalmist says:"All the paths of the Lord are mercy and truth." That is to say, God has always shown the truth of his Word. He has never been false to his pledges. He has done according to his Word. We have followed no cunningly devised fables. We have had truth of mercy, verity of mercy. I may have been a dreamer in some things; but when I have lived unto God I have then exercised the shrewdest common sense, and walked after the rule of prudence. I know that many of you think that Christian experience leans to the region of sentiment if not of imagination; but indeed it is not so. The surest fact in a believer's life is God's nearness to him, care for him, love to him. Other things are shadows or shinings which come and go. How I wish I could persuade you of this! but, alas,the carnal mind will not receive spiritual things; I may bear witness of that which I taste and handle, but you will not believe me.

To this rule there is no exception—"All the paths of the Lord are mercy and truth unto such as keep his covenant." All God's dealings with his people are gracious and faithful. Sometimes the ways of God are full of truth and mercy manifestly—they have been so to me in many a notable instance.

Mark you, when we cannot see it, the Lord is just as merciful in his ways to us. God is as good when he denies as when he grants; and though we often see the marvelous tenderness of our God, it is not necessary that we should see it to make it true. Our God is wise as a father, and tender as a mother,and when we cannot comprehend his methods we will belive in his love.

I hear some say: "These things do not happen to me. I find myself struggling alone, and full of sorrow." Do you keep the covenant? Some of you professing Christians live anyhow, and not by covenant rule. You do not live to God, you do not keep his covenant,you do not observe his testimonies,you are not living consecrated lives; therefore, if you do not enjoy his mercy and truth, do not blame the Lord.

I have this much to add to it—What a bliss it is to have entered upon the spiritual life, and to be in covenant with God! I call all short of this death, and I know no other name for it. What solidity we have in godliness! It puts eternal rock beneath our feet. What a wondrous thing the life of a consecrated man will seem to be when it shall be viewed in its completeness, in the light of the eternal throne! Then will the embroidery of love be seen in its beauty,and the fabric of life will be owned to be worthy of a God. Things not seen as yet will be seen then; and things known in part will be seen in all their bearings. I suppose that one of the engagements of heaven will be to observe how kindly our God has dealt with us upon the road. At any rate, when we come to the glory land we shall ouly reckon that to have been true life which was spent in communion with God. Link us with God, and we live; divide us from him, and we are dead.

FAIR PLAY'S A JEWEL.

So the Supreme Court decides that a State has a right to destroy a distiller's business without compensation therefor. Well, maybe this isn't right. As a rabid Prohibitionist I am personally in favor of paying for every distillery, brewery, and saloon that is closed up and forced out of business by prohibition. Every dollar of its highest market value at the time its business was good. That is only fair and just and right. Then, I am in favor of compelling the distillery, brewery, and saloon to pay 100 cents on the dollar for every business that they ever closed up and ruined. That is only right and just and fair, too. Let us strike a balance with the distillery, square up the account on both sides, and the fellow who comes out in debt must agree to pay up like a man, no matter what the Supreme Court says. My word for it, the Kansas Prohibitionists are ready and willing to waive the decision and settle on this basis if the distillery is. What is sauce for the goose of the pond is sauce for the worm of the still. Walk up to the counter, worm, and settle.—Burdette.

A man, some time since, killed another in the State of Kentucky, when under the influence of intoxicating liquor. He was indicted on the charge of murder in the first degree, and, being tried and convicted, he was sentenced to be hanged. He interposed the plea of intoxication on his trial, which was regarded by the court as furnishing no defense for the crime committed, or even mitigation of its enormity. The case was then on the same plea taken to the Court of Appeals of the State; and that court has just laid down the doctrine that the condition of drunkenness, at the time of committing a crime, is absolutely no legal excuse for the crime. "Our statute," said the court, "makes it [drunkenness] an offense, and one crime should not privilege another," adding that drunkenness is "by far the most fruitful source of crime in our State." It is perhaps true that murder, if perpetrated by one in the state of drunkenness, has less moral enormity attached to it than if perpetrated by one who is perfectly sober when committing the offense, and deliberately does the deed in cold blood. Yet this difference can never, with any safety to society, be recognized in the administration of penal law. Drunkenness is always a self-induced state, and by the party can be induced at any time by simply drinking a sufficient amount of intoxicating liquor; and if this condition were a legal excuse for crime, then all that men would have to do in order to furnish themselves with an excuse, would be to get thoroughly drunk at the time. Society surely would not be adequately protected under such a rule of law. The doctrine stated by the Kentucky Court of Appeals is clearly the right one. —Independent.

HYMNS OF JUDGMENT.

The Psalmist says, "I will sing of mercy and judgment, unto thee, O Lord, will I sing." One of the most marked characteristics of the light and frivolous singing of the present day, is the utter absence of hymns and songs dealing with the facts of eternal judgment and final retribution. We are told again and again that ministers and churches hold the old faith that their fathers held, and so they do, when they are testing people's orthodoxy, or qualifying them to receive salaries, enjoy privileges, appropriate endowments, or hunt out heretics: but we have abundant reason to believe that in many instances, not only individuals but churches and denominations have drifted away from their ancient moorings, and in many cases do not themselves know just where they are, or whither they are going.

Take any modern hymnal and look through it to find hymns which bear upon the awful themes of judgment and eternity, and how little you will find. You may meet with songs about "clouds," and "mists," and "angel's wings," and "disembodied throngs," and "golden gates," and "silver rivers," and "Beulah's land," and "angel's harpstrings," but how few you will find of those hymns which bring the soul to stand face to face with God, and consider the solemn realities of judgment and eternity? You look for such hymns in the current hymnals of the day and you can scarcely find one of them. The old hymns which dealt with such subjects are mostly discarded, and instead of them we have something of a very different character and a very different influence. Men who hold the same creeds that their fathers did, sing differently, and preach differently, and sometimes practice differently from those in whose steps they profess to be walking.—The Christian, Boston.

THE REMEDY FOR SOCIAL ILLS.

The advocates of the new theory of property, in their revision of the Bible, would give us an improved version of the parable of the Good Samaritan. They tell us that when the proud Levite and the selfish priest had passed by the wounded man, a kind communist came down that way, and began to whisper in the sufferer's ear: "My friend, you have been very much in error. You were a thief yourself when you were amassing your private wealth; and these gentlemen who have just relieved you of it with needless violence have only begun in a hasty and unjustifiable manner what must soon be done in a large and calm way for the benefit of the whole community." Whereupon, we are to suppose the man was much enlightened and comforted, and became a useful member of society. But Christ says that it was a Samaritan,a man of property, riding on his own beast, and carrying a little spare capital in his pocket, who lifted up the stranger, and gave him oil and wine, and brought him into a place of security, and paid for his support. And to every one who reads the parable, he says: "Go thou and do likewise." Here is the open secret of the regeneration of society in the form of a picture. And if we want it in the form of a philosophy we may get it from St. Paul in five words: "Let him that stole steal no more (reformation), but rather let him labor (industry), working with his hands that which is good (honesty), that he may have (property), to give to him that needeth (charity)."—Rev. Dr. Van Dyke, in the Forum.

REFORM NEWS.

FROM THE GENERAL AGENT.

NOTES OF A KANSAS VISIT.

Leaving Chicago on the 13th I arrived in Abilene, Kansas, at 4 o'clock A. M. of the 15th, without noteworthy incident. My business at Abilene was chiefly with the recorder and tax receiver of Dickinson county, and having accomplished my work I made some notes of the city. It reports a population of 8,000, and exhibits signs of "push" and growth above the average of other towns I visited. Real estate brokers and loan offices, with life and fire insurance agencies, occupy the most conspicuous corners, and every new arrival may be sure of receiving due attention. I am under special obligation to Fry, Royer and Bessie for information, and was glad to learn of the high esteem in which our friend, C. B. Knight of Worcester, is held by this leading firm and by the citizens, as well as of the profitable investment he made during his brief sojourn in Abilene.

SALINA'S MASONIC MURDER.

I reached Salina on the evening of the 15th, and was obliged to remain over night for a train on the Missouri Pacific. At the New York House I learned that court was in session, and that a man by the name of Chilson was on trial for shooting a neighbor by the name of Head. Parties who had attended the trial thought the evidence conclusive of wilful, premeditated murder, without any mitigating features. He had followed the man with a pistol; had repeatedly said he would kill him; and, driving out of town with an associate, passed his victim on the road, gave his team into the charge of his companion who drove on, while he concealed himself in a hedge, and when Head came up he shot him dead in his carriage. Chilson admitted the killing, but claimed to be acting in "self-defence." The opinion seemed unanimous that Chilson was guilty and would be hung. After listening for a time the landlord said, "Gentlemen, he's a high Mason and belongs to the Odd-fellows and all them kind of societies, and he'll never be hung or go to the penitentiary. You see his bondsmen are all Masons, and they are doing all they can for him; and mark my word, they will clear him slick and clean!"

There was a lull in the conversation, and I thought it a good time to repeat that clause of the Master Mason's oath which refers to the "grand hailing sign of distress." I found myself the "cynosure of all eyes," and very soon confronted by members of both the Masonic and Odd-fellow orders. We engaged in a spirited interchange of words, which continued until eleven o'clock, in which some tall lying was done, unless Finney, Bernard, Ronayne, and all the rest of the seceders, have grossly betrayed us "profanes" as to the ceremonies and oaths of the "Blue Lodge." I could but pity the poor Hiramites, but was encouraged to find that "they that be with us are more than they that be with them." I was obliged to decline invitations to visit and speak in three different counties, but furnished the gentleman with the Weed pamphlet and other documents.

CARLTON.

This is a new and small village on the Missouri Pacific railroad, located in a rich farming region, which has this season suffered severely from drouth, and other causes. The individual banking establishment of the town suspended a short time ago, and tied up what little change there was in the place, so that business is at a standstill.

A drive of four miles to the half section belonging to Miss Cynthia Derbyshire of Ypsilanti, Mich., was over superb roads, and what in ordinary seasons is a most productive region. Having completed my mission to Carlton, I took supper with Mr. Shaffer, a long-time friend of Rev. D. Yant, and who heard me speak in Bolivar, Ohio. I then returned to Abilene.

Ex-Governor Glick and many leading Democrats had been in conference during my absence, and in his address the ex-Governor said, "Our first object is to establish a daily paper that shall be the Democratic organ of the State; and, second, to seek the removal of the capital from Topeka to this city." The paper has been issued but the seat of government is still, so far as I could learn, at Topeka, but the rumor would, of course, "boom" real estate in Abilene.

TOPEKA.

Unable to reach Chicago before the Sabbath I dropped off at Topeka, where I preached morning and evening for the Wesleyans, and took part with the "Salvation Army" in their three o'clock services. The Army report over fifty conversions in the few weeks they have been at Topeka, and the Wesleyans are just now engaged in a protracted effort with encouraging prospects.

During my stay of nearly a week, in which time I have visited several interior towns and traveled nearly five hundred miles in Kansas, I have not seen a single person under the influence of intoxicating liquor, and have heard very little profanity, until reaching Kansas City, where the "demon" seems to have full sway, and the name of God is blasphemed with impunity. OUR SOUTHERN AGENT ENTERS ARKANSAS.

SOUTH LAND COLLEGE, Arkansas,
Dec. 17th, 1887.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—Forty-four years ago I stopped for a few minutes at Helena, then a small village occupying a tract much of which is now in the bed of the Mississippi river. That was the only time I had been in the State until I walked off the fine steamer, James Lee, on the morning of the 15th inst. at Helena. I had been stopping some days at Memphis, and had enjoyed the hospitality of Bro. Countee and his excellent wife. I had preached for Rev. B. A. Imes in the Congregational church, and for Bro. Countee in the Tabernacle Baptist church; had given one lecture to the more than 300 students of LeMoyne Institute; had visited numerous brethren; conferred with dear Bro. Woodsmall; and left there on the evening of the 14th. It costs about as much to travel on a Mississippi steamer as it does to stay the same length of time at a first class hotel, and the accommodations are about the same. If one can spare the time, it is a luxurious mode of traveling. At Helena the hills forming the west bank of the river basin approach within half a mile of the stream. Elsewhere the hills are far away. The town, which is an important business place, has from 5,000 to 6,000 inhabitants. Part of it is high and has many fine residences. Much is low and liable to overflow in spite of the extensive levees.

A very fine school building—for whites—surmounted with a tower and clock stands near the center of the city. What may be the provisions for a public school for the colored, I did not learn; but only that the public school system has a very imperfect development in the State. The colored churches are two Baptist, one Methodist Episcopal, and one African M. E. I believe the pastors of all these churches belong to some secret order, and nearly all the members, both male and female. Most of the churches here and in this vicinity have each a secret church aid society to which none are admitted but the duly initiated. I have often heard Freemasonry called the "hand-maid of religion," but here it becomes its mistress, and despotically controls its ministers and members.

Two of these pastors, who have themselves been Freemasons, and had a membership in the other orders, have become heartily sick and tired of this despotism, which controls, subverts and practically pauperizes the church. They have invited me to preach to their people and hope to arrange for lectures.

Ten miles west of Helena is

a school established by the Society of Friends for the education of colored youth. On the 16th a ride over the hills, covered with magnificent oaks, beech and poplars, brought me to a broad and beautiful valley where this school makes a little world by itself. It was chartered in 1864; the Normal grade was instituted in 1869; college department organized in 1872; first class graduated in 1876. Over 300 teachers have gone out from here to labor in this and adjoining States. It is at present under the care of Elkanah and Irena S. Beard, who were formerly missionaries of the Society of Friends in India. They are assisted by seven professors and teachers. I was kindly received and listened with great interest to the rhetorical exercises on Friday afternoon. I met here Prof. C. J. Miller, a graduate of Berea College, who had heard me preach and lecture several times in that place. He comes to take charge of the public school.

This excellent institution, whose prospects up to a short time ago were never more promising, has met with a severe calamity. Of the six fine buildings occupied for school and dormitories, three have burned down, and they are left both crowded and crippled. Fortunately the main college building was not burned, and I attended a meeting of the colored citizens to take steps for rebuilding. Much interest was manifested and about $150 were pledged. It is earnestly hoped that the friends of education will interest themselves in this school and will aid in rebuilding. Nowhere in the State is there greater need than here, and perhaps nowhere have been better results from school work among the freedmen. Owing to the crowded condition of the college buildings, they were unable to extend to me the hospitality I usually find among Friends. But a neighbor, Mr. D. C. Gordon, a Southern white Republican, and a Christian gentleman, together with his amiable lady has made my stay here most pleasant and profitable.

HELENA, DEC. 19.—I lectured on Saturday night in the college chapel at South Land to an intelligent and appreciative audience. All received the truth kindly and candidly. One of the professors, recently from Indiana, said he was an Odd-fellow, and belonged to two other orders. He was not quite convinced, but had listened with interest. Others connected with the school thought that what I had said was timely and important. On Sabbath morning, which was bright and warm, I was brought into Helena in time for the morning service. At three P. M. I preached in the First Baptist church, Rev. Morris, pastor. They have a fine new house of worship and are a prosperous congregation. Bro. Morris reads the Cynosure with interest and heartily welcomed what I said about the "orders." At night I preached in the A. M. E. church, Rev. Russel, pastor, who also expressed his appreciation and added eloquent words of endorsement. I go hence to Pine Bluff.

FROM THE IOWA AGENT.

JASON BARTHOLOMEW'S MEMORIAL.—THE PROHIBITION CONFERENCE.—THE FRIENDS' MEETINGS.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—From Salem I went to Cedar Rapids to take train for Chicago to attend the Conference of Prohibitionists. At Cedar Rapids I called on N. Bourne, who has been an active worker in the N. C. A. and Prohibition movements.

He took me to one of the cemeteries of the city, to visit the grave of Jason C. Bartholemew, who died August 2nd, 1884, aged 79 years, 4 months. He was a veteran anti-slavery reformer, and afterwards entered with his whole soul into the battle of Christ against the great anti-Christ of this country, the secret lodge system. Bro. N. Bourne settled his estate, and, in behalf of his widow, erected a suitable monument to his memory. It is of the best New Hampshire granite and second to no monument in the cemetery. Massive and well-proportioned, it will perpetuate his memory to the end of time, and his works will follow him to make green his memory in the Eternal City of our God. Chiseled into the enduring granite are the words:

Here lie the remains of a vigorous opposer of American slavery and secret societies, especially Freemasonry.
He spent freely of his time and worldly goods to establish equity and righteousness in the earth.
He loved God and his fellow men.
"Blessed are the dead that die in the Lord. They rest from their labors and their works do follow them."

Being dead, our friend Bartholomew yet speaks from the enduring granite that marks his earthly resting place. Much credit is due to his widow, and to Bro. N. Bourne, who, as her agent, was instrumental in erecting this enduring tribute to the memory of a departed moral hero.

From Cedar Rapids I went to Chicago, stopping at Wheaton long enough to go to "my own hired house" and greet my family. My mission to the Conference of Prohibitionists was to protest in the name of the MILLION CHURCH MEMBERS who were represented at the Congress of Christians and Churches held at Chicago last March to consider the secret lodge system against drawing the secret society car with the Prohibition engine. We think it is time that Christian men and women should walk circumspectly, as in the day, and not stumble into building up one great system of evil while they are laboring to pull down another.

There were some grand men and noble women at the Conference. Gen. Fisk, of New Jersey, will doubtless be the Presidential nominee of the Prohibition party. Grover Cleveland and some other man may combine and defeat him in '88 as John P. St. John says Mr. Blaine and Mr. Cleveland combined and defeated him in '84. But, if individual manhood was the test, he ought to be a noble specimen of American manhood who should be preferred before such a Christian gentleman and philanthropist as Gen. Fisk of New Jersey.

I think I never was at a meeting where the Christian women of America were more ably represented than at this Chicago Conference. The saloon system may well tremble before the tread of the mighty army of Christian heroes, of which the Christian women form the center, that are marching on in the name of Christ to free our homes and native land from the drink curse.

The Republican party is a "grand old party." No other political organization of men can point to such a glorious record of achievements. But the day is hastening when a party for Christ and righteousness will arise, composed of the good men and women of our land in the North and in the South, in the East and in the West, who will ordain political righteousness. Then the saloons and the gambling hells, and the secret lodges and the brothels must go! In that good time coming the women of our fair land will wield the ballot, and side by side with the men who are true and tried they will conquer, and social purity will triumph. Adultery will cease to be legalized in that day. No polygamy in Utah for the Mormons: and no law for unscriptural divorce and marriage for the Gentiles of the States. Glorious have been the achievements of the "grand old party" in the past. More glorious will be the achievements of the party of all righteousness in the future. It was a proud day for the old veterans when they marched with Sherman to the sea. But a nobler record shall they make who march with Christ to the conquest of the governments of this world until the warp and woof of human legislation shall be the law of God.

After I had fulfilled my mission at Chicago, and had made a short visit with my family at Wheaton,I returned to Iowa and resumed my work. The first week after my return I sent nineteen subscriptions to the Cynosure, all of them for a full year but two, which were for six months. I spent one night with James Harvey, the treasurer of the Iowa Association. On Saturday night I reached Aaron Stalker's, an earnest friend of reform, and a member of the Friends' church at Hopewell, Salem quarterly meeting.

I sat with the Friends of the Hopewell meeting on First Day, 11 A. M., and being admonished by the elder, who sits at the head of the meeting, to use my liberty,I preached the Word unto them. I had called upon friend Hiatt, the minister of the Richland meeting on Seventh Day, and he arranged to appoint a special meeting for me on First Day at 7 P.M. So I returned from Hopewell after the morning service and preached at Richland in the evening. I have a lecture announced for Richland on Tuesday evening, and at Hopewell on Wednesday evening, and at Woolsey Friends' meeting house on Thursday evening.

Truly the harvest is great and the laborers are few. Bro. Coe will take the field with me as soon as the friends in Iowa will increase their subscriptions so as to justify duplicating the working force. Send in your donations and subscriptions to our State treasurer, James Harvey, Pleasant Plain, Jefferson Co., Iowa. Let all who are indebted for the Cynosure,and those who are back on last year's subscription to the Iowa Christian Association, please remit as soon as possible to the treasurer.

REFORM SENTIMENT GROWING IN OHIO.

CIRCLEVILLE, O., Dec. 22d, 1887.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—Before going to the young people's meeting in the Lutheran church with Rev. Schneider, at whose home I am a guest,I will report briefly of my last week's work.

After my lecture last reported at Martinsburg I returned to Columbus, spending the rest of last week there and at Reynoldsburg. My next stop was at Canal Winchester. There I found a sad state of affairs: secretists as thick as the frogs of Egypt: every church in town, with one exception, represented at the altars of Baal. The one exception was the German Lutheran. Its pastor Rev. L. H. Schuh,assured me of his hearty sympathy. He hopes to arrange for me to lecture next month. Mr. Israel Gayman, a Methodist brother, entertained me part of the time during my stay. He became interested in our reform by listening to a lecture which I gave at Hope about a year ago. The U. B. church there was entirely "liberal." The fathers who founded and builded the church were firm in their opposition to the lodge. God prospered them. Many were converted. The children now claim that they have acted as incubators to hatch out converts for other churches long enough, and wish to make their nest large like the others to take in all sorts of chicks. As sure as God's Word is true, such a church will not prosper spiritually.

My next stop was at the home of Mr. C.M.Strickler, Clearport. Mr. S. recently graduated from the Law School at Ann Arbor,Michigan. His principles are known far and near; he having made speeches and circulated reform literature. We can recommend him to any desiring services in his line. I added Cynosure subscriptions to our list here as elsewhere. One man in subscribing said that his boys attended my lectures last year and that they had never been as interested in any lectures as in those. He did not think they would join the lodge.

I had intended stopping off one train at Stoutsville, but meeting the pastor of the Evangelical church at the depot, coming to this place,I concluded not to stop. He assured me of his support in arranging for lectures. I have met with more success in securing Cynosure readers here this year than last. Reform sentiment is evidently increasing.

VOLUNTEER WORK FOR THE NATIONAL CONVENTION.

NEW ORLEANS, Dec. 19, 1887.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—I had to postpone my proposed visit to Baton Rouge, last week, but, thank God, Bros. Hubbs, Clanton, Dorsey, Reese, and other prominent anti-secretists, were there. The books you sent with tracts came safely. I will try to use them for the glory of God. I have the promise of many here to attend the proposed convention, February 17th to 20th, 1888. I visited Kennerville, a small village of 700 or 800 inhabitants, on the L. N. O. & T. R. R. There are three Baptist and one Methodist church in the place; but owing to the Knights of Labor having a meeting, there were no services except in one church on the Sabbath. It seems as if every man in the town is a Knight of Labor. Every Baptist preacher and deacon in the place is a member, and reform is not worth one-half per cent as yet, but I trust to accomplish some good here, God helping. I met Revs. F. Isaacs and A. Robinson here, both missionaries from our First District Baptist Association. They both regard the Knights of Labor as a great fraudulent political scheme, and no good for laborers. Though both of these reverends are Odd-fellows, they heartily accept reform. They promise to attend the National Convention, and both admit that Christians need not join secret societies to do good. A Bro. Williams tried to persuade me to join the Knights of Labor, saying, it is the strongest and best secret society in the world. I hope to go on my mission in the country, to arouse an interest in the convention, but I don't know yet whether I will be able. Rev. Isaac Hall promises to do all he can to awaken his people to attend the convention. I preached last night in the little African Baptist church of Kennerville, Rev. J. L. Burl, pastor. There was a nice and attentive audience. I preached last Thurday night here in Pleasant Plain M. E. church. Continue in your good work.

FRANCIS J. DAVIDSON.

—A dispatch from Stanstead, province of Quebec, Dec. 19, says: "This morning about 1 o'clock a bomb with a lighted fuse was thrown through a window into the dining-room of Dr. Canfield's residence. Mrs. Canfield hearing the crash and hissing of the fuse sprang from her bed and succeeded in detaching the fuse. The bomb contained enough giant powder to demolish the house and kill all its inmates. The doctor's father, who is a bailiff, has been engaged lately serving processes for violations of the Canada temperance act and was threatened with violence if he did not desist."

A Bangor lawyer has made an analysis of internal revenue statistics which shows that, while these taxes amounted last year to an average of $1.76 per capita of the population of the United States, the sum collected in Maine, $28,856, was only 4 cents per capita of the population of the States. This is another illustration of the way in which prohibition is a "failure" in Maine!

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE NEW YORK METHODIST PASTORS HEAR FROM OHIO.

BROOKLYN, N. Y., Dec. 22, 1887.

EDITOR CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE:—On Monday morning I had the pleasure of attending the M. E. preachers' meeting, in the Book Concern, Broadway, New York. They meet at 11 o'clock. There were 200 present. I was introduced to the officers by the kindness of the editor of the Christian Advocate By invitation, Dr. Harper, of Yale College, read a paper on "The Bible and Syrian Monuments." He began with a reference to the Divine in Scripture. The fact that sixty-two different men, living in different places and through a period of 1500 years, representing every degree of culture, writing in different languages and styles of composition, should all unite in making one harmonious book, called the Bible, can only be explained on this hypothesis, "Holy men of old spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost." But the Bible has a human side. It bears the impress of its authors. Like the Saviour's two-fold nature, it is perfectly human and absolutely divine. The Syrian monuments illustrate the human side. They contain records of wars and pillage, and weak and foolish tributes of self-praise. He quoted their account of the wars against David, Jeroboam, Jehu, etc. They are much like what we find in Kings and Chronicles. Then he added: "It is generally affirmed that the likeness proves the authenticity of the Scriptures. But I say, it is their unlikeness. The Syrian records breath the spirit of pride; the Scriptures are humble. Their language is extravagant; the Bible is chaste. The one praises men; the other praises God."

Then Dr. Leonard of Ohio was called upon to speak upon "The Temperance Situation in Ohio." He said: The constitution adopted in 1851 forbids the granting of license. Until 1881 license or tax was not thought of in the State. Any one who will take the trouble to read the debates in the convention which drafted a new constitution will find this to be the case, and the new constitution was defeated because it had a tax-clause. In 1881 the Republican legislature passed the Pond law. The smaller saloon must pay $100 tax, the larger $200, and both give bond. The Supreme Court of Ohio is a very peculiar affair: sometimes it goes this way, sometimes that. It had three Democrats and two Republicans on the bench. The Democratic judges decided the bond was unconstitutional and so the law was annulled. In 1883 two amendments were submitted to the people, the first to license liquor selling, the second to prohibit it. The first received 95,000 votes, the second, 323,000 votes that were counted —showing how the people stood. That winter the Republican legislature passed the Scott law, without the bond feature. But the liquor men of Hamilton county rebelled and that was declared unconstitutional.

Last year the Republican legislature passed the Dow law. It had three features: The Council local option, the Sunday opening, and the tax. In not a single village where local option has been adopted are the saloons closed. Cincinnati, Sandusky, Bucyrus and other places have adopted the Sunday opening act. Ohio enjoys the supreme disgrace of having an open saloon on Sabbath. Last spring the legislature felt that it must do something, so it led out that animal, the Dow law, and looked him over. It would not do to put out an eye, for he could not see. They could not pull a tooth for he could not bite as well, nor pull out a toe nail for he could not scratch. But they discovered a tuft of hair on the tip of his tail and they lifted the legislative axe and cut that off, but it did not draw blood. Some of us in Ohio think it is time to have a party that means to do something.

On last Sabbath night I preached in the DeKalb Avenue M. E. church, Rev. Crandall J. North, pastor. There are 716 members in this congregation. They have a Sabbath-school of 634. There was a large and attentive audience. Such a hearing is exceedingly gratifying to a National Reformer. The New York Witness very cordially received an article discussing the principles of our movement. The Tribune, the Herald, the Brooklyn Union and the Brooklyn Eagle have given extended notices. The Voice will print a sermon on "The True Basis of Moral Reform," and a paragraph stating the character and work of the National Reform Association. An article has been received for consideration by the Christian at Work, as also the Christian Advocate.

I have interviewed Dr. Meredith of the Tompkins Avenue Congregational church, Brooklyn. He came here from Boston last September. The church is not large enough to accommodate the crowds that go to hear him preach. He is a large man in every way: strong in body,of towering intellect and great heart. The people hear him gladly. I also called on Dr. Cuyler. He is small in stature and quite gray, but quick and impulsive. Being quite deaf, he speaks very loud. It is enough to say he is one of the Vice-presidents of the National Reform Association. I next saw Dr. Patterson of the United Presbyterian church. He has been at work in this city since 1848. It was refreshing to hear him narrate his experience, preaching in halls, gathering in the people and building up his own congregation. I then saw Dr. Foot, of the Willoughby Avenue Presbyterian church; also Revs. Prince, McNickoll and Bridges, all Brooklyn pastors.

The secretaries of the Brooklyn and New York City Y. M. C. A. took great interest in the movement we are pushing. It is not unlikely that a lecture will be given in each of their halls. Last night the Brooklyn society celebrated the anniversary of the landing of the Pilgrims on Plymouth Rock in 1620. Judge Hoadly of Ohio and Senator Hawley of Connecticut were among the speakers. A banquet was served over in New York City at Delmonico's. We are reminded that Delmonico, the man who established the best restaurant in America, starved himself to death. "He builds too low who builds beneath the skies." J. M. FOSTER.

SEVENTY THOUSAND IN TEXAS READY TO BE SAVED.

WHAT SAY OUR ANTI-LODGE FRIENDS TO THIS APPEAL?

HEARNE, Texas, Dec. 16, 1887.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—Since I last wrote you I have visited several of our larger cities and distributed the tracts sent me. I read Bro. Hinman's contributions in your columns with a great deal of pleasure, and only pray the day may soon come when some one shall canvass Texas.

Rev. Wm. Massey of Austin, president of our State convention and one of the ablest ministers, and who is referred to as the "silver-tongued preacher of Texas," has read the tracts and come out on the Lord's side. He assisted me in leaving tracts in the barber shops, and in conversation said better things than I could. Two weeks later he went to Navasota to attend his appointment, and the sisters of the S.S. of C. (Seven Stars of Consolation) turned out in full uniform (and put a collar on him also which he wore during the time he delivered the sermon). For want of support and encouragement he yielded. His tender heart would not let him slight the work of preaching that S. S. of C. sermon. He said anything that seems to be backed up by the Bible our people would follow or join. He took up the "No. Seven" wherever found and made the best of it he could. When he was through we talked it over; he said it would injure him to take a stand against the lodge at present. Many of the members of the church did not turn out, and many who were out sat back. They showed signs of disapproval of the whole affair.

I was speaking to one of our teachers to-day, who had left his school room to write up a general law for the S. S. of C. I said to him the societies teach men to steal; as he was leaving his school to be taught by his assistant. In reply he said, "I learned it from you preachers." I asked how; he said the preachers are the leaders in all of these societies. They pastor their churches and get pay as officers in the lodge. It is true to a great extent, and made me feel more like fighting the wickedness.

Rev. A. R. Griggs, our superintendent of missions, is a great worker and is ready to help, but afraid to espouse the cause of reform as its forerunner. Rev. J. Toliver is a great worker and has more influence over the masses than any minister in Texas. He is speaking for our cause in nearly every sermon. He does not belong to any lodge. The following incident caused him to quit all the lodges. When I joined the Masons, being a personal friend of his, I persuaded him to send in his application, which he did. He was black-balled for the second time. The Worshipful Master, a preacher, tried to assist him in, but to no avail. When he was notified, he said, "If blacklegs and other bad persons run the lodge I give up the whole business." Here a Christian gentleman, and one of the ablest preachers we have, is rejected from a lodge, and, as was afterward learned, because he stumped his county against liquor, and fought the other sins of his people.

If some one could go over this State and speak to our pastors and people, great good could be done. One of the strongest societies in the State has a worldly man for its executive. Rev. Z. T. Pardee of Corsicana, at one of their meetings, arose and gave them his regalia and walked out, because of the ungodly action of that officer. A missionary might meet with some trouble at first, but would succeed.

Some of my members here are disliking my stand, and whenever I speak against their society they get angry. I asked one the other day why was it she did not get angry if I spoke against Jesus, or my brother pastors, or the churches; and she said, "That is so." After a short talk she gave up.

The majority of our women in this State belong to some side-show lodge. Rev. W. H. Jackson of this place had an application before one of the lodges, and I told him he would have to be divested of his clothes and take a whipping. He then become interested in the subject after a talk and some tracts; he gave the whole matter up, and says in future his text will be, "IN SECRET HAVE I SAID NOTHING."—JESUS. I find the news of such an organization as the is getting well known in Texas. I feel very grateful to you for the paper. It is a great blessing to me. A kind friend sends me tracts and other papers weekly. I also thank him. I use every page to the best advantage. Many of our Baptist ministers do not belong to the lodge, and I feel that 70,000 Baptists of Texas with their three schools stand ready to be saved and help save others. I am yours for reform, L. G. JORDAN.

WHAT TO DO ABOUT ROMANISM.

CHICAGO, Dec. 19, 1887.

DEAR EDITOR OF THE CYNOSURE:—A thousand pens ought to respond to the article in your last issue, "The Catholic church in America," asking you directly the question, "What shall we do to avert the peril, near at hand, from this increasing and criminal power?" And then 50,000 of our grandest, manliest citizens, should immediately reply, saying: "We will meet in convention on the first of the New Year, and for five consecutive days we will plan and advise, and bring all our forces together to see what can be done to avert this pending evil: how we we may save our young people from the sacrifice, and put sense into the heads of the old ones, who, if they are not fascinated with the cloister, are flattered with the show and glitter of the church, and are pleased with the convenience of sins remitted for money, instead of repentance." Here lies the danger: fear, favor and fascination; and who is going to break the chain? Where is the righteous indignation, the wise planning?

If an hostile army was approaching the city, how alive would it be for self-protection! But when within there is an enemy undermining it, and all the more surely, because so few see only the low, bending affability and smiling face turned toward them, meanwhile the stealthy hand is pulling the bricks from the foundations of all civil and religious rights, and even personal safety. Who will arouse them to their danger? Why shall not the encroachments upon our civil liberties be made again, as heretofore, as some affirm? Is it because the nation, the church, the individual, is doing anything to hinder it? Is it as another says, "That we are becoming too enlightened?" What good does enlightenment do if we do not use it? Or, is it that the Church of Rome is better than heretofore? Her boast is "That she never changes." Our brave nation would throttle the fiercest lion, but it is too courteous, too trustful, too busy to see danger in a pleasant garb. Straws show the current sometimes.

I have expended considerable money, time and strength in trying to do God's work in this city. Oftentimes I walk in the distribution of tracts to save car fare. Sometimes I get into a car very tired, and opposite me are fat, hearty "Sisters;" a few words of converse, but no fare is asked of them. So are they banded together, though strangers. Let it be an ensample to us.

Sabbath afternoon I thought to have two hours before a dinner at 2 o'clock to distribute tracts and call on a friend I would have saved. I had mistaken the number, and after walking on eight blocks, and working by the way, I found where he had been, but had now removed twenty-five blocks farther down. Should I go there? Yes, I ought; but on looking in my pocket found I had no pocket-book with me, so I walked the distance; but on returning I thought I would try, for the first time, the "Sisters'" plan. So I hailed a car, stepped onto the platform, and in the sincerest manner told the conductor of my benevolent work, and unexpected necessity. He replied, "It is against the rules of the road to let anyone ride free."

"Very well," I said, "leave me at the next street." The bell-rope was pulled, and I climbed down, to walk on in the twilight.

The point here is this: The Roman church is to be dreaded because it is a unit. But they know, and they boast, they have not much to fear from us, because we are not a unit. Try to bring Christ to the heart of a Romanist, and it is like striking adamant. Why? Because you have first to strike against the church, which is, as a rule, between you and them.

John Jay was a statesman—and he saw danger, fearful danger, and warned us of Rome. Will we heed?

THE NAME OF CHRIST IN G. A. R. PRAYERS.

The letter on the trouble about prayers in the G. A. R. of Chariton, published in the Cynosure of Oct. 20th, is creating quite a sensation here. Many are beginning to see the danger of even the G. A. R. order when men like Col. O. A. Bartholomew whose brother is the Methodist minister in Chariton would tile Christ out of the "Post," and men who are professing Christians and members respectively of the Methodist and United Presbyterian churches would agree to offer prayer without using Christ's name. Mr. Aughey (not Hughey) is the pastor of the Presbyterian church in Chariton and has the respect of many for preferring to resign his office as chaplain of the Post rather than to dishonor Christ by offering a so-called prayer without using his name. There is danger in the dark.—E. F. BAIRD, Chariton, Iowa.

A BLESSING FROM NORTH CAROLINA.

I was about to give up the paper because of my straightened circumstances, but I really cannot afford to say good-bye to the dear Cynosure. God bless you again, dear brother; I sincerely love you and your dear people and pray that God may greatly bless your labors. It is a real feast to read the Cynosure. Pray for me.—D. L. S., Raleigh, N. C.

IOWA MUST HAVE FENCES FOX-TIGHT.

C. F. Hawley has lately done good work in our midst, but the Good Templars have since organized a large lodge. I am glad to belong to the W. C. T. U., but can not approve of the Masons and Odd-fellows starting our young people in the line of secrecy.—RHODA S. BLACKLEDGE, Salem, Iowa.

ANARCHY OF THE DEVIL.

I have read your paper ever since it has been a paper. Was raised up to love the cause. You have always set forth the doctrine that the devil and Masonry were anarchy. Pres. C. A. Blanchard at New Concord on the 16th of last month said it in words. Now when any man charges Jesus Christ with being an anarchist, communist or socialist, and then smoothes it over with the oily tongue, and says they were of the kind heavenly and divine, he is a liar and a rebel against God and all good government.—WM. N. WILSON, Freeland, O.

FROM ONE OF THE EARLY SUBSCRIBERS.

I think I have something of an appreciative idea of the great work engaged in by the "N. C. A." Allow me to say, I have been an uninterrupted subscriber to, and reader of, the Christian Cynosure, almost from the beginning. As soon as I found it out I certainly look upon it as one of the VERY BEST papers published in all our country. Would to God, I could do a hundred fold more in its circulation than I can.—J. W. THOMPSON, Dadeville, Mo.

BIBLE LESSON.

STUDIES IN THE NEW TESTAMENT.

LESSON 1.—Jan. 8.—The Multitude Fed.—Matt. 14: 13-21.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Jesus said unto them, I am the bread of life.—John 6: 35.

[Open the Bible and read the lesson.]

COMMENTS ON THE LESSON BY E. E. FLAGG.

1. The Divine Compassion. vs. 13, 14. Jesus was human and he needed rest—rest of mind as well as of body. On a sensitive spirit the constant pressure of multitudes, the gazing down as it were into the maelstrom of human life with all its woe and sin and misery, for it was not as a rule the healthy, the happy and the fortunate who thronged around Jesus, brings a peculiar kind of nervous weariness harder to bear than any mere physical fatigue. But this blessed soothing balm of solitude Christ was willing to forego. Without a murmur of impatience at this invading of his retreat he spends another long day healing and teaching the multitude. Home quiet and privacy is very sweet, but if in selfish enjoyment of our own fireside we forget those outside its circle of light and warmth, we are not following Christ. Some people think after they have performed a round of social visits that their whole duty in this respect is done. As they phrase it, they have performed their duty to society. But the Bible talks about our duty to the world, not to society. It tells us that every man is our neighbor, every cry of human need the call of the Master.

2. The Part of the Church in Feeding the World. vs. 15–17. When the disciples said to Christ, "Send the multitude away," they only obeyed the natural impulse of humanity when brought face to face with wants it cannot relieve. But if the church did its duty the multitude need not depart. The laboring masses need not go off to anti-poverty apostles, and learn anarchism in beer-saloons, thus seeking to satisfy their hunger of soul and body with that which is not bread. The church of to-day needs again to hear Jesus's command, "Give ye them to eat." She has only to accept the cause of the poor as her cause; to fling open her doors, free as the everlasting Gospel she proclaims, that every creature may come in, and let fashion and wealth if they enter at all take back seats; to be the world's anti-poverty society. No matter how poor the church may be which does this, her five loaves and two fishes will be continually increased in proportion to her faith and the needs of the multitude. And this would not be true of Christ's church if it were not blessedly true of every individual member. The humblest talent laid meekly at his feet without shame and without distrust will be increased a hundred fold, and the five loaves and two fishes of the poorest believer made to feed a world. Our insufficiency is the empty vessel into which Christ pours his all-sufficiency.

3. The Multitude Fed. vs. 17–21. His first command is, "Bring them hither to me." The consecrating Christ touch must be on all successful efforts for humanity.

He sets the multitude in organized ranks. Work at haphazard accomplishes little. The lodge and the saloon are examples of what Satan can do in the way of organization. Every Christian laborer should have his place and his work. Christ gives to the disciples, they to the multitude. The bread of life is intrusted to our hands. Shall we let the multitude feed on the husks of bad literature when the interesting book or illustrated paper from our own overflowing stores might save a soul from perishing? Shall we let them starve on lodge tradition and fable while we in cowardly fear keep back the truth for which they are hungering? He who freely gives will find his own stores increased. In the Gospel dispensation it is grace for grace, blessing for blessing. Feed the multitude and the fragments left over shall spread a table for us in the desert.

LITERATURE.

SYLVAN SECRETS in Bird Songs and Books. By Maurice Thompson. Pp. 139. Price, 69c. John B. Alden, New York.

The author of this beautiful little volume, though a Southerner, may lay claim to the "universal genius" of the Yankee. He was born in Indiana, but reared in the mountain region of Georgia. He was well educated by private tutors, especially in the classics and oriental languages. He became an enthusiastic sportsman, was during the war a daring Confederate scout, explored afterwards the fastnesses of the Florida Everglades, served as an engineer in the construction of railways and other public works; and, after marrying the daughter of a railway president, settled down in Crawfordsville, Indiana, as a lawyer. He has a lucrative practice, is something of a politician, has served in the State legislature and is State Geologist. But he is best known to the public through his books, "By-ways and Bird-Notes," "Songs of Fair Weather," etc., and his contributions to the magazines and the New York Independent. His literary work is that of a poet-naturalist, an observer of nature from the literary and poetic side rather than the scientific. He is a graceful and fascinating writer, delighting either by the artistic merit of his composition, or by the treasures of natural discovery which he opens to the admiring reader whose blunter instincts and more prosaic habits would never have dreamed had an existence. While he is by some enthusiastically placed beside Thoreau and Burroughs, he is surely not a recluse like the former nor tainted with infidelity like the latter. It reveals a good foundation to his work when we see in the preface such a passage as this:

"The more I have studied Nature, the more I have become aware of God. When I approach the beginning I find him, and his hand puts me gently but firmly away, as if to say: 'I stand here all alone.' When I approach the end, there too is God standing all alone, self-existent, sufficient, unimaginable, at once the cause and the culmination, the germ, the bloom, and the fruit of all things. I do not expect that men ever will find the secret of life locked in a cell or in any other minute division of matter. No analysis of the specialist, no synthesis of the generalizer can ever pass beyond the vail. God said: "Let life be," and life was. Still I believe in evolution; I feel it, I see it; but it is evolution by God's law, bounded by his limiting purpose. When we study Nature we study him, not in the materialistic or pantheistic sense, but in the Christian sense. The will of the universe is God's will, because God made the universe, as he made man, and blew into it the energy that fills it. I see no clash between Christianity and Science."

In the chapters on Bird Song, its "Motif," "Genesis" and "Anatomy" there is a happy rivalry of the imagination with the shrewd inquisition of the scientist; and those on Shakespeare and Ruskin will not lack for admiring readers, if there be also critical ones.

The Cosmopolitan for December gives us another of Von Schierbrand's articles on Persia, which has all the interest of his former sketch of the manners and customs of a barbarous but historical race. The present sketch is of the rulers, and, if truthfully drawn, a sadder picture of cruelty, avarice and lust, even the king of Dahomey would hardly disclose. Why our government should keep up an expensive mission at such a court is not easy to imagine; and it can well be understood why Mr. F. H. Winston of this city refused to serve for any length of time in such a humiliating capacity. The magazine contains a number of shorter but equally interesting articles, of which Olive Thorne Miller's story of the Central Park chimpanzee, and J. Macdonald Oxley's sketch of the woodsmen and their work are especially entertaining.

Mr. Kennan's article in the January Century will be on the "Russian Provincial Prisons." It will describe the present shameless system, attempted reforms, and the effects on prisoners, and will give their secret methods of communication in changeable ciphers, the knock alphabet, etc.

"The Undeveloped South, its Resources, and the importance of their development as a factor in determining the future prosperity and growth of wealth in the United States," is the title of a pamphlet by George B. Cowlam, of Knoxville, Tenn. It is an interesting exhibit of the prospective value of mining and agricultural products of the South. To be had of the author; price 10 cents.

THE CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE.

PROSPECTUS FOR THE TWENTIETH YEAR.

As we turn over the leaf for another year the Cynosure would again write at the top of the new page: "Christ always; Christ only." It will more than ever be the purpose of all connected with the paper to make it a power for the coming kingdom of our Lord, before which all the systems of secret worship, mystery and iniquity of the great Babylon must fall. We would be on the CONQUEROR'S side in that day—we will stand for him now in the days of testimony and of tribulation.

THE CYNOSURE during 1888 will give the most earnest attention to the South. The National Convention at New Orleans, Feb. 17th, and the effort, which promises so much success, to put

of the paper into the hands of colored pastors gives a direction to our interests. We also hope that the National Christian Association will be able to put other workers into the Southern field.

The Minor Secret Orders, so-called, will have more respect given to their insinuating and benumbing influence. If Masonry and Odd-fellowship have felt severely the attacks upon their strongholds, they are making good all losses by training up an army of young men whose convictions are paralyzed in respect to secretism by the swarms of orders which cover their modicum of lodgery with a bait of temperance, insurance, patriotism, good fellowship, business aid, etc., etc. The Cynosure will endeavor to rouse our careless churches to see that this evil is likely to be worse than the first.

We have nearly completed arrangements for special Correspondence from the metropolitan cities in different parts of the country. Our readers may expect letters once a month, or oftener, from Boston, New York, Philadelphia, Washington, Cincinnati, New Orleans, Denver, San Francisco and Los Angeles. These letters will give graphic pictures of the earnest American life which throbs in our great cities, with especial reference to the news of the lodges in each.

The very popular Biographical Work of the Cynosure during the three years past will be continued with some features which will be especially attractive. During the last year there have appeared portraits of George B. Cheever, William H. Seward, Daniel Webster, John Brown, Charles Sumner, Charles Francis Adams, Enoch Honeywell, Bishop Hamline, Charles G. Finney, Howard Crosby, Dr. C. F. W. Walther, and Alexander Hamilton. These portraits have been accompanied with sketches which have presented facts of profoundest interest to our discussion, collated after diligent and often exhaustive search. We can promise for the coming year biographies of

JOHN G. WHITTIER, the Poet.
JOSEPH COOK, the Lecturer.
JAMES MCCOSH, the Philosopher.
JOHN C. SPENCER, the Lawyer.
JOHN MARSHALL, the Judge.
WILLIAM EWART GLADSTONE, the Statesman.

These are all in preparation. Others whom we do not care at present to mention are in contemplation, whose portraits will adorn the paper and the history of whose lives will enrich them.

Letters from foreign lands we expect to be more frequent and valuable in 1888 than ever. Correspondents in England, Germany, Greece, Turkey, India, West and South Africa, China and Mexico will through our columns be in personal connection with our readers.

Best of all is the noble company of contributors and correspondents in our own land. We hardly need mention them; but it is a pleasure to see these goodly names in print. Here are a few of them:

William F. Davis, the hero of Boston Common.
H. L. Hastings, editor of the "Christian."
Hon. S. V. White, M. C.
Rev. B. A. Imes, Vice-president Nat'l. Cong'l. Council.
Pres. H. H. George, Geneva College.
Rev. C. C. Foote, Detroit.
Geo. W. Clark, the singer.
Bishop M. Wright.
Pres. E. H. Fairchild, Berea College.
Cecil H. Howard, Astor Library.
Rev. Julius Grunert, D.D., Evangelical Synod.
Rev. Wm. Johnston, D.D., United Presbyterian.
Rev. B. Cuns, German Lutheran.
Rev. B. W. Williams, Texas.
Elder J. L. Barlow, Iowa.
Pres. O. A. Blanchard, Wheaton College.
Rev. David Mc Fall, Chambers St. Church, Boston.
Rev. C. W. Hiatt, High St. Church, Columbus.
Prof. Elliott Whipple, Wheaton, late of Romona Institute, Santa Fe.
Elder Nathan Callender, Pennsylvania.
Pres. L. N. Stratton, Wheaton Theological Seminary.
Rev. Henry T. Cheever, Worcester.
Rev. Joel Swartz, D.D., Gettsyburg.
Miss E. E. Flagg, Author of "Between Two Opinions."
Mrs. M. A. Blanchard, Wheaton.
Mrs. A. E. Kellogg, Denver.
Hon. S. C. Pomeroy, Washington.
Hon. Halleck Floyd, Indiana.
Rev. W. H. French, D.D., Cincinnati.
Rev. M. A. Gault, Iowa.
Rev. J. M. Foster, Cincinnati.
Rev. J. S. T. Milligan, Kansas.
Rev. William Wishart, D.D., Monmouth.
H. M. Hugunin, former editor "Chicago Eve. Journal."
Capt. A. D. Wood, editor "Censor," Los Angeles.
Rev. R. N. Countee, editor "Living Way," Memphis.
Prof. A. R. Cervine, Augustana College.
Rev. H. W. Lathe, First Church, Northampton.
Rev. J. F. Avery, Mariners' Temple, New York.

But we must forbear. Who can recall these and other names like them without a thrill of happy and grateful recollections. To keep in their company a season were —"worth ten years of common life."

We invite all friends of the past to honor themselves by remaining in this company. The Cynosure gives you a noble fellowship. You can hardly afford to forsake it. Let your name then be found on the list. Do your neighbor a good turn and get his subscription also.

IN ADVANCE $1.50 PER YEAR. Address, the "CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE" Chicago.

PRIZE ESSAYS.

IN COLLEGES, THEOLOGICAL SEMINARIES AND ACADEMIES.

The Board of the National Christian Association desiring to arouse an interest among American students in the topics named below, have offered cash prizes for essays on the following topics:

"Secret Societies and the Labor Problem."

"The Relation of Secret Societies to the Temperance Cause."

For the best essay on each of these topics a premium of Twenty Dollars will be paid to its author: for the second in merit a premium of Ten Dollars.

This offer is made to students of both sexes in all the institutions named above, with the following limitations:

1. The length of the essays may not be more than 2,000 words, plainly written.

2. They must be mailed to the "Essay Committee, N. C. A. office, 221 West Madison St., Chicago," before May 1, 1888.

3. The name and address of each writer must be plainly written on a separate sheet accompanying the essay.

4. The Association to have the privilege of publishing as a tract, or in their paper, the Christian Cynosure, any or all the four prize essays; and any others which may seem desirable, if satisfactory arrangements can be made with their authors.

The committee of award have not yet been chosen.

IN BRIEF.

The Panama Star and Herald publishes the report of the agent of the Columbia Government specially appointed to watch the progress of the work on the Panama Ship Canal. He sums up the work as follows: Of 161,000,000 cubic metres of rock and earth 127,000 000 metres remain to be excavated. The sum expended to date is 1,818,023,900 francs. The enormous task of turning the Chagres River is estimated to cost 471,700,000 francs. To this is to be added 2,541,495,000 francs for excavation yet to be done. This will bring the total yet to be expended up to 3,012,495,000 francs.

The plan of the German Government to provide for working men in their old age will be applied at first only to industrial workmen, of which it is estimated the number is 7,251,000. The minimum pension to be allowed is 120 marks yearly, the state, employers, and workmen each contributing one-third of the pension fund, which will be a tax on each individual of 3 marks yearly. It is estimated that a state credit of 22,000,000 marks will be required. All workmen over fifty years of age when the bill is passed will be excluded from its benefits.

Carefully prepared statistics show that there are 500,000 criminals in this country, only 50,000 of whom are incarcerated. Of the 500,000 it is estimated that one-third are under twenty years of age, one-half under twenty-one years of age, and a fraction under twenty-two years of age, and the chances are that all of them will continue criminals through the rest of their lives.

THE NEW ORLEANS CONVENTION FEBRUARY 17 TO 20, 1888.

RESPONSES FROM NORTH AND SOUTH.

The friends who have been giving to the fund for sending the Cynosure to colored pastors will be thrilled with the letters we give them in this number from New Orleans, from Texas, and this below from Plaquemine. A copy of the Texas letter has been sent Bro. Hinman to lead him that way before the New Orleans meeting. But the N. C. A. ought to have ten good men at work in the South, and would send them if it was able. Pray that God send help in this critical hour. When men cannot go the Cynosure can. It has helped Texas up to the present condition. Read here what it is doing for this poor people in Louisiana:

PLAQUEMINE, La., Dec. 20, 1887.

DEAR EDITOR:—I very recently attended the annual session of the Fourth District Baptist Association, which session was held at the capital of this State. Among the issues of importance, and that which attracted my attention most, was "Secret Orders."

I must acknowledge that this evil continues to exist even among some of the pastors,and pastors who have very important charges. I am glad to note the fact that we made some converts by the manly arguments produced by the "honey-tongued" orators, Rev. A. Hubbs and A. L. Reese. These honored divines took a manly stand, notwithstanding the threats made. We captured one of these secret preachers and made him wish for the secret place.

Your paper is of unspeakable value to us in helping to crush this evil, which robs children of that which is due them by their parents, and that is education. It is a fact that fathers will deprive their children of the necessary comforts of life in order to be a "financial member" in the lodge.

Send us the paper, supply us with facts, and we are willing to be the instruments of use. We need it in the home; we need it in the church; we need it in the community. We hail with joy the day when Christianity—the millstone—will be tied to the neck of secretism and sink it beneath oblivion. Yours in the work, L. H. WILLIAMS.

The fund reported last week amounted to $382.04, we are thankful to add three more $15 shares making $427.04.

Dear friends, let these appeals from the colored pastors themselves stir you to double effort to speedily make up the $1,500 needed for a thousand copies to be sent South.

REV. WM. DILLON, editor of the Conservator, Dayton, Ohio, has been suspended for preaching the Gospel and administering the communion of Christ's body and blood. In Elida circuit, United Brethren refused to hear and support preachers who were unfaithful to God and the church and who allowed members of secret societies to come into the churches. The conference would not send them ministers who were opposed to the lodge, and they formed voluntary meetings and worshiped outside of the objectionable congregations. Rev. Mr. Dillon preached and administered the sacrament to such a church or churches, and Rev. Mr. Luttrell, who was presiding elder over that circuit last year, but not this, suspended Bro. Dillon, and published his suspension in the Telescope. Why the elder who is over the Elida circuit did not do this hateful work we know not. All can see that Luttrell had no right or authority to suspend him, even if he had done anything worthy of suspension. We should advise Bro. Dillon to keep on steadily preaching to those people, at least till he is regularly suspended. The slave-holders used the Constitution to bind Abolitionists.but took no heed to obey it themselves. It is so with those who fellowship "the unfruitful works of darkness." The wrath of God will surely fall on such men at the end.

THE LETTER FROM TEXAS on the 6th page opens a field which appeals to every lover of God and his country with great force. Who will enter it as a lecturer at once? Some missionaries have started for Africa without means to cross the ocean, and God has brought them on their journey and sustained them with food and raiment. Shall seventy thousand Baptists in Texas be snared, taken and destroyed by the concealed worships of Satan, for want of light? A brother called on us a week since who has preached with success in Texas twelve years. It was painfully instructive to hear his account of the preaching which the people get there from Methodist preachers who are "almost all Masons." He says they seem to have no idea at all of bringing souls to trust in Christ. It is only "join the church and all will be well." And though ignorant, the industrious masses see that the lodges attract these preachers more, even, than their own churches.

In our late trip East, we preached on Sabbath evening in a Baptist church, contrasting the lodge with the kingdom of Christ, and we called on those who would now "seek first the kingdom of God" to publicly confess and manifest it; and we had a precious prayer meeting for those who came out. It is a mistake to lecture against the lodge without seeking and expecting the Holy Spirit to be "poured out" on the congregation. Who will go and preach salvation in Texas? Who will form a club to sustain an anti-secret preacher there for one year?

BY WHOM MUST MORMONISM GO?

The United States court has ordered Marshal Dyer, who is said to be a brave man, to take possession of the Mormon church property, which is held in violation of the act of Congress; as if the Y. M. C. A. should amass millions of real estate and hold and use it for purposes of gain, speculation, priestism, and political despotism and power.

There is no doubt but Congress and the court are right, morally, legally and constitutionally. The papacy was driven out of Scotland by such men as Marshal Dyer. John Knox pointed to the old stone priest houses, called monasteries, and said significantly, "Tear down the nests and the rooks will fly away." The people took the hint, and without shedding one drop of popish blood they rescued Scotland from the grasp of papacy.

But the people were converted. And why should not Congress send enlightened, God-fearing men, as Grant sent Quakers to Indians, to instruct the Mormons? The masses are sincere and industrious,but ignorant people. Let the churches do what they can, but Congress ought to do enough for the poor priest-ridden Mormons to convince them that the Americans love them and do not wish to plunder them. Henry the VIIIth was a tyrant and ruffian, but he sent Thomas Cromwell, who was a good man, to tear up the monasteries; and he went in the name of Christ, without whom we can do nothing.

A political party cannot cure a religious evil. We should remember this, that Christ alone is mightier than Satan, who is god of the false religions of the earth, Mormonism and Masonry included. Joseph Smith belonged to the lodge, and modeled Mormonism after it. "The Ancient and Accepted Scottish Rite" is now to be presented in Mr. Cook's volumes just as it is, and the truth of the expose attested in the notes by the highest Masonic authorities. Every lover of Christ should be an agent for that book. (See advertisement in the Cynosure.) The American people have never had the like before, and they will find in these faithfully developed degrees Jo. Smith's golden plates dug from the earth, and all the gibberish of Mormonism, which our own Illinois legislature chartered at the bidding of Stephen A. Douglas, who was a member of a Springfield lodge of Masons.

THE DISCUSSION OF THE MINOR ORDERS.

It was a forcible though rude illustration in the early days of our discussion of the lodge to compare Freemasonry and the dozen or two other orders to a sow with a litter of pigs: when we should be able to drive out the old beast the litter would follow. The illustration was not exact. The pigs do not sustain the dam but she them. Not so the lodge. Freemasonry sustains the other orders only as an incident to its own success. It furnishes them a model and leads the way in their organization, and puts its henchmen in important places in these orders so as to keep their supplies running toward itself. These minor lodges are like the springs and streams that flow to make the river, or the brace roots of a cornstalk. They are the Sabbath-schools that go before the churches in almost every home mission work. When Masonry was believed to be dead in 1834, it was by these lodges that it crept back into influence and power. Should Masonry be overthrown to-morrow, it would leave all its vitality in these orders. We fear there has been an error in our management of this lodge question, and we urge a full and free discussion in our columns.

We are led to make this suggestion to our readers, and to request them to contribute from their experiences and cogitations, because many who suppose themselves warm opponents of the lodge, when their sentiments come to the analysis, are found to be opposed to Freemasonry, but not to the temperance lodges, or labor unions, or Grand Army. Friends who are honored by the National Association and entrusted in some measure with its work have questioned whether our opposition to all the orders was wise. Prominent members of the Wesleyan church have said they do not regard the Grand Army and Sons of Veterans as secret societies, and have encouraged these orders in a community where secret societies were in much disfavor. The late discussions in the Reformed Presbyterian Synod and the United Presbyterian General Assembly will be remembered. Now are we to say we are opposed to Masonry and give the "little" lodges the right hand of fellowship, or shall we more emphatically regard the whole lodge system as one, a unit; no branch, stem or root, feeder, fountain or stream to be neglected? Is it as important to save our young men from joining the Sons of Veterans as the Odd-fellows, the Knights of Labor as the Knights of Pythias? Let us review these questions carefully. We have requested several able writers to give us their views as Dr. Johnson of College Springs has done most ably, and hope that at least as a result of the discussion the thoughts of our friends who profess opposition to the lodge will be established.

OATHS OF THE SONS OF VETERANS.

Rev. George Warrington, pastor of the United Presbyterian church at Birmingham, Iowa, and editor of the Psalm-Singer, while lately attending a meeting of his presbytery at Washington, Iowa, was shown a copy of the ritual of the Sons of Veterans, from which he made accurate copies of oaths and prayers, which are printed in the Free Press of Birmingham. This ritual was "approved and promulgated" by the sixth annual "Encampment of the Commandery-in-chief" of the order meeting in Des Moines, Iowa, August 18, 1887. The committee which reported the ritual was headed by G. B. Abbott, "Commander-in-chief," and C. J. Post, his "Adjutant General." No document can be, therefore, more reliable.

We copy from the Free Press and add a few remarks which will serve to explain some of the features of this order which should not be overlooked.

In the opening formalities the "Captain" of the lodge or "camp" asks the members to name the principles on which the order is founded and which it is supposed to inculcate. The reply is "Friendship, Charity and Loyalty." These are excellent virtues, but take away the solemn mockery of oaths, secrecy and seclusion, the formidable titles which are a part of the machinery of war, and the forms of religious worship, and it would be as impossible to get a company of young men together to promote the bare virtues of friendship, charity and loyalty as it would to making up patchwork quilts like a sewing school. Take these exterior accessories away and the whole thing would be too flat and insipid to exist a day. It would then appear plain that, so far as these virtues were connected with religion,the church and its associated societies were altogether sufficient for all the purposes of teaching and enforcing them.

The opening prayer is as follows:

OPENING PRAYER.

Our Heavenly Father, the High and Mighty Ruler of the Universe, who dost from thy throne look down upon the government of men, most heartily do we beseech thee, with thy favor to bless our native land and to preserve in purity and integrity its free institutions for all coming time.

Bless our order. Grant that it may long exist and that it may continue to be an instrument of great good to all. Give us willing hands and ready hearts to properly carry out its principles and objects. Keep green in our minds the memory of those, both living and dead, who sacrificed so much, that the life of the nation might be preserved, and deal with them in all things with thy special mercy.

Give us thy aid in conducting the business for which we are here assembled, and so endow us, that charity, justice, peace and harmony shall ever remain and abide with us.

We ask all in the name of our Lord and Saviour. Amen.

To this all are required to respond and say "Amen."

Two other prayers are quoted: one is said over the candidate after he has sworn to keep the secrets of the lodge,the other is at the close of the meeting. The first closes with the same words as above, the other with: "for our Redeemer's sake. Amen." If such petitions were used in a Christian church who could object or wish anything added? No one, certainly. Why then say anything but in approval of them in a Sons of Veterans' lodge? Because they are prescribed formula to be used without exciting any objection in a membership that may contain Jews, or Unitarians, not to say numerous unbelievers. The terms must therefore be so general that each one may apply them to such a divinity as he worships. The disciples of all religions have Lords, Saviours and Redeemers; therefore if no particular name is given the religious worship can go on without interruption or objection. If they should say, In the name of our Lord and Saviour, Jesus Christ, that would be worship in which a Christian could join, but all could not say, Amen, as the ritual commands. This prayer is, therefore,like those of Freemasonry, a deist's prayer, and cannot be accepted of God.

After the prayer and the candidate is prepared for initiation, he is thus addressed:

We are now prepared to muster you into our ranks. In doing this it is necessary for you to take a solemn obligation, but I can assure you that it will not in any way interfere with your religious belief or your duties and obligations in private life, or as citizens of the United States. Are you ready to assume this obligation?

He is told to hold up his right hand, put the left over his heart, and repeat the following oath as the administrator gives it out line by line:

OATH OF MEMBERSHIP.

I, ——— ———, of my own free will and accord, without reservation or purpose of evasion, and in the presence of Almighty God and the brothers of this camp here assembled, do most solemnly and sincerely promise and swear, that I will ever bear true allegiance to the government of the United States of America, that I will steadily adhere to and sustain the principles of this order, and that I will in honesty and good faith carry out its objects.

I furthermore promise and swear, that I will carefully guard and never reveal any of the secrets of this order, its pass-words, grips, signs, and countersigns; that I will not knowingly wrong this camp, a veteran soldier, or a brother of the order, or suffer it to be done by others if in my power to prevent it; that I will always aid a worthy and distressed veteran or brother to the best of my ability, without injury to myself, and that I will promptly warn such a one of any danger I may know to threaten him; that I will faithfully sustain and obey the constitution and by-laws of this camp, and all legal orders coming from proper authority, and to the best of my ability live up to all the requirements of the order.

In witness thereof, I pledge my sacred honor, and pray God to keep me true and steadfast in this, my sacred oath and obligation, as a son of a veteran.

Here we have a company of boys and young men swearing each other with all the solemnity of an appeal to Almighty God to never reveal the secrets of the order, nor its grips, signs, passwords or countersigns; to promptly warn his fellow members of any danger; and to obey all the orders which may come from the headquarters of the order. How much more than this, pray, is required of a Freemason? Both orders give an assurance that religious, private and civil duties shall not be interfered with, but give no bond for it. But they tie up the candidate with the solemn form of an oath. Nearly every objection which holds against the Freemason oath, holds against this, the savage and disgusting parts being omitted. But these are not the oath. The Son of Veteran assumes, if his oath were a true one, as much responsibility before God as the Mason; and the violation of this oath is supposed to be followed by the penalty which a just God will visit on the perjurer, whether he be Mason or what not.

But why is this not a false oath as well as a Mason's? Who gave these boys the right to swear one another to obey orders and keep secrets of which they can know nothing? These oaths are all extra-judicial, illegal and false—no more binding than the ordinary cursing of a saloon or bawdy-house. They are such as Daniel Webster said should be suppressed by law. They are such as the Word of God to the Jews, and the commandment of Christ to all men, utterly condemn. No one can take them without sin. No one can keep them and maintain an organization that requires them without sin. No Christian can patronize such an order or encourage it without incurring the sin of bidding God speed to an evil deed. 2 John 10, 11.

THE N. C. A. NATIONAL CONVENTION.

OFFICIAL CALL.

The Seventeenth Convention of the National Christian Association is hereby called to meet in the Central Congregationalist church in the city of New Orleans, Louisiana, at 7:30 P. M., February 17th, 1888. An interesting programme has been arranged, able speakers have been secured, and three sessions will be held daily, closing with the evening of Feb. 20th. Seats are free and the public are most cordially invited to attend.

REV. LEWIS JOHNSTON, Sec'y.

A WORD FOR NEW ORLEANS.

DEAR FRIENDS:—Permit me, in connection with the above notice, to add a word of exhortation. A kind Providence has watched over us and spared our beloved country from great national calamity, and the church of Christ from persecution or apostacy another year. Great evils have menaced and still threaten the unity, purity and peace of our social, civil and religious compact, but hitherto their proud waves have been stayed, until we are again called to meet in the council of the National Christian Association. Never in the history of this movement against the lodge, the saloon and the ring powers in this nation, and in favor of open methods, the Holy Sabbath, and Christ, the Supreme Ruler, has there been a more important gathering, or one giving greater promise of immediate results.

Since the last meeting in Knoxville, Tenn., there has been marked and manifest progress all along the lines. Especially is this true in the Southern part of our great Union. Reports from pastors speak of decided progress in knowledge and aversion to the secret lodge system. The formation of associations to procure information and promote investigation, the weeding out of secretists and their societies from old ecclesiastical bodies, the open and impartial fraternity insisted upon among students in older institutions, and the founding of schools in which abstinence from all secret societies is made a condition of membership, calls from all quarters for information and help in combating the secret empire—all these indicate a grand and growing work; while protests from seceders, pastors and evangelists have been frequent and in most decisive terms of condemnation. Every indication is that the harvest is ripe, awaiting the faithful reapers. The door thus opened, as well as the nervous and agitated condition of the popular mind, unite with personal obligations and considerations in an appeal to every lover of Christ, of his blood-bought church, and a free and just government, to be abundant in prayer and watchfulness, and where possible to attend the national council at New Orleans.

The location of this meeting must be regarded as a providential opportunity for many of our brethren, especially in the Southern States, to come together and encourage each other and plan for a more united and aggressive movement. Let, therefore, associations, educational institutions and churches opposed to the secret lodge system, without regard to denominational or sectional lines, appoint delegates to this body, and let those in sympathy with the objects it seeks to secure, turn their steps thither if possible, and let the prayers and offerings of those detained at home be joined with their brethren met in counsel, that a multitude may be emancipated from bondage in the Secret Empire, and a blessing come to all the land through the instrumentality of this convention.

Chicago, Dec. 22, 1887.

—Miss Sarah A. Farley of the lately opened Howe Institute, New Iberia, La., has again come North for aid to enlarge the capacities of the institution. Her success last year, and the acquaintance gained with Chicago people encourages her to hope that her stay here will not be long. Elder J. F. Browne, well known to our readers, has gone on from Berea to take charge of the Institute. The desire is to fit up dormitories for a hundred pupils from outside the town, who are unable to secure boarding places.

—Rev. B. A. Imes of Memphis,Tenn., is expected to attend the National Convention at New Orleans and speak. His church is this year independent of support from the American Missionary Association.

—Among others,responses have come from Revs. Byron Gunner and J. F. Browne of New Iberia,La., and Rev. R. N. Countee and Prof. Woodsmall of Memphis,that they will attend the National Convention.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

Washington is itself when Congress is in session. Pennsylvania avenue is now crowded with pedestrians and carriages. Every corridor of the Capitol is alive with politicians, lobbyists and sight-seers, and the hotels and boarding houses are filled from attic to basement.

The United States Senate is a perennial body and so is at work again, but the House of Representatives is not. The latter has to be entirely reorganized with each new Congress, and Speaker Carlisle does not even expect to be able to announce the committees until after the holidays. Committee making is the most perplexing problem with which the Speaker is called upon to wrestle. The difficulty is in giving each member all that he would like. It is impossible. Each would like to be chairman of a committee, and also to be assigned to a place on one of the leading committees, like the Ways and Means, and Appropriations. There are 333 Members, including the eight Territorial Delegates. There are about fifty Chairmanships, and about 700 committee places. Each member must serve on at least two committees, and the necessity—since the House is Democratic—of having a Democratic majority on each committee, makes it necessary to give a larger proportion of committee places to the Democrats than even their majority in the House justifies.

The Senate has decided to lift the veil from a mystery of twenty years. It has voted to remove the injunction of secrecy from the journals of executive sessions from 1820 to the end of the Fortieth Congress. It makes fifteen volumes of printed matter; but who would take the time, or care to peruse them at this late day? They can only be of value to the occasional student of history. Much more reasonable is the demand that the executive sessions of the Senate shall henceforth be held openly, and the injunction of secrecy be removed.

A number of the eminent divines who were in attendance of the Evangelical Alliance Conference remained over, and have occupied various pulpits in the city. The convocation was a remarkable one of active and distinguished Christian workers. Among many other subjects, it discussed thoughtfully the advantages, the necessity, and practical methods of co-operative work among the different denominations. The Alliance itself bears witness to the power for good of co-operation, in the benefit resulting from this conference to all who participated in it, and to the thousands of readers of the papers and addresses delivered by the distinguished visitors. In contending for co-operative work, the argument substantially was, that there is no division in the forces of evil; and the forces which strive for good, though exhibiting varied discipline, must unite solidly in the presence of the enemy. Jealousies and little contentions in the ranks only impair the efficiency of the Christian army, and postpone its great victory. One of the speakers made the remark that the Christian people were ready to unite in Christian work, but that the preachers themselves were keeping them apart.

Senator Blair, whose Education bill to mitigate the evils and remove the dangers of illiteracy is again hopefully at the front, has not forgotten the saloon. He presented a petition last week Monday asking that there be submitted to the several States an amendment to the Constitution prohibiting the manufacture, importation, exportation, transportation and sale of all alcoholic liquors as a beverage in the United States. He also asked for the appointment of a National commission to investigate and report upon the alcoholic liquor traffic.

Washington expects soon to see one of the greatest gatherings of women ever known. It is the International Council of Women, to meet from March 25 to April 2. Helen Gladstone, daughter of the ex-premier, will come from England with other distinguished ladies, and Italy, France and Germany are to be represented. All the activities of womanhood outside the home and for home's sake will be illustrated, and plans for future advance will be discussed. Representative white-ribbon women of the country will be there and take a prominent part in the proceedings.

—What will the Orangemen, who have been opposing Home Rule on the ground that it would be equivalent to Rome Rule, say to the efforts of Lord Salisbury's Government to secure the co-operation of the Pope in regulating the affairs of Ireland, or to the proposition in the Observer, which is understood to be Lord Salisbury's organ, that the Irish priests should be paid by the British Government so as to give them a pecuniary interest in maintaining the present order of things?—N. Y. Witness.

THE HOME.

A NEW YEAR'S HYMN.

Dear Lord, attend my faltering steps,
Throughout another year;
So weak and feeble in myself,
I fain would have thee near.

I can not know thy will for me,
But, Lord, I know thy love
Will ne'er appoint a way for me,
That does not lead above.

Sickness and pain may be my lot,
And poverty and grief;
And maybe now is hovering near,
The dark-winged angel, Death.

And yet I calmly look to thee,
This happy, glad New Year;
And sweetly give myself to thee,
Without a doubt or fear.

But that thou'lt keep me all the way,
And ever choose for me
The very best, the wisest thing,
To bring me near to thee.

For temporal things I do not ask,
But this, dear Lord, I plead:
That thou wouldst come and dwell with me,
Supplying every need.

Subdue my proud and selfish heart,
Oh, let me ever sit,
In meek humility, to learn
At Jesus's pierced feet.

My will in sweet subjection bring,
My dearest Lord, to thine,
And then, if needs be pain must come,
My smiles through tears shall shine.

In loving passiveness I yield
My sinful heart to thee,
To cleanse and consecrate and use;
Thy temple may it be.

I do not ask great things to do,
Be humble service mine;
And in my every look and word,
May Jesus's presence shine.

And thus in all my daily life,
May Christ exalted be,
That by some word or deed of mine,
Souls may be drawn to thee.

So may I walk from day to day,
Throughout this glad New Year—
Eternity always in view,
And heaven aye sweetly near. —Franc.

THOUGHTS FOR THE LAST SABBATH OF THE YEAR.

"Then shall the end come."—Matt. 24: 14.

The knell of 1886 is a monition; not only from the past, but from the future. Whether for us it sounds across the interval of many years, or of a few days, no one but God knows. It prophesies the end of all earthly things for us. A grandly ominous voice is it: the forecast echo of the voice of the mighty angel that John saw, with a rainbow about his head, his face as it were the sun, and his feet as pillars of fire; with right foot upon the sea, and his left upon the earth; in his hand a little book (of human accountability); "and he lifted up his hand to heaven, and sware by Him that liveth forever and ever . . . that there should be time no longer."—Rev. 10: 5, 6.

We are continually doing things for the last time: every day is the last day for something.

To-day may be the last opportunity of conversation with some companion. If you felt that you might be speaking to your child for the last time, what would you say? What deep undertone of honest, earnest thought would there be seen in your mirthful conversation! A teacher cried bitterly as he learned of the sudden death of one of his boys: "Oh, if I had dreamed of the possibility of this, I would have talked so differently, so plainly, last Sabbath. God forgive me!" The preacher almost every Sabbath preaches to some who hear him for the last time; be sure to put your whole heart and the whole heart of the Gospel into your words.

Avoid the delusion that opportunities of either doing or getting good have in them any prophecy of returning. They are God's gifts for the moment. It is doubtful if he ever repeats the opportunity in exactly the same form, and with the same possibility of blessing. He is too rich in resources for that. A lost opportunity is lost forever, whatever other opportunities may come. They are not given as so many probations, but as so many times of spiritual investment, each having its significance in itself.

How many as yet uncompleted things we have set our hands to, which will never be completed? Books unread in our libraries, subjects not studied out, promises of duty to self, promises of good to others, conversations broken off! What plannings, outlinings, both for thought and action, which will never be filled in! With Job we will one day cry, "I am cut off in the midst of my purposes," or pray, "Spare me that I may gather strength before I go hence and be no more." Learn to make each day as far as possible complete in itself; or, where that is not practicable, let each day's work be like the little threads of hemp that make the lengthened rope, each working in with those that are adjacent, so that life will constitute one consistent whole. The weakness of most lives is from the separation of its little pieces.

Two resolutions for the coming year:

1. I will begin to do only the most important things—take for my keynote what Saint Bernard was in the habit of saying to himself, "Bernard, ad quid venisti?"

2. I will put my whole energy into whatever I do, remembering the words of the wise man, "Whatsoever thy hand findeth to do, do it with thy might," etc.—Associate Presbyterian.

I LEAVE IT ALL TO THEE.

Another year! Lord, let me by thy side
Meet all its changes, and be thou my guide.
I leave it all to thee—the sunny day,
Or the rough winter—only be my stay;
And help me through its passing hours to be
A faithful servant in the world for thee
To occupy the time till thou shalt come
To call me up to thine eternal home,
When I shall see thy face, and like thee be
And in thy presence rest eternally.

CONSECRATION.

Among the many passages in the Old Testament whose translation is vitally improved in the New Revision is the following verse in the first Book of the Chronicles: "Who then offereth willingly to consecrate himself this day unto the Lord?" King David propounded this question to the people of Israel when he was about undertaking the noble project of rearing a magnificent temple to Jehovah. He calls for contributions of money and labor. There was to be no enforced draft of either men or money; every gift was to be spontaneous and offered willingly. It is the same thought which Paul presents when he exhorts that "whatsoever ye do, do it heartily as to the Lord." The overmastering love of Christ in the soul will make hard labors light, and unwelcome tasks agreeable, and sacrifices prompt and cheerful. "Plunged into the atmosphere of love, the dim flame of obedience will burn more brightly, like a lamp plunged into a jar of oxygen."

The very word "consecration" savors of pious cant in the estimation of some people, because they have heard it glibly used by certain sentimental Christians in a cheap and flippant fashion. Rightly felt and practiced it is the very essence of healthy, holy and happy piety. God has a sovereign right to us; in every sweet breath of his pure air, in every object of beauty our eyes behold, in every line of his precious Word, in every step of his providential care, in every heart-joy at the mercy-seat, in every promise fulfilled and grace imparted, we discover a new obligation to be the Lord's. "Ye are not your own; ye are bought with a price;" these solemn, tender words seal the claim of our crucified Master. Christ for me, and I for Christ, is the very core of honest self-consecration.

To be worth anything this must begin with and center in the heart. The whole undivided soul must be surrendered to him who died to redeem the soul. Christ will not take up with a closet or a corner. He demands the complete surrender of the will, the faculties and the affections. A hundred half-Christians cannot make a simple whole one. The more heart there is in our religion, the more joy, the more power, the more victory. Nobody succeeds in what is undertaken grudgingly; the successful men have always been, like Paul, men of one idea. "This one thing I do;" "for me to live is Christ." The paramount purpose with Isaac Newton was star-eyed Science; he waited at the posts of her doors until she taught him how to weigh the globe. Love of his art held Joshua Reynolds to his easel for twenty unbroken hours till he had caught the coveted conception on his canvas. The great rugged, Scotch soul of Livingston was already among the heathen of the dark continent before he carried his body thither for martyrdom. The more of your heart you give to Jesus the more will Jesus give you of himself.—Independent.

NOAH STEPHENS'S NEW YEAR.

Noah Stephens was a miser. The spirit of avarice, born in him, was strengthened by cultivation. From his earliest boyhood he had struggled to earn money, not to use, but to hoard. His earnings from picking berries and from odd jobs were carefully put in a tin box, and the spending money, which most boys would have used lavishly, remained untouched by him. When any of the silver pieces became tarnished, he would rub and scour them, and exult over his little property. It was his cherished dream to become a rich man, and the best energies of his life were devoted to the accumulation of wealth. At fifty years of age he was the possessor of half a million dollars, gained entirely through economy and industry, combined with fine business ability. He gave sparingly to the church of which he was a member; he paid his bills promptly and was honest in his transactions; but he knew not the meaning of the word philanthropy, for his soul was too narrow to contain any love for his fellow men. He had bank and railroad stock, government bonds, and houses in the city and country. The more he possessed, the more his greed of gain increased.

One morning, as Noah Stephens sat in his office, Mrs. Ruth Ames came in. She was an old schoolmate of Mr. Stephens, and was highly regarded by him. Mrs. Ames was a woman of culture and influence, whose precious deeds were a bright and shining light everywhere. She was a member of the Woman's Relief Society.

After a few moments' conversation, she said, smilingly: "Mr. Stephens, God has blessed you in all things; times are hard, winter is coming on, and there is a great deal of suffering in our town. You have thousands of dollars more than you can use; will you give me a little to relieve the unfortunate?"

He frowned, shut his lips tightly together, but said nothing.

"So many apply to our relief society for help," said Mrs. Ames, "that we find it difficult to meet the demands. Here is a list of cases wanting immediate aid."

She took out a paper and was about to read several names, when Mr. Stephens interrupted her: "Don't want to hear anything of that kind! People needn't come to want if they work; lazy folks must expect to go cold and hungry, and drunken, shiftless people deserve to suffer. I earned my own living from a boy; nobody ever gave me a cent. I don't believe in helping an idle class; it encourages them in greater indolence and improvidence."

Mrs. Ames looked down upon her paper. "Do listen to me," she said entreatingly. "Here is Joe Brintnell with a broken leg; his mother is sick, and his father, who was a carpenter, fell from the house he was building and was killed. Can a boy whose leg is in splints and bandages take care of himself?"

"How did he break his leg?" asked Mr. Stephens.

"He fell from a loaded wagon."

"Is David Brintnell his uncle?"

"Yes, I think so."

"Then let his uncle help him; he can do it."

Mrs. Ames read another name from her paper: "Mrs. Martin, paralyzed, aged seventy. She needs coal and groceries; an excellent woman, in great want; her religion alone sustains her."

"Let her go to the almshouse; heaven is just as near her there as anywhere," said Mr. Stephens contemptuously.

Mrs. Ames read on: "Mrs. David Lee, a widow with six children and no means. You know her—an industrious, hard-working woman. Don't you think she deserves help?"

"Well, perhaps so," returned Mr. Stephens coldly. "Let the church help her."

"Noah Stephens," said Mrs. Ames, "you and I are old friends, and that gives me the right of plain speaking. Your hair is becoming sprinkled with gray; the signs of time are on your face; a few years more, and you will be numbered with the dead. You can carry nothing with you. What will become of all the money you leave behind?"

He made no reply.

"To whom much is given much will be required," continued Mrs. Ames, in a solemn tone. "You are a member of the church, Noah Stephens, and you profess to be a follower of Christ. Think of what I have said."

Mr. Stephens spoke not, and there was a long pause.

"The light of your earthly lamp will soon go out," she continued earnestly, with eyes fixed full upon him. "Will you let it go out in darkness? Oh, I hope God will not appoint a discipline of pain and trial to bring you to your senses in order to make you see what a worthless thing your hoarded gold is, when you might comfort and bless to many. Good morning, Mr. Stephens."

She left the counting room and went her way, and Noah Stephens pursued his own thoughts. Her plain speaking was far from agreeable to him. He did not like the wholesome truths to which he had been forced to listen.

The day wore away, and when twilight was coming on, Mr. Stephens rose from his easy-chair and prepared to go home. He put on his warm overcoat, hat and gloves, and walked rapidly down the street.

It was a bitter cold night; the sidewalks were crowded with hurrying people, and the jingle of sleigh-bells sounded constantly in his ears. There was a sheet of glare ice in his path just before reaching his house, and as he went over it his foot slipped and he fell violently to the ground. He tried to rise, but sharp pains darted from his leg throughout the body. In a moment half a dozen people, who had seen the accident, were on the spot to give him assistance. Mr. Stephens grew white and dizzy from pain, and the pitying people carried him home and laid him on his bed. Dr. Howe was summoned immediately. His leg was broken, and the physician pronounced his injury a serious one. His leg was put in splints and bandages until the broken bone could unite, and he would have to lie quietly several weeks.

Poor Mr. Stephens! He was unused to suffering, and to be thrown helpless upon his bed in a moment, was a trial almost beyond his power of endurance.

One night he could not sleep. It was the last night of the year. He heard the clock strike eleven. The old year was fast going out; a new year would soon be ushered in. Noah Stephens began to think. He did not want to think; there was nothing pleasant in his reflections, but there was nothing else for him to do. He thought of Mrs. Ames's words, which had come again and again like unwelcome visitors to his ears: "Will you let the light of your earthly lamp go out in darkness? Oh, I hope God will not appoint a discipline of pain and trial to bring you to your senses, to make you see what a worthless thing your hoarded gold is, when you might comfort and bless so many."

Again and again he asked himself if he was like what Mrs. Ames had said. Was he avaricious? Was he hard-hearted? What was to become of his money? He was worth half a million of dollars; he could not take it with him, but he must account to God for its use. Hoarded money! He began to see it in the light of a dangerous thing. It might stand in the way of his eternal happiness.

"Gold, gold, gold, gold,
Bright, yellow, hard and cold."

Was he a miser? He did not like the word. There was pain in his broken limb, pain in his head, and pain in his heart. He hardly knew which caused the most suffering.

Morning came; it was New Year's day, bright and sunny. Mr. Stephens sent a messenger to ask Mrs. Ames to come to him, and to bring the list of names she had read to him. She obeyed the summons immediately, and soon sat by his bedside. Mrs. Ames kindly inquired how Mr. Stephens was, and then waited for him to speak.

After a moment's pause he said: "The plain truths you told me in my office that day, have proved a blessing to me. For one month I have not been able to take a step, and have suffered intensely. My thoughts have been busy, and daily your words have returned to my mind. I have thought it over and over, and now I see how mistaken I have been. You said you hoped God would not appoint a discipline of pain and trial for me, but you see he has; and I am thankful for it, for without this suffering and your plain speaking, I should never have realized how much good I could do with my means. I made a resolve last night to do everything I can for the sick and poor. Now that I have suffered myself, I realize that others do. Will you please read that list again, and let me help you aid them?"

Once more Mrs. Ames read from her paper the name Joe Brintnell.

"Joe Brintnell?" said Mr. Stephens. "Is he the one with the broken leg?"

"Yes," said Mrs. Ames.

"Poor fellow!" continued Mr. Stephens; "how hard it must have been for him! I have had every comfort, and it was all I could do to endure, but he must have lacked many things he needed. Here is some money for him, which I will give you to expend as you think best. You see how changed I am. Six weeks ago I should have considered my money thrown away; but now I know I could not make a better use of it."

A look of pleasure came over Mrs. Ames's face as she took the money, and Mr. Stephens continued: "You said there was a widow with six children who were in great destitution. You know best what she needs, and if you will give me a list, I will have the things sent to her immediately. I wish to keep my resolve. Mrs. Ames, you have spent your life in doing good; I have spent mine in making money. How much richer you are in the sight of God than I!"

Mrs. Ames put into his hand a paper containing several names and the necessities of each, and took her leave.

New Year's day passed rapidly away. What a happy, useful day it was to Mr. Stephens! He sent money to individuals, and donations to his church, the relief societies, the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals, Orphan Asylum, Home for the Destitute, etc.

Never before had his thoughts been turned so completely upon others. Strange to say, in caring for and blessing the unfortunate, his own physical suffering was almost forgotten. Several thousands of dollars were sent forth on errands of mercy.

During the next week Mr. Stephens received many calls from the people whom he had helped, and many expressions of thanks and gratitude fell from their lips. That memorable New Year's day was the birthday of a new and brighter life. When he recovered his health and returned to his place of business, his counting room wore a different aspect. It was no longer a place where he was to invent schemes to gain money to hoard. The worth of money lay in its use, and no man during the subsequent years of health and prosperity which followed, knew better how to spend it wisely and well than Noah Stephens. May he live to enjoy many more Happy Years!—Anna E. Wood, in Zion's Herald.

THE CHILD AND THE YEAR.

Said the Child to the youthful Year:
"What hast thou in store for me,
O giver of beautiful gifts, what cheer,
What joy dost thou bring with thee?"

"My seasons four shall bring
Their treasures: the winter's snows,
The autumn's store, and the flowers of spring,
And the summer's perfect rose.

"All these and more shall be thine,
Dear Child; but the last and best
Thyself must earn by a strife divine,
If thou wouldst be truly blest.

"Wouldst know this last, best gift?
'Tis a conscience clear and bright,
A peace of mind which the soul can lift
To an infinite delight.

"Truth, patience, courage, and love
If thou unto me canst bring,
I will set thee all earth's ills above,
O Child, and crown thee a King!"

TEMPERANCE.

REFUSING WINE WITH WASHINGTON.

In these days no well-bred person shows surprise when any one refuses wine. It is only the vulgar and unrefined who significantly lift their eyebrows or make sneering remarks because a comrade shows his temperance principles. Perhaps this has always been true. At any rate, the following clipping from the Little Christian shows that Washington was as gentlemanly as he was great. Toward the close of the Revolutionary War an officer in the army had occasion to transact some business with General Washington, and repaired to Philadelphia for that purpose. Before leaving he received an invitation to dine with the General, and, accepting, found himself in company with many distinguished guests, among whom he preserved a modest demeanor, taking but little part in the conversation. Before the close of the dinner General Washington, calling him by name, requested him to drink a glass of wine with him. "Will you have the goodness to excuse me, General?" replied the officer. "I have made it a rule never to drink wine." All eyes were instantly turned upon the young officer with surprise and indignation—mayhap a few with approval. That a person should be so unsocial and so mean never to drink wine was too bad; but that he should abstain from it on an occasion like that, and when offered to him by Washington himself, was intolerable. Washington at once saw the feeling of his guests, and promptly addressed them: "Gentlemen," said he, "our friend is right; I do not wish any of my guests to partake of anything against their inclinations; and I certainly do not wish them to violate any established principle in social intercourse with me. I honor my friend for his frankness, for his consistency in thus adhering to an established rule which could never do any of us any harm if we adopted it."—Selected.

KANSAS PROHIBITORY DECISION.

The Supreme Court of Kansas rendered a decision lately to the effect that any person the lawful and bona fide possessor of intoxicating liquor may use as he sees fit, he may drink it himself or give it away, but he cannot by any shift or device in selling or giving away lawfully evade the provisions of the statute prohibiting the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquor. They also hold that a person can not be convicted under section 16 of the prohibitory act of 1881 for keeping in his house, store, or in a wareroom thereof, intoxicating liquor for his own use or for giving away, if it is done honestly and in good faith, and not as a shift to evade the provisions of the act.

The decision was rendered by Chief Justice Horton, all the justices concurring. The case came up in the Supreme Court on an appeal from Miami county, and the decision of the lower court was reversed. It seems that a shoe dealer named Standish, of that place, had been in the habit of sending to Kansas City and purchasing beer and whisky for a number of parties, they drinking it in the back room of his store. He, however, derived no profit, direct or indirect, from the dispensation of the prohibited beverage. Notwithstanding this fact, he was indicted by the Federal Grand Jury, under section 16 of the prohibitory law of 1881, charged with keeping a place where intoxicating liquor was dispensed. He was convicted in the lower court, and the case was appealed, the result being the reversal above.—Inter Ocean.

ONE CITY'S SALOON BILL.

What do you suppose is the annual saloon bill of Brooklyn? You will hardly believe until I prove it to you. It is between sixteen and twenty millions of dollars. A sum so vast that we must needs break it up into smaller sums to get any practical idea of it. First, let me show you how I reach the result. There are a little less than 3,000 licensed saloons in our city. Now it is an under and not an over estimate to put these three thousand saloons at $15 per day for three hundred and sixty-five days in the year. Indeed, a saloon keeper to whom these figures were recently shown declares that a saloon cannot live upon an average receipt of less than $20 per day. Three thousand saloons at $15 per day make a grand total of $16,425,000 per annum. This is easily within the lines. It is more likely $20,000,000. Now, in order to get this enormous amount of money before you, I present you this table. This enormous sum of money represents the following values:

250,000 bbls. flour at $6	$ 1,500,000
220,000 tons of coal at $5	1,100,000
150,000 overcoats at $5	750,000
200,000 dress coats at $20	4,000,000
200,000 pairs pants at $5	1,000,000
600,000 pairs boots and shoes at $3	1,800,000
600,000 pairs socks at 25 cents	150,000
300,000 yards of cloth at $1	300,000
450,000 yards of flannel at 50 cents	225,000
600,000 hats and caps at 50 cents	300,000
500,000 public library books at $2	1,000,000
Build 20 school-houses at $60,000	1,200,000
Build 30 new churches at $50,000	1,500,000
Build 1 inebriate asylum	200,000
Build 100 houses for aged and infirm	100,000
Build a free museum	1,000,000
Total	$16,125,000

Now let us suppose that the city of Brooklyn should receive every year an order to manufacture the above articles of food, and build every year the number of school houses, churches, asylums, homes, museums, and furnish the stipulated number of library books, instead of the order to sell so much liquor, what would not be the added prosperity of our city?—Irish World.

Gov. St. John will begin his second lecture tour in California, January 10.

The Kentucky Court of Appeals has affirmed that drunkenness is no excuse for crime.

Los Angeles is having Sunday evening Prohibition meetings, attended by over 3,000 people.

Why are not the saloon's murders punished? Lately the jury disagrees a second time in the case of a man believed to have killed Mr. Haddock in Sioux City. On the night of the saloon's victory at Atlanta a company of drunken rioters turned on a young man named Hightower, standing at the door of his home, and asked him if he had voted wet or dry. He answered, "I was dry;" whereupon one of them hurled a stone at him, struck him in the head and killed him. A crowd saw it, and no man is arrested.

RELIGIOUS NEWS.

CHICAGO BIBLE WORK.

The Bible-Work Institute will hold a three months' term for ladies in the Bible-Work Room, Y. M. C. A. Building, 150 Madison street, Chicago, Ill., beginning January 8, 1888. The course of study will include the following subjects: Bible exposition by books; Geography of Bible lands and mission fields; Christian evidences; Church history; Inquiry-room work; Sunday-school work; Methods of work.

The instruction will be given by well-known Christian teachers of our city; among whom are Rev. E. P. Goodwin, D. D.; Prof. W. G. Craig, D. D.; Prof. Hugh Macdonald Scott, D. D.; Rev. P. S. Henson, D. D.; and Evangelist E. W. Bliss.

It is important that applications to enter this Institute be sent immediately. Ladies who wish to enter may send for a circular. The Institute will be under the supervision of the Chicago Evangelization Society, F. G. Ensign, Manager. Address, MISS E. DRYER, Bible-Work Room, 150 Madison St., Chicago, Ill.

WEEK OF PRAYER PROGRAM.

TOPICS SUGGESTED FOR EXHORTATION AND PRAYER BY THE EVANGELICAL ALLIANCE, REVISED BY S. C. KIMBALL.

Sabbath, Jan. 1.—SERMONS. "Lift up your heads, for your redemption draweth nigh."—Luke 21: 28. "The end of all things is at hand; be ye therefore sober and watch unto prayer."—1 Peter 4: 7;compare Rom. 13: 12; 1 Cor. 7: 29; Eph. 5: 16.

Monday.—THANKSGIVING. For our acceptance with God through Jesus Christ and the liberty of united access by one Spirit to the throne of Grace; for the enduring goodness of God; for answers to prayer during the past year; for the growing spirit of Christian unity; for the maintenance of peace on earth; for ever-widening fields given to the preaching of the Gospel; for souls gathered into the kingdom; and for all who have dedicated themselves to the service of Christ.—Psa. 23: 30: 66: 98:100: 103: 133: 166; 1 Sam. 2: 1–10; 1 Chr. 29: 10–15; Isa. 12: 26: 1–9; Luke 17: 11–19; Eph. 1; Rom. 12; Heb. 2:10.

Tuesday.—CONFESSION. Of vices prevalent throughout Christendom, such as drunkenness, impurity, profane language, Sabbath-breaking, and wide-spread Christless worship in secret lodges under the very shadow of our churches; of great public wrongs, such as oppressive laws, or demoralizing trades, like the opium and liquor traffics; of luxury and the wasteful use of God's gifts by some classes of society, and, among others, lawless discontent and covetousness; of hindrances to the acceptance of the Gospel by the inconsistent lives of nominal Christians, and especially ministers who preach Christ in the pulpit but ignore him in the profane worship of the secret lodge; of jealousies and sectarian rivalries among brethren;of personal unfaithfulness, imperfect consecration to God,faults of pride or temper,and the worldliness and inaction which render so many believers unfruitful.—Psa. 15: 32: 51: 70: 80: 90:130; Hosea 5: 15–6: 7; 14; Mic. 6; Neh. 1; Jer. 7: 1–16; 9: 1–9; 18: 5–17; Ezek. 14: 12–23; Hag. 1: 2–11; Dan. 9: 3–19; Luke 2: 1–18; James 4; Rom 3: 9–26; Eph. 5: 11; 1 Cor. 10: 21; Luke 10: 16; John 10:1.

Wednesday.—PRAYER FOR FAMILIES AND SCHOOLS. For the hallowing of the home in all its relationships; for the blessing of the Holy Spirit upon the efforts of parents to guide sons and daughters to Christ; for invalid members of the family; for hired help; for both teachers and taught in universities, schools and colleges; for Sabbath-schools; for Associations for young men and women; for every effort to protect the immature against temptations, and to equalize the standard of morality for both sexes.—Psa. 1: 34: 78: 1–8; 113: 119: 1–16; 127: 128: 131: 133; Deut. 6; Prov. 3: 1–26; 8: and 9; 23: 12–35; 31: 10–31; 2 Sam. 7: 18–29; Mal. 2: 11–16; Mark 9: 3–16; Matt. 18: 1–14; Eph. 5: 22–6: 9; Col. 3: 12–4: 1; Titus 2; Eccl. 11: 9–12: 7.

Thursday.—PRAYER FOR THE CHURCH OF GOD. For every branch of the one universal Church, that all may be filled with the Holy Ghost and enabled to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace; for more love and co-operation among Christians; for the removal of needless causes of division; for the better observance of the Lord's day; for greater wisdom and zeal to labor for the conversion of the ungodly, the religious education of the young, and the growth of believers; for the Spirit of Truth to guide students of His Word into a fuller understanding of it; for pastors, evangelists, and church councils; for the attainment by all the Lord's people of a higher standard of holiness and consecration to service; for a more faithful testimony against Freemasonry and other systems of false worship in Christian lands; and for the speedy coming of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ.—Psa. 46: 48: 84: 87: 122: 132; Gen. 28: 10–22; 32: 24–32; 1 Kings 8: 22–30; Isa. 54; Joel 2: 23–32; Jno. 15: 17; Eph. 1: 15–23; 2: 11–22; 3: 14–21; 4: 1–16; 1 Cor. 13; Rev. 21: 1–7.

Friday.—PRAYER FOR MISSIONS. For the quickening of a missionary spirit and for the outpouring of the Holy Ghost; for all agents in Gospel work, that they may be kept humble, devoted, and courageous; for native churches and converts, especially such as endure persecution for the Gospel's sake; for mission colleges, Bible and tract societies, and the spread of vernacular Christian literature; for the overthrow of all false religions, and for the conversion of Jews, Mohammedans, and heathen to the faith of Christ; for the complete opening up of Africa to the light, and the cessation of its slave trade, and rum trade with England and America; for a blessing on all missionary conferences to be held this year.—Psa. 2: 67: 72: 110: 126; Isa. 11: 1–9; 25: 6–9; 35: 40: 44: 55: 60; Matt. 9: 35–38; 13: 24–33; 28: 16–20; John 12: 20–32; Acts 10: 34–48; 17: 22–31; Rom. 10: 1–15.

Saturday.—PRAYER FOR NATIONS. For kings and for all that are in authority, that we may lead quiet and peaceable lives; for legislatures and judges, that laws may be wisely made and administered; for the abolition of the traffic in opium and intoxicating drinks, and the cessation of all forms of cruelty; for a pacific spirit among States; for soldiers and sailors; for emigrants and travelers; for the deliverance of the nations from all superstition; for just dealing and a Christian spirit between employers and employed; for the amelioration of the condition of the poor; for a plentiful harvest the world over; for the elevation of public morals, especially in respect of temperance and chastity; for the cultivation of art and science in a reverent and Christian spirit; for the spread among the people of a pure literature; for all philanthropic work among the suffering or degraded.—Psa. 20: 33: 47: 61: 65: 75; 82: 107: 31 to end; 144: 9–15; Prov. 31: 1–9; Jer. 5: 20–29; 18: 1–17; Ezek. 34-1–16; 47: 1–12; Rom. 13; 1 Tim. 2: 1–8; 1 Peter 2: 13–25.

Sabbath, Jan. 8.—SERMONS. "Be ye steadfast, unmovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord."—1 Cor. 15: 58.

—Pastor C. R. Hunt, of Clarence, Iowa, has begun a protracted meeting under most hopeful conditions. Eight persons had confessed penitence for sin and resolved to seek the Lord last week.

—Geo. W. Needels, of Albany, Mo., writes of a revival of great interest in his vicinity, some twenty-five accepting Christ, among them some of his own family.

—The revival interest among the churches of Geneva, Ill., has been growing until the pastors feel the need of assistance from outside their number. It has been some time since so much anxiety about the salvation of the soul has been felt by the people of that place.

—Dr. McAllister, successor of Dr. A. M. Milligan, in the Eighth Street Reformed Presbyterian church, Pittsburgh, lately preached a memorial sermon on the late Prof. J. R. W. Sloane, D. D., in the church in Allegheny City of which Dr. Sloane was long pastor. The church has begun a fund for a monument.

—Rev. J. M. Foster of Cincinnati is engaged to supply the pulpit of the Brooklyn Covenanter church for the time being. Rev. J. F. Carson, the pastor, has been obliged to cease work on account of ill health.

—A. J. Bell, the evangelist of this city,is visiting California, and the Pacific of San Francisco says he lately began revival services in the First M. E. church of that city, much religious interest having been already manifested in the congregation.

—Gen. O. O. Howard, commanding the Pacific department, has lately visited Southern California with Mr. McCoy, secretary of the San Francisco Y. M. C. A., to arouse an interest in that organization. They visited Pasadena and Los Angeles, laying the corner stone of a Y. M. C. A. building in the latter city. On the return they stopped at Fresno and held a great mass meeting.

—The Sabbath-school of the Armour Mission, Chicago, now numbers 1,400, and the evening congregations number about 1,000.

—The Rev. Jacob Freshman, pastor of the Hebrew Christian church in New York, by special invitation visited Chicago last month, preached to large audiences in various evangelical churches, and established a branch of his Hebrew-Christian work in that city. Six gentlemen, ministers and laymen, with Prof. H. M. Scott as chairman and Mr. Wm. E. Blackstone, secretary and treasurer, act as Mr. Freshman's Advisory Committee. There are, it is estimated, 40,000 Hebrews in Chicago.

—The ministerial jubilee of Rev. Horatius Bonar, D. D., of Glasgow, which was to have been celebrated this month, has been postponed on account of the venerable doctor's indisposition, until March, 1888. It will be learned with regret that Dr. Bonar has been confined to his bed for some time past.

—At a reception given to the Church Extension Committee of the Presbyterian church and others of the clergy and laity of New York by Mr. and Mrs. Elliott T. Shepard, the other evening, the present condition of the fund was discussed and aggressive measures to increase it were agreed on. The new fund was headed by two subscriptions of $10,000 each from Mr. and Mrs. Shepard, and within half an hour over $60,000 was subscribed—enough to clear off the mortgages on churches aided.

—Bishop William Taylor writes that it is impossible to secure the necessary force of carriers to transport his goods, and that he needs a traction steam-engine and wagons, a couple of ferry barges, and a steam barge, to run the eighty-eight miles of the Congo from Isangala to Manyanga. The Bishop has now working under him in Africa, on the West Coast and on the Congo, about one hundred missionaries, besides a party of twenty-six now on their way out, and constant reinforcement which he is receiving.

—A contingent of the Salvation Army on landing at Bombay lately, not only announced that they had definitely adopted Indian dress but Indian food. A native paper commenting on this, says: "They then had their first Indian dinner on rice and curry, which they declared to be the most delicious dish they had ever eaten. Our people can learn an infinite deal from the Salvationists."

—The discussion of the question of the reunion of the Northern and Southern Presbyterian churches is bringing out some plain talk. A Southern writer in a Southern Presbyterian paper says in the course of an argument in favor of union, particularly as a means of breaking down some prejudices now existing: "It is a fact that very generally in the South any man or woman coming from the North to teach or preach to the Negroes will have to bear the burden of social ostracism. It is a fact that Southern men and women can preach to and teach the Negro and experience no ostracism. Your daughter, young lady though she be, can hang in tender affection about the neck of the old black mammy and nobody think anything of it, but just catch that New England woman trying it."

—One of the most successful missionaries in Oroomiah is a blind Armenian from Harpoot, Turkey. He knows the Bible thoroughly, and riding on a miserable little donkey,which is led by a one-eyed deaf man, he goes boldly from village to village preaching the Gospel. His blindness protects him, and the people crowd to see the wonder—a blind man reading.

—The house to house visitation organized by Mr. Moody in Chicago, is being industriously carried forward. During the past six months four thousand families have been visited by lady missionaries, who have read the Bible to them and distributed religious literature, and invited them to church and their children to Sunday-school.

—Pastor Culliss, of the Baptist church, Racine, Wis., created an indignant feeling among the fashionable society circles lately by an open and severe attack on dancing. He spoke to an immense audience Sabbath evening on "Seven Popular Devils," before his regular sermon. He referred at length to the numerous printed communications of criticisms published in the daily papers and hinted at threatening letters received personally. In his own defense, he simply stated that he had been misrepresented and that his actual remarks on the evils of dancing needed no apology.

—A general assembly of clergymen representing all Protestant missions in Mexico, will be held in the City of Mexico, Jan. 31, 1888. The Methodist, Baptist, Quaker, and Episcopalian missions will be present, and addresses will be made by several bishops of the United States.

—A new M. E. hospital, founded by Mr. George I. Seny, was dedicated by appropriate services in Brooklyn last week. It will be known as the "Methodist General Hospital." Although under the supervision of the M. E. church, it will be open to Jew and Gentile, Catholic and Protestant, heathen and infidel, all on equal terms.

killed, and twenty others were wounded, some of them seriously. One report states that three of the cars rolled down a fifteen-foot embankment.

At Brookfield, Ohio, Friday night, Mr. W. M. Lakin, his wife, and two children, were sitting by a center table when a hanging-lamp fell down between them. All were seriously burned, one of the children dying within six hours.

GENERAL.

The grand jury at Hartford, Conn., Thursday night returned indictments against James S. Parsons, President; Robert E. Beecher, Secretary, and Isaac W. Hakes, a clerk of the Continental Life Insurance Company, charged with false entries and returns. Parsons is in Canada.

Owing to excessive competition, the Montauk Fire Insurance Company, of Brooklyn, has decided to discontinue business, and will reinsure its risks with the Niagara Fire Insurance Company, of New York City.

Two mortgages for $10,000,000 each were recently placed on file in the Recorder's office of Mercer county, Pennsylvania. They are on the New York and Pennsylvania Railroad Company, and given to New York parties. One occupies forty-three and the other fifty pages.

The Oklahoma Settlers' Association, organized at the headquarters of the Oklahoma boomers in Wichita, Kan., is receiving many new recruits, who are paying the $25 that is required as a membership fee. In the event that Congress fails to throw open the land for settlement next spring the boomers will move upon it en masse, take forcible possession, and resist any attempt to drive them away.

The workmen in the new opera house at Marshalltown, Iowa, found a gas-pipe bomb, with fuse attached, in an unfinished brick flue. This afternoon officers took the bomb to the outskirts of the city, placed it under the roots of a large tree and lighted the fuse. It exploded with terrific force, tearing the trees in the vicinity to shreds, and a splinter tore a hole through Sheriff McCord's overcoat. Several arrests are now expected.

FOREIGN.

Advices from Zanzibar under date of Dec. 19 state that a messenger has arrived from Central Africa who brings no direct news from Henry M. Stanley, but says it is reported in the country on the east side of Lake Nyanza that Mr. Stanley, after many privations, reached Wadelai in the early part of September. The principal difficulty he encountered was between the Mabodi country and Wadelai.

Berlin dispatches announce that advices from all points are to the effect that if war early in the spring is averted, official anticipation will be deceived and military expectation disappointed. Within the past few days it has become the settled conviction of the diplomatic circles that the Czar's pacific tendencies have been overborne by the Panslavist faction, and that he is now under the control of the war party, the leaders of which are likely to precipitate a war by some act of provocation committed without the Czar's full assent. The return of General Von Schweinitz, the German ambassador to St. Petersburg, was hoped to be signalized by a decisive turn of the tide peaceward.

The Official Messenger gives details of the recent troubles at Russian uniuersities. It says that on Dec. 15 thirteen students of the Charkoff University suddenly left their classes and went into the streets, where they met a number of pupils of the Technological and Veterinary Institutes, and began acting in a riotous manner, and smashed the university windows. On the 14th inst. the students of the Odessa University engaged in a riot, and on the 16th the Kazau University and veterinary students also indulged in riotous proceedings. All the university and technological lectures have been suspended. There is evidence that evil-disposed persons instigated the riots.

Readers ordering goods advertising in the CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE will do well to mention the paper when ordering as we have reason to believe that our advertisers treat the readers well.

LODGE NOTES.

Kentucky again comes to the front with an "oldest Mason." Collins Fitch, of Meade county, is the oldest Mason in the order in that State, having become a member of the order in 1820. He is past ninety five years of age.

Five walking delegates of the building trades' section of the Central Labor Union were arraigned in the general sessions in New York, Dec. 19, to plead to the indictment charging them with conspiracy to ruin the business of Peck & Snyder, dealers in building materials.

Stone county, Missouri, the headquarters of the Bald-knobbers, is again in a state of great excitement over a feud between the families of Ike Terry and one Wagner. At a recent meeting of the parties Wagner was killed and a friend named Garrett was mortally wounded.

The Rajah of Bulsampore granted the use of his baradari, a hall in the center of his garden, having clustering columns, Saracenic arches, and marble floors, for holding the reunion session of the Good Templar Lodge of India. Some interpret this favorably for temperance. It may be the very reverse.

J. B. Finch planned to start a weekly Good Templar sheet in this city and depended on the Prohibition movement to make it a success. His death changed the outlook and the plan has been abandoned. Dr. Oronlyateka, of London, Can., the virtual head of the order in this country, will publish a monthly instead.

Henry George is reported to have lately said: "The great order of the Knights of Labor is yet extending over new ground, but it is evidently decaying in all the places where it was once strong. The reason clearly is that it has no settled and adequate plans for the improvement of the conditions of the laboring masses other than the application of trades union principles to the masses of the unskilled. Mr. Powderly evidently feels the want, and is endeavoring in these letters to supply it. But if this first letter is an example of those to follow he will succeed only in making himself ridiculous."

The Christian's Secret OF A Happy Life.

28th THOUSAND.

Baptist Commendation.

"We are delighted with this book. It reaches to the very core of Christian experience, and is eminently experimental in its teachings. It meets the doubts and difficulties of conscientious seekers after the bread and water of life, but whose efforts result only in alternate failure and victory. The author, without claiming to be a theologian, sends out the results of a happy and rich experience to help others into a happy Christian life."—Baptist Weekly.

Presbyterian Endorsement.

"The book is so truly and reverentially devout in its spirit that it disarms criticism. It contains so much that is sound and practical, so much that, if heeded, will make our lives better, happier and more useful, that the intelligent reader who really wishes to lead a life 'hid with Christ in God' can scarcely fail to derive profit from its perusal."—Interior.

Methodist Word of Praise.

"We have not for years read a book with more light and profit. It is not a theological hook. No fort is made to change the theological views of a y one. The author has a rich experience, and tells it n a plain and delightful manner."—Christian Advocate.

United Brethren's Approval.

"We have seldom met with a more interesting volume, abounding throughout with apt illustrations; we have failed to find a dry line from title-page to finis."—Religious Telescope.

Congregational Comment.

"It contains much clear, pungent reasoning and interesting incident. It is a practical and experimental lesson taught out of God's word, and is worthy of universal circulation."—Church Union.

HOME AND HEALTH.

THE HEALTHFULNESS OF HOUSE-WORK.

American women are not a proverbially strong race. They are intelligent beyond most nationalities—that is, in greater numbers. The strong brained, executive woman who is known to public life, justly and well known for excellence in any department of science, art or literature, is exceptional everywhere, and with her, be she English, Scotch, French, American or any other race, we do not have to do when we speak of the special intelligence of the American woman.

But of the large number of women who help to make up the American people, probably the great majority of them read and think and act with more or less intelligence.

Yet the problem how to become a strong race is still unsolved, and until it is made the subject of more extensive thought and research and importance among thinking women it must stay so.

Undoubtedly climatic influence has much to do with our extreme nervous, tightly-strung temperaments. Our variableness of weather, from intensely hot to very cold, from wet to dry, from calm languor of atmosphere to high and gusty winds must produce some effect upon the physical constitution of those who are subjected to these changes. And a vast amount of good sense and knowledge is required to so adapt the clothing and modes of life to these variations as to be never caught unaware and unprepared.

As a worker, woman needs short intervals of work and then a time for rest. I am not comparing her working power with that of man. They ought not to be compared, as they frequently are, to the prejudice of women. When a certain salary is affixed to a piece of work and paid to whoever does it, irrespective of sex, women will have less cause to complain of injustice than they sometimes have at present.

But to compel, or to think a woman can work just as a man works is to expect David to wear Saul's armor. In her own way she does well enough. If all women did all they were fully capable of, notwithstanding the disability of being women and not men, in the battling force of this world, there would be a revolution of affairs at once.

But some women will utterly disregard every known hygienic law, then wonder why women can't be strong. They eat badly, they sleep too little or too much, they keep irregular hours, they work too long at one time, they take too little exercise or too much at one time, they breathe bad air, they dress too thinly, wear tight corsets, badly fitting shoes, heavy dresses, and then wonder that they are not strong.

So women can do away with all, or most of these evils at once by taking proper heed to their ways. Others cannot so readily mend their lives.

But no employment women engage in has in it more of the elements of healthful living than housework. Ordinarily speaking, it is not a matter of particular commiseration when a women is too poor to keep a servant and must do a large share of her own work. She finds in it healthful activity for both body and mind. And if her family is not unreasonably large, or she suffering from weakness which makes the actual work too much for her strength, she ought to find in it happiness and strength.

Probably the very largest number of families do their own work in America, and there is some intelligence among almost the poorest and meanest. And with our form of government it will be an evil day when this ceases to be the case.

The run of sloppy shop-work, where ill-fitting, poorly sewed clothing is gotten up at less than cost of making, will be over when women refuse to buy, wear or make such clothing, and turn to the domestic life in their own, or some one else's kitchen, in preference to doing such work at the mere pittance given for it.

Housework is the one employment among women seemingly most in disreputc, yet it is the one thing which most women can do, and do well if they will. The variety of occupation, the activity of muscle required, the regular hours usually kept and the mental acumen needed to make people comfortable, all tend to make the life of the houseworker a strong and healthful one.

Yet women don't like to do it—think life a burden if they are compelled to drudge in the kitchen, and homes and boarding houses suffer in consequence.

Would that American women as a whole might be blessed with strong common sense on this subject, and so dignify housework as to have some pride in being an adept in its useful arts, and learn to profit by its health-giving exercise.—Christian at Work.

MASON AND HAMLIN ORGANS ABROAD.

PROGRESS IN PIANOS.

[From the London Lady's World.]

"One could not spend a pleasanter morning anywhere than in the music room of the agents for these organs. There will be found all sorts and conditions of American organs—from those that can be packed in a box and conveniently carried to camp-meeting in a quiet by-street, to the famous Liszt model, which has no rival for power and beauty of tone. There is also the Queen's model, which received Her Majesty's warmest approbation. The London music room of this firm, with its comfortable lounges and old engravings, is open to all comers, and there you will meet in its precincts the most celebrated musicians of the day. Many of them come and listen with rapt attention and admiration to the brilliant improvisation of celebrated organists, who are always kind enough to play for visitors who wish to hear them. Here you will find Sir Arthur Sullivan, Sir George Grove, Maud Valerie White, Gywllym Crowe, Charles Godfrey (Horse Guards,) Bucalossi, Lawrence Kellie, and even, on some mornings, the beautiful Mary Anderson and the gifted Mrs. Kendall; but, indeed, as every one goes there, the list is endless."

Messrs. Mason & Hamlin bid fair to become as famous for their improved pianos as they have long been for their world-renowned organs. The peculiar feature of the Mason & Hamlin piano is that the strings are directly secured to the iron frame by metal fastenings, instead of being wound around iron pins set in wood as in other pianos. The results of this important improvement are claimed to be remarkable refinement and musical purity of tone, much decreased liability to get out of tune, and increased durability. A circular containing testimonials from three hundred purchasers, musicians, dealers and tuners will be sent, free, to any one addressing the manufacturers, Messrs. Mason & Hamlin, Union Square, New York City.

A NEW MAP.

Among the latest exhibitions of what it is possible to accomplish by the engraver's art is a large pocket map just issued by the St. Paul, Minneapolis & Manitoba Railway, showing the northwestern country between Chicago and the Pacific Ocean in detail. A copy will be mailed free to any address upon application to C. H. WARREN, Gen. Pass. Agent, St. Paul, Minn.

The Danger—The Laborer's Grievance—The Laborer's Foe—The Laborer's Fallacy—The Laborer's Hope—Mind and Muscle—Co-Laborers.

TIMELY TALKS ON AN IMPORTANT SUBJECT.

The Papers Say of this Book:

"It is well to remind the world of the great law of human brotherhood, but how to make the 'more general application of it?' 'Aye, there's the rub!' Our author contributes his mite in that direction, and his voice and reasoning will reach some ears and perhaps touch some understandings and move some selfish hearts that are buttoned up very closely and hedged around by over much respectability and comfortable prosperity."—Chicago Tribune.

"The writer does his work in a way remarkable alike for its directness, its common sense, its impartiality, its lucidity and its force. He has no theories to support; he deals with facts as he finds them; he fortifies his assertions by arrays of demonstrative statistics. The work is among the best of the kind if it is not the best that we have seen. While it is scarcely possible for it to be put in the hands of all our wage-workers, we wish it could be read by every one of them."—Chicago Interior.

BEREA EVANGELIST,

A monthly journal whose aim it is to advance

CHRISTIANITY

and to help break down everything that hinders its spread.

It teaches that men need to be converted to the personal Christ, and not simply to a system of truth, and that there must be implanted in them a divine life as well as a correct belief. The

EVANGELIST

seeks to show that the division of Christians into sects is a great wrong, and a very serious obstacle to the advancement of the Redeemer's kingdom, and it seeks to show Christians how they may be one in Christ, and to persuade and help them thus to unite. The

EVANGELIST.

also opposes Intemperance, Secret Societies, Worldliness and the spirit of Caste, and aims to "war a good warfare" against all wrong.

POPULAR COMMENTARIES

In the critical biblical literature of the century few books have been so unqualifiedly endorsed as

Jamieson, Fausset & Brown's Commentary

On the Old and New Testaments. It has been tried, tested and proven, during one of the most active periods ever known in biblical research. That it has not been found wanting is evident in the still unabated demand. At considerable outlay we have issued a new edition of this valuable work in clear type, attractively bound, and at a price much lower than any complete commentary ever before issued.

In Extra Fine English Cloth, sprinkled edge, the full set, (4 vols.).....$ 8.00
In Half Morocco, the full set, (4 vols.)..... 10 00

"The BEST condensed Commentary on the whole Bible is the Commentary on the Old and New Testaments, by Jamieson, Fausset & Brown. It contains notes of the choicest and richest character on all parts of the Holy Bible. It is the cream of the commentaries carefully collected by three eminent scholars. Its critical introduction to each book of Scripture, its eminently practical notes, its numerous pictorial illustrations, commend it strongly to the Sunday-school worker and to the clergyman. Then it is such a marvel of cheapness."—Rev. J. H. Vincent, D. D., in "Aids to Bible Study."

The leading clergymen and college professors of the country unite with Dr. Vincent in placing this commentary in the first rank of all biblical aids.

The Facts Stated.

HON. THURLOW WEED ON THE MORGAN ABDUCTION.

This is a sixteen page pamphlet comprising a letter written by Mr. Weed, and read at the unveiling of the monument erected to the memory of Capt. William Morgan. The frontispiece is an engraving of the monument. It is a history of the unlawful seizure and confinement of Morgan in the Canandaigua jail, his subsequent conveyance by Freemasons to Fort Niagara, and drowning in Lake Ontario. He not only subscribes his NAME to the letter, but ATTACHES HIS AFFIDAVIT to it.

In closing his letter he writes: I now look back through an interval of fifty-six years with a conscious sense of having been governed through the "Anti-Masonic excitement" by a sincere desire, first, to vindicate the violated laws of my country, and next, to arrest the great power and dangerous influences of "secret societies."

The pamphlet is well worth perusing, and is doubtless the last historical article which this great journalist and politician wrote. [Chicago, National Christian Association.] Single copy, 5 cents.

FARM NOTES.

PROTECTING WOOD FROM ROT.

A German periodical states that a means of preserving wood from rotting was accidentally discovered by Herr K. Fleischer, of Gonobitz, a few years since. The gist of the matter is that he was making a preparation of coal-tar and ashes for the purpose of driving away ground fleas and beetles from his garden. Just as he had mixed the materials together he was called away from his work, and, on returning, found that instead of tar in the ashes there was a kind of woody texture Astonished at the transformation, he tried the experiment over and over again, and invariably with the same result. Just about this time he had occasion to refloor an outdoor room, where the boards came into almost immediate contact with the ground, and took the opportunity of testing the preservative effects of this mixture by smearing the under sides of the boards with coal tar and sprinkling them liberally with ashes, a thin layer of which latter was also sifted over the ground. The procedure proved eminently successful, for the floor is still in perfectly good condition, and not in the least attacked by fungoid growth, while on all previous occasions, though laid down with equally good material, it had always required constant repair, and was generally quite rotten in less than two years.

THE METAL OF THE FUTURE.—The metal of the future is aluminium. When it is made cheap enough, which will be very soon, it will take the place of iron and tin, as well as of other valuable metals, while its alloy will be a favorite compound in all the arts. Its value consists in its whiteness, brilliancy, resistance to tarnish, strength, malleability and extraordinary lightness. It does not weigh more than glass, while it is stronger and more pliable than iron, and has the enormous advantage over the latter of not rusting—that is, it is impervious to oxygen.

PAINTING.—For painting chairs and other furniture, select any color desired, of the paint put up in small tin packages, ground in all. Take out such portion as may be needed and put in a well cleaned tin fruit can or other vessel. For almost any color but white, add about one half as much light-colored japan dryer as there is paint, and thin with turpentine so that it will spread smoothly and evenly. Use small round paint brushes of a size corresponding to the work to be done. Give one, two or three coats, as may be required, allowing each coat to dry thoroughly before putting on another. This will give a bright glossy finish. For white paint, inside work, add light copal varnish and turpentine. Linseed oil makes a fine body but requires time to dry. For inside or outside house painting use the ready mixed paints, of good quality, and stir everything up thoroughly from the bottom before using.

A CHEAP BLACK WALNUT STAIN.—A cheap, quick drying stain, for fine basswood, etc., in imitation of black walnut, is made by dissolving gum asphaltum in spirits of turpentine, about one fourth pound gum to one pint of turpentine; dissolve in a warm place, shake frequently, add a very little dry Indian red to the solution. It can be made dark or light by adding more or less turpentine. Apply with a brush, and allow it to dry thoroughly before varnishing.

VARNISHING.—Give the work two or more coats of shellac varnish, according to hardness of the wood, rub down lightly with fine sand paper, and apply one or two coats of hard oil finish, using a soft flat varnish brush. Apply just enough, so that it will not run down the woodwork in streaks.—American Agriculturist.

A most remarkable imitation of black walnut has lately been manufactured from poor pine, the quality and appearance of the article being such as to defy detection, except upon very close examination. To accomplish this, one part of walnut peel extract is mixed with six parts of water, and with this solution the wood is coated. When the material is half dry, a solution of bichromate of potash with water, is rubbed on it, and the made walnut is ready for use.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

WASHINGTON.

Hon. Seth C. Moffatt, Congressman from the Eleventh Michigan District, died in Washington Thursday morning, aged 46.

Senator Saulsbury has reintroduced his bill of last session to require that a residence of three years shall be necessary before an alien can declare his intention to become a citizen of the United States, and of two years additional before he shall have right to vote or hold office.

Senator Manderson introduced a bill granting pensions according to length of imprisonment to all Union prisoners of war confined in Southern prisons for more than sixty days.

The Chief of the Bureau of Statistics reports that the total value of the imports of merchandise into the United States for the twelve months ending Nov. 30, 1887, was $712,986 918, and the total value of exports for the same period $727,460,635.

The joint resolution introduced by Senator Hoar for the celebration of the centennial of the Constiution provides that in addition to such other celebration as may be provided for, the centennial anniversary shall be observed by the two houses of Congress, which shall meet in the House of Representatives; that the Chief Justice of the United States shall be requested to deliver an oration, and that the President and Governors of States shall be invited to be present.

TEMPERANCE.

Francis Murphy has left Chicago to undertake a new work in Pittsburgh. On the 19th he inaugurated his novel temperance crusade. The meeting was held in the iron mills of Spang, Chalfant & Co., at Ætna. Five hundred sooty workmen with shirt-bosoms wide open and sleeves rolled up, surrounded the cold-water advocate. The speech delivered was adapted to the habits of iron-workers. While he was speaking the men, with arms bared to the shoulder, stood around listening intently and applauding every sentence.

The Superior Court of Kennebec county, Maine, has declared the law making the payment of the United States special tax as a liquor-seller prima facie evidence that the party paying such tax is a saloon-keeper, and therefore a public nuisance, to be unconstitutional.

The temperance revival at Joliet, Ill., led by Wm McConnell, is gaining ground every day, hundreds being unable to gain admission to the meetings. The saloon-keepers are becoming alarmed at the loss of customers. The Chicago Tribune sent two reporters to write down and caricature the meeting.

Reports were current at Des Moines Monday that a syndicate of capitalists had been formed to purchase the State Register of that city. It is claimed that if the sale is made the policy of the paper will be changed to anti-prohibition.

The Selzer Brewery, of Sioux City, Iowa, has applied to the County Board of Commissioners to manufacture beer for medical use. Action will be taken Jan. 4 Prior to that time the Law and Order League will seek to restrain them from granting such a permit. This will involve a legal complication of interest to all brewers of the State.

The management of the Milwaukee Soldiers' Home are about to open a saloon on the grounds, and Thursday the brewers were given an opportunity to exhibit their beer and make propositions. At noon ten quarter kegs were on tap in the reception-room, and a committee of two commissioned officers and three sergeants were busy testing the fluid. No conclusion was arrived at.

PERSONAL.

The Virginia Legislature Tuesday elected John S. Barbour United States Senator, to succeed Mr. Riddleberger. Barbour received 87 votes, to 48 for Mahone.

Governor John M. Thayer, of Nebraska, has sent a letter to the Nebraska Senators in Congress protesting against the confirmation of L. Q. C. Lamar as Justice of the Supreme Court. He alleges that Lamar was a bold and defiant rebel, and is not a fit person to interpret the Constitution.

Last September, at Port Huron, Mich., John S. Flummeruelt and his wife celebrated their golden wedding. Tuesday Mrs. Flummeruelt began suit for divorce, alleging gross cruelty at divers times on the part of her spouse, who, she states, beat her in a brutal manner after the guests had departed on the night of their golden wedding anniversary.

At a meeting Monday evening the Boston branch of the National League of Colored Men adopted a resolution opposing the confirmation of Mr. Lamar as Supreme Court Justice.

Ex-Governor Murray, of Utah, has left Salt Lake City and gone to Southern California to live. Governor Murray filled the executive chair of Utah for eight years with signal ability and courage, for it required no small amount of courage to oppose the Mormons and enforce the United States statutes.

WEATHER NOTES.

A blizzard prevailed early last week in portions of Dakota, Minnesota, Iowa, Illinois, Missouri, Kansas and Colorada. The snow is unusually heavy in some western sections, and is driven by a fierce wind, making drifts in railway cuts which have blockaded trains. The thermometer is as low as 24 below zero at some points, and in Colorado as low as 51 is recorded. Railway traffic is seriously retarded, trains being reported abandoned in Dakota and Kansas. In Western Kansas, where a coal famine prevails, deaths from freezing are reported.

A chain-bound lumber raft, 560 feet long, 80 feet wide, and 38 feet high, was lost Sunday by the steamer Miranda while being towed to New York. It is believed that the raft has floated into the track of ocean steamers, any one of which would be shattered by a collision with its huge bulk, and excitement prevails in nautical circles lest a disaster should result.

The snow storm of Saturday night, Dec. 17, in Pennsylvania, caused the greatest blockade on the railroads experienced since 1872. The Lehigh Valley Road was blocked with trains from Easton to Readington. The snow was two feet deep on a level and three to five feet deep in drifts Ten coal trains were blockaded on the Susquehanna Road between Easton and Allentown. Three passenger trains, eight freight trains, and twenty coal trains were blocked on the Morris and Essex Road between Hackettstown, N. J., and Washington, N. J., from Saturday evening to Sunday noon. At Somerville the snow was six feet deep, and at Perth Amboy eight feet deep. Drifts were fifteen feet deep. The roofs of several buildings at Phillipsburgh were crushed in by the weight of snow.

ACCIDENTS, ETC.

Ed. Johnson, a colored man, living near Cincinnati, Thursday morning placed some dynamite cartridges in the oven of his stove to thaw them out. An explosion followed, nearly destroying his house, killing an 18 year old daughter, an infant 1 year old, and seriously injuring Johnson and his wife.

James Londy, his wife and three children, of Lima, Ohio, were fatally injured Thursday in a natural gas explosion, which wrecked their dwelling.

The explosion of a sawmill boiler at Tilton, Ga., resulted in the instant death of six men and the fatal wounding of two others.

At New York Miss Inez Van Zandt quarreled with her friend, Miss Fannie Sickles, and, in a spirit of revenge, cut up two canaries owned by the latter with a carving-knife. For her cruelty Miss Van Zandt was Monday sentenced to one month in the penitentiary.

At Joliet, Ill., Tuesday, the wall of a new five-story building, known as the Barber block, fell in, instantly killing William Stage, a contractor, and John Palmer, a workman. Five others were seriously injured.

At Ballston Spa, N. Y., Monday morning, S. S. Crandell, formerly a lawyer and real estate broker, shot and killed his wife, his mother-in-law, Mrs. S. S Stone, and his step-daughter, Julia Bulkley, and then blew out his own brains. The tragedy resulted from disputes over money matters and the murderer began his deadly work while the family were at the breakfast table.

A broken rail wrecked a Wisconsin Central passenger train near Fifield, Wis., early Friday morning. One man was

THE CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE,

The CYNOSURE represents the Christian movement against the Secret Lodge System; discusses fairly and fearlessly the various movements of the lodge as they appear to public view, and reveals the secret machinery of corruption in politics, courts, and social and religious circles.

There are in the United States
Some 200 different Lodges,
With 2,000 000 members,
Costing $20,000,000 yearly.

This mighty world power confronts the church and seeks to rule and ruin every Christian Reform.

No Christian Reform Movement of the day is so necessary, yet so unpopular and beset with difficulties, as that which would remove the dark pall of oaths, dark-lantern meetings, secret signs, mysterious and pagan worship about altars condemned by the Word of the Living God.

No other paper gives the best of its correspondence and editorial strength to this vitally important reform. The CYNOSURE should be your paper in addition to any other you may take.

Because it is the representative of the reform against the Lodge, with ablest arguments, biographical and historical sketches, letters from lecturers, seceders and sufferers from lodge persecution. The ablest writers on this subject from all denominations and all parts of the country contribute. Special departments for letters from our metropolitan centers, on the relation of secret orders to current events.

The CYNOSURE began its twentieth volume September 22, 1887, with features of special and popular interest.

FOR THE SOUTHERN CHURCHES.

The letters from Prof. Woodsmall and brethren Jordan and Williams from Texas and Arkansas have been read. The fruit they bear already appears, and will yet more and more be seen. Read the list of contributions on the last page. God bless the givers, and let them see the effect of their gifts and prayers among the Freedmen. Next week we hope to print the action of the Louisiana Convention, representing 70,000 Baptists. condemning the lodge. Nearly 70,000 Baptists in Texas, 114,000 in Mississippi, 110,000 in Alabama, and other scores of thousands in Tennessee and Arkansas will be ready to take the same stand against the lodge as the enemy of Christ, so soon as they can be shown its iniquity. We ought to have a score of speakers in the South. Until they can be sent, WE MUST GET THE CYNOSURE into the hands of the colored pastors. One-third the fund we ask for is raised. Let the rest come quickly.

The order of Foresters in this country, like the Good Templars, Freemasons, Odd-fellows, etc., maintains a color line, and keeps the word white in its constitution. The High Court of England, the supreme authority in the order, has, after much protestation, finally refused point blank to issue another dispensation to the order in this country until this matter is righted and the Negro admitted. The American lodges have often, for years, discussed this question, giving a day to the debate in Detroit in 1885, and next year in this city. The decision in England will result probably in the secession of the American lodges of Foresters, and a delegated meeting has been called to decide the matter. So the cause of universal brotherhood, according to the lodge, grows apace.

The Reading railway had a temporary success last week in its struggle with the Knights of Labor. Many of the men refused to obey the order to strike and the business of the road was resumed. But the bosses of the order after an all-night secret meeting carried their measure, and a general strike was ordered, which was by Tuesday obeyed by some 30,000 men engaged in the mines and on the road. Six of the company's best collieries are yet at work, but sixty-two are deserted, and the prospect of a coal famine is a probability in some parts of Pennsylvania. The managers of an immense iron industry are alarmed, for they cannot afford that their business should be paralyzed and will press their suit for an arbitration before 30,000 iron workers join the army of the idle. Business interests have their measure of value, but can suffer no loss so great as that which may be inflicted by putting a secret lodge despotism in virtual control of such an army of men.

The most important Washington news we put on this page for the sake of prominence. The temperance people of that city hope for a possibility of bringing the saloon question to an issue. Like St. George they are anxious for a fight with the dragon, and Washington will have a lively experience if they are able to make one. Mrs. Moulton, one of the leading temperance agitators of the city says of the saloon business: "What is wanted is to wipe out the whole thing at one stroke. We want Congress to pass a bill which at one stroke will sweep every drinking-place from this beautiful capitol city, the seat of government of the Republic, which should be a model of purity and propriety for all the world to copy. If Congress will pass the bill, President Cleveland will sign it, without doubt. He will not stand in the way of temperance reform. I have seen enough of him to know that. And Mrs. Cleveland, God bless her, is one of the best women in the world. She would banish the wine cup from the White House if she could, and from Washington society." Mr. Wheelock, who represents the District on the National Prohibition Committee and attended the Chicago Conference, believes the nation will have a very agreeable surprise ere long from the President, who, he has reason to believe, would like to put a heavy foot on the saloon business.

The papal jubilee, now being celebrated in Rome, will be narrowly observed by the crowned heads of Europe who have Catholic subjects; and with more reason by Americans, who need to practice more than most people the virtue of "eternal vigilance." Last Sabbath special masses were said in Catholic churches everywhere for this jubilee, and were attended with much fervor and enthusiasm. In Rome the pontifical mass, attended in St. Peter's by Leo himself, drew together a crowd of many thousands, while 48 cardinals and 238 archbishops and bishops graced the ceremony. The statue of St. Peter was clad in pontifical garments and a tiara was placed on its head. The Pope wore a tiara with a thousand pearls, and placed on his head the crown presented him by the Protestant Emperor William of Germany. The golden plate used in the ceremony was the gift of the Protestant Queen and Empress Victoria. The chalice was the gift of the King of Portugal, and the Pope's pastoral ring was from the Austrian archdukes. At these manifestations of the return of political power to the "prisoner of the Vatican," Leo was overcome, and twice fainted during the ceremony. On Tuesday, in an address in the presence of his whole court, the Pope asserted that his predecessors had been the greatest friends of Italy, and that to try to reduce the interests of his church to the "question of the laws of Italy" could only be the result of "the most deplorable blindness." The $1,000,000 given to the jubilee fund will be spent in propagating the Romish faith. To Victoria the Pope sent an autograph letter by the hand of the Duke of Norfolk, a part of its contents being, it is understood, a reply to the request for a special dispensation allowing certain English papists to join the Freemasons. Doubtless the permission is granted, though so violent an exception to the encyclicals of past years.

The result of the temperance crusade in Joliet, Ill., led by Will. J. McConnell, under the auspices of the Young Woman's Christian Temperance Union, is the organization of a temperance league, with a superintendent of prosecution, to secure evidence and prosecute all violators of existing liquor laws. Last week was the sixth of the meetings, and the revival still continues. The workingmen have joined in large numbers, for the movement has better promises than labor union, lodge or insurance society.

THE GOLDEN YEAR.

We sleep and wake and sleep, but all things move:
The sun flies forward to his brother sun;
The dark earth follows wheeled in her ellipse;
And human things, returning on themselves,
Move onward, leading up the golden year.

Ah, though the times when some new thought can bud
Are but as poets' seasons when they flower,
Yet seas that daily gain upon the shore
Have ebb and flow conditioning their march,
And slow and sure comes up the golden year.

Then wealth no more shall rest in mounded heaps,
But smit with freer light shall slowly melt
In many streams to fatten lower lands,
And light shall spread, and man be liker man
Through all the seasons of the golden year.

Fly, happy, happy sails, and bear the Press;
Fly, happy with the mission of the Cross:
Knit land to land, and blowing heavenward,
With silks, and fruits, and spices, clear of toil,
Enrich the markets of the golden year.

But we grow old. Ah! when shall all men's good
Be each man's rule, and universal peace
Lie like a shaft of light across the land,
And like a fane of beams athwart the sea,
Through all the circle of the golden year?

IN POLITICS, INFIDELS.

BY REV. R. C. WYLIE.

My recent work in the interest of National Reform has impressed me more deeply than ever with the necessity of showing the connection between politics and morality. The wicked persistency with which members in regular standing in orthodox churches, both in theory and practice, deny this connection, is sad and discouraging.

At a meeting not long since I made the statement that there are Christian men who recognize God's law as binding in their social and ecclesiastical relations, but in politics they are infidels, and recognize neither God nor moral law in the political sphere. At the conclusion of my address an elder in the church said with some warmth of feeling that that remark was personal. On inquiry I discovered that in a sense it was personal, and that he was not the only man whom it hit, though I did not know a person in the house.

A few months ago a Christian lawyer said to me that he thought ministers argued very strangely about the divorce question; that the State did not deal with the moral side of the question at all, but that it looked upon marriage only as a civil contract, and there was no use in making so much ado about the dissolving of a civil contract.

Still more recently a lawyer who is also an elder in a branch of the Presbyterian church declared that the state, as such, sustains no relation to the moral law; it has no moral character and is under no moral code; and for the state to acknowledge God and the moral law would transform it into a monster.

The fact that in those States where "high license" has become the policy of the dominant party the Prohibition vote grows very slowly or is on the decline apparently, indicates that the views quoted above are not the views of a few individuals, but that the masses yet need to be instructed on this fundamental truth of political science, viz., that Christ rules in the political sphere, and his revealed will is supreme law for nations. Many of the class referred to admit that such issues as the Sabbath question and the saloon question arise in the political sphere; but they deny that these issues arise there as moral issues. It is said that all such issues have a secular and material side as well as a moral side, and the state deals only with the secular and material side. In a recent number of the New Princeton Review Sanford H. Cobb contends that Prohibitionists have no right to make use of the moral argument in advocating a prohibitory law.

For all this subtlety of argument against morals in politics; for all this dissecting of vital, moral issues, by which one piece of an issue is assigned to the church,and another piece of the same issue to the state; and for all this ignoring of moral obligation in the sphere of politics we are indebted to the social compact theory of government. "Why do the heathen rage and the people imagine a vain thing? The kings of the earth set themselves, and the rulers take counsel together, saying, let us break their bonds asunder, and cast away their cords from us. He that sitteth in the heavens shall laugh, and the Lord shall have them in derision. Be wise now therefore, O ye kings, be instructed, ye judges of the earth. Serve the Lord with fear, and rejoice with trembling; kiss the Son lest he be angry and ye perish from the way when his wrath is kindled but a little."

Ray, Ind.

MISS WILLARD AND THE MINOR SECRET ORDERS.

BY REV. C. F. HAWLEY.

I cannot too strongly express my admiration of Miss Willard as a Christian temperance worker. As the president of the W. C. T. U. she is leading, to the battle of Christ against the rum power, a mighty host of Christ-loving and sin-hating women. No person on this continent has a more magnificent opportunity to serve Christ and her generation, according to the will of God, on a grand scale than she. And I cannot express my profound gratitude to Christ, who has, by his Spirit and providence, marshaled such a host of noble women, under such a wise and competent leader as Miss Willard, to battle for the home against the saloon.

The W. C. T. U., of which Miss Willard is the head, is an organized army of Christian women whose aim is to exalt Christ, and bring in a reign of universal righteousness. Miss Willard is not ignorant of the fact that Satan is working, through Freemasonry and its kindred orders, to supplant Christ and subvert the Gospel. She knows that there are evils in Jesuitism, Nihilism and Freemasonry. She knows that Christ is not the father and head of organized secrecy. She knows that, in a free country like ours, secret societies are not a necessity for the promotion of good objects; and she can see that good men and women ought not to employ those methods for the promotion of good objects that bad men necessarily resort to for the promotion of evil designs. She knows that those who do good should come to the light, that their deeds may be made manifest that they are wrought in God, and leave the Jesuits, and Nihilists, and American anarchists, and Freemasons, to monopolize secret society methods of work.

So, as a matter of course, Miss Willard is religiously opposed to secret societies. And she does not hesitate to express her disapproval of them. But, in her efforts to organize victory for prohibition, she has been betrayed into coquetting with the Good Templars and Knights of Labor. It is all right for her to persuade as many of the Good Templars and Knights of Labor to vote prohibition as she can. I would do that myself. It is her flattery of them, as secret organizations, to which I refer. There is so little secrecy in them, she says. She does not just like to endorse a wrong principle because it is presented in a diluted form. She has too often condemned the use of light wines, and beer, and cider, on the ground that there is a per cent of alcohol in them, and therefore they are injurious in themselves, and lead to the use of stronger drinks. So, in her unfortunate apology for these orders, she refers to the small per cent of secrecy in them, and expresses her hope that soon they will lay aside this objectionable feature altogether.

I think Miss Willard, if she was not too busy with the weighty duties of her office to examine this matter, would see that secret organizations do not grow out of their secrecy as they increase in age; but that the minor orders are simply training schools to prepare material for the greater. I cannot better illustrate the relation of the minor secret orders to the major, than by giving the experience and judgment of a little boy. In going to school, he had to pass by where a goose and her mate, with their family of goslings, grazed by the road side. The gander, jealously guarding his rising family, had mercilessly whipped the little boy with his wings. To avoid his fierce attacks, the boy had learned to climb the road fence, and go around him in the field. On one of these occasions the goslings had got through the fence into the field, and a gentleman, who was passing along the road, observed the boy busily catching the goslings and wringing their necks. Shocked at his wanton destruction of the brood, the man cried out, "Boy! what are you about there?" The boy looked up and grimly replied, "Dog on 'em; they'll be ganders, bime bye."

Freemasonry is run by a ring; and the minor orders are run by Freemasonry. The secret society system is one great wedge, that is driven by Satan between men and God. The minor secret societies are the thin edge of that wedge. Freemasony ignores Christ, and binds to sin; and yet professes to regenerate, and free from sin. Odd-fellowship, as first introduced into this country seventy years ago, was a secular society, for mutual aid in sickness, and in burying the dead. It has since adopted a deistical confession of faith, and a Christless ritual of worship, in imitation of Freemasonry, the modern mother of spiritual harlotry. And not to be outdone by Freemasonry, which assumes that men are regenerated by the observance of her pagan ceremonies, Odd-fellowship, through her great apostle, Mr. Grosh, affirms that, "What regeneration by the word of truth is in religion, initiation is in Odd-fellowship." A more cunning contrivance to build men up in their own righteousness, and make Pharisees instead of Christians, was never invented. The gosling of seventy years ago is a gander now.

The Grange, though gotten up for the honest farmers, struck the trail of Masonry and Odd-fellowship, and adopted a deistical ritual of worship; only the cunning of the serpent was seen in the fact that in the prayer to be read on funeral occasions, when the farmers who were not yet entangled in the meshes of the net of secrecy would be present, there was a recognition of Christ; while, behind the tyled doors, a deistical ritual was used.

Good Templarism is the thin edge of the wedge of secrecy. It recognizes Christ in the ritual of worship; but, by making those eligible to the office of chaplain who do not profess to have repented towards God, and to have believed on our Lord Jesus Christ, Good Templarism turns the solemn worship of God into a farce and blasphemy. God can only be approached by his sinful creatures through the mediation of Christ. But Christ will not act as mediator in behalf of those who will not repent of their sins. Good Templarism, therefore, by making impenitent sinners eligible to the office of chaplain, has in it the elements of a false worship, which God will not condone because of its formal recognition of Christ. The worship of impenitent sinners, like the "sacrifice of the wicked, is an abomination unto the Lord."

God commands repentance. The faith of the impenitent is feigned. And though they formally recognize Christ, as does the Good Templars' ritual, yet their worship is an abomination to God. But, if the edge of the wedge should be made sharp, and repentance towards God should be taught in some lodge of the future, as well as faith in our Lord Jesus Christ, there would be no warrant for adopting lodge methods for the propagation of the Gospel. The command of Jesus to proclaim his Gospel upon the "housetops," to dismiss the tyler, and throw open the doors for every creature who will to come, would be imperative.

Christ has no use for the lodge. He commands his people not to be yoked together with unbelievers, as those are, and must be, who go into the lodge, for whatever purpose.

Seeing, then, that in our free Republic there is no necessity for good men to adopt secret society methods for doing good works, why wantonly transgress the commandment of God. Is not separation from the world to Christ clearly enjoined in the Gospel? Christ's plan is to gather his people in the church. Satan would beguile them into the lodge, and yoke them with unbelievers. But, as every good object can be better promoted by open than by secret methods, why should those who have taken the yoke of Christ upon them, wantonly disregard both his example and precepts.

Be content, dear brethren, to follow Christ, and to be members of the household of faith, and of the visible church of our Lord Jesus Christ.

As we came home from our meeting in the hall, we saw through the curtains of a Fraternity (secret society) club-house window, belonging to students, a "hop" in full tilt—orchestra reeling off swift music, fairy bundles of muslin and silk, known to contain young ladies, in the arms of young men attired in the regulation dress suit. It pained me, as a friend and sister of them all. Morality has a scientific as well as a religious basis, and dancing is eminently "unscientific" in its relation to morality.—Frances E. Willard, in Union Signal.

ADDRESS BEFORE THE NEW HAMPSHIRE CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION.

BY MISS E. E. FLAGG.

The story is told that in a certain place, which shall be nameless, where the W. C. T. U. lately pitched their tents, one man was heard to ask another as he looked up at their neat sign, "What is the W.C.T.U.?" and received for answer, "I don't know. I think it must be some new kind of a military company." Now this man did not simply make an amusing blunder; he uttered unconsciously a truth which I believe the liquor sellers, smarting under the blows which the white ribbon hosts are constantly dealing their traffic,would be the last ones to deny. "The Lord gave the word; great was the company of the women who published it." This is the new version of Psalm 68:11, but the margin of our old King James's translation reads, "army;" "Great was the army of the women who published it." And this is just what we are—not a mere handful,not a forlorn hope, but drilled and organized and constantly gathering new recruits to our standard.

We are battling with a foe who has the advantage in many respects. In the first place he has possession, as the miles of grog shops in our great cities testify. In the second place he has got the sinews of war. With his yearly income of some hundred millions he can lay both the two great parties under bonds to do his bidding; he can have his paid assassins to silence with club and bullet our brave champions whom he cannot silence any other way; and when his reign is threatened at the polls he can stuff the ballot box, and have no fear of consequences. Worse than this he can stuff the voter. For in the third place he has all the nation's illiteracy and ignorance on his side, and this is a terrible power. "Against stupidity the gods themselves fight in vain," and there is no stupidity so deep and dense as that which gathers around the saloon politician,—unless it be the kind which sits quietly in comfortable homes and lets saloon politics carry the day. Our foes have said of us "that we never know when we are beaten," but, thank God! there is one thing we know thoroughly; we know who leads us, and, furthermore, we know who leads the other side; and this is a great point. To know the enemy's devices and be able to circumvent and defeat them is half the battle.

No more important problem confronts the W.C.T. U. to-day than this: how shall we press home to the heart and conscience of every working man in the nation that it is both his interest and his duty to vote for prohibition? But many who wear the white ribbon and yield to none in their loyalty to our grand National President have noticed with deepest regret her seeming disposition to court the Knights of Labor as a means to this end. Now I want to say right here that it does not alter one iota my love and reverence for Miss Willard that I believe she has made a mistake. I remember that the Rock apostle made a mistake—one so very serious that Paul felt it his duty to withstand him to his face; and when, in her burning zeal for that noble cause of which she is the anointed queen, the inspired prophetess, she forgets momentarily that God alone is our helper and seeks aid from the arm of flesh, I feel that there is need of the Pauline spirit.

What the working classes want is truth, God's truth, the truth which maketh free,not from one but from every form of bondage—the blessed, glorious Gospel liberty. To-day they are asking Pilate's old question, some sneeringly, some doubtingly, some sincerely and earnestly and we ought to be able to answer it. Shall it be by truckling to falsehood? by disguising our honest convictions? Shall the W. C. T. U. with its open Christian methods of work ally itself with the secret, dark-lantern, Christless methods of the lodge? No; a thousand times, NO. Let us set it down to the honor of the workingman that he honors truth.

John Stuart Mill in his Autobiography—one of the most remarkable books ever written—relates that upon one occasion a political opponent at some public gathering charged him with making the rather sweeping assertion that the working classes of all countries were addicted to lying, and the only difference between the Anglo-Saxon and the races of Southern Europe in this respect was that the former were ashamed of it, while the latter, like the ancient Spartans, were only ashamed of it when found out. It was a trying moment. Exeter Hall was crowded with working people who had made Stuart Mill their political candidate. But he rose up in his seat and frankly avowed before them all that he had said just those words. And what was the result. There was a perfect storm of applause through all that vast building. He stood on firmer ground in their affection and trust than he stood before. And from this incident he goes on to deduce a moral which I wish to put before the W. C. T. U. as a beacon-light while they are searching for ways and means by which to influence the laboring man to vote for prohibition: that complete straightforwardness is the best recommendation to his favor. We have fallen on the times of which Carlyle prophesied thirty years ago: "New spiritual pythons, plenty of them; enormous megatheriums, as ugly as ever were born of mud, loom huge and hideous out of the twilight future on America, and she will have her own agony and her own victory, but on other terms than she is yet quite aware of." The Hercules of Labor is struggling to-day in the coils of these spiritual pythons. It would be enough if all he had to grapple with was the greed and avarice of capital that we hear so much about; of godless corporations who would rob him of his Sabbath and reduce him to the level of the brute. But on the one side he has the saloon pressing its cup of vice and misery and degradation to his lips, and if he have strength enough to dash it to the ground, on the other he is confronted by a more subtle enemy which binds him in fetters of iron to do the will of unknown leaders; and which, if he refuses it allegiance, can take the bread out of his children's mouths and reduce him and his to beggary and starvation. Oh, he needs our help; let him see that there are reinforcements coming, that the white ribbon army is advancing to his aid. But let us go to him with no grip but that of Christian sympathy,no sign or password but that of the conquering cross, and depend upon it he will prove our noblest and strongest ally,and in our great battle against the liquor traffic and our grand new warfare for social purity

"Be like a sheathen sabre
Ready to flash out at God's command,
The chivalry of Labor."

Another problem of equally vital importance concerns our educational work among the children. In our Bands of Hope and Loyal Legions we are training the future men and women of our land to fill, and we trust more than fill,our places when we pass from the noise and heat of conflict into the eternal peace. We have to deal with material soft and plastic to our hands, which will keep forever the mould in which we shape it. Great wisdom is necssary for such a work, and it is just here that we need to hang out a few danger signals. An old negro preacher used to divide his sermon into two parts: "Fust, all de things in de text, and second,all de things not in de text; and, brederen, we'll wrastle wid de second part fust." This is just what our Good Templar friends have been doing. They have divided their subject into two parts, temperance and the things outside of temperance, the working of degrees, the learning of signs and grips and passwords; and like the old colored preacher they have wrestled with the second part first. And the trouble is they have never got through wrestling with it,and till there is a radical change in their methods it doesn't look as if they ever would. We see this tendency even in our Sunday-schools where more time and pains is often spent in drilling the children to take their part in concert exercises than is given to their legitimate work of Bible instruction. The spirit of the age, which is outward rather than inward, and makes a great deal of everything which addresses itself to the eye and ear, is partially responsible for much that is superficial and hindering rather than helpful in our modes of education,moral,secular and religious. The introduction of broom drills and performances of a similar frivolous nature into the juvenile work of the W. C. T. U. I look upon as a very neat device of the enemy. Their only use is to divert the minds of the children from what should be our one great object, that of training them to bc temperance workers. This and like errors let us avoid. Let us takc temperance for our text and then remember the classification of "all de things in de text, and all de things not in de text," and give the second part, the things which do not make for temperance and have no vital connection with temperance work, a wide berth. We may be sure that what remains will be enough to fill our hands and our hearts full.

Only let us not fall into the opposite error of leaving out things which do properly belong to the text. Vice is hydra-headed and to fight one form of it effectually we must fight it in every form. It follows then that all moral education may be broadly classed as temperance education, and it is just as much a part of the work to teach our boys and girls to hallow the Sabbath, to reverence God's name, and be pure in every word they utter and thought they think as to teach them the physiological action of alcohol on the human system. It should be a part of our work to teach them what the Bible says about the unfruitful works of darkness. Many W.C. T.U. women have not had their eyes opened to see the power behind the throne which is hindering the temperance reform in so many invisible ways. But when they do find out—and they are learning it fast, for God's Spirit is with them, the spirit of wisdom and understanding as well as of might, the spirit of knowledge and counsel as well as the fear of the Lord—then they will teach the children the sin of these secret, false worships. And the boys and girls, when they are told that Masonry is as old as Solomon's temple or the Garden of Eden, will know better. They will know that on the testimony of their own historians the first Grand Lodge met at the Apple-tree Tavern in London no longer ago than 1717. When they are told that it can't be revealed, they will know that it has been revealed; that the very oath the candidate takes says it can be. When they are told that the lodge is more benevolent than the church they will be able to do a little figuring on their own account. When they are told that Masonry teaches Christianity they will know it is a lie,—that she rejects the Corner-stone, Christ Jesus, and borrows her rites and ceremonies from the old pagan world, that worshiped on the high places and gave a cup of poison hemlock to one of the purest sages of antiquity, because he refused to bow at its secret shrines of unwritten and unspeakable abominations. And when these boys get to be men there is one thing, be assured, they won't do. They will not break the heart of some mother or wife or sister by taking their first glass of liquor in a lodge room.

There is also the danger that just as many parents have come to trust the whole matter of their children's religious instruction to theSabbath-schools, so our temperance fathers and mothers will come to trust these outside organizations to do that work of home teaching which only fathers and mothers can do.

I have been frequently asked the question, "How did you happen to take up the anti-secret work?" As the answer has a direct bearing on this especial point, I trust a few personal reminiscences will be pardoned. One of our noted leaders in the W. C. T. U. was once asked if she had ever suffered personally from the saloon that she should take up the temperance work with such zeal. The questioner betrayed an utter lack, both of fine moral perceptions, and of a true understanding of reform work. Don't we all know that it is from the happy, guarded heights of Christian homes that the angels of humanity come down to save the perishing? Florence Nightingale was safe in her quiet English home, but she could not stay there for the vision of the wounded and the dying, as they lay uncared for on fields of death in the far-away Crimea. Josephine Butler and Ellice Hopkins reach out brave, white hands of womanhood to their fallen sisters from the peaceful shelter of pure homes. And this noble white ribbon leader heard more loudly the call of God to go forth in the battle against the saloon, just because the drink curse had never touched her or hers; and so she could go as the angels go, without animosity, without personal feeling, without rancor or bitterness.

I look back on a childhood, guarded, so far as human power could do it, from the least breath of evil; but one of my earliest recollections is of standing beside my father's knee, not yet out of the borderland of infancy, while he explained to me the pictures in some juvenile temperance publication, and told me what a dreadful thing alcohol was, and how much suffering and misery it caused. How my little heart bled for the drunkard's poor children! and what righteous wrath swelled my bosom against the wicked rum-seller! My father was among the first to cast an anti-slavery vote, and though I remember but dimly that great struggle whose closing echoes were drowned out in the cannon peal of civil war, I do remember well, how he fostered my childish enthusiasm for its grand leaders, and how he always stood ready to explain its political phases to my young comprehension. My mother's kind heart and warm sympathies were always on the side of the weak and the oppressed; and the first book which she put into my hand of which I have any remembrance after the Bible and Pilgrim's Progress was Uncle Tom's Cabin. She did not say as some unwise mother's would have said, that I was too young to know about the sufferings of the slave, but she taught me to hate with my whole soul the dreadful system which made such things possible. And now that she has passed beyond the vail it is a precious privilege to me that I can pay this tribute to her dear memory.

I, of course, received no anti-secret instruction. The waters of reform in that direction had not then been stirred. When we received the Cynosure from a dear old father in Israel, and read Finney's work on Freemasony, and our eyes were opened to see what the institution really was,—a government and a religion, but a government of despots, and a religion of devils, which every true Christian and every true patriot is bound to fight, as he loves his country and as he loves his God, I was a child no longer. I was a woman. But—and here lies the point—I had breathed the atmosphere of reform from my cradle; it had been instilled into me by precept and example, that principles were the only things worth fighting for, and that for one of the least of God's eternal truths it were well worth the while to bear the loss of all things, and go forth rejoicing, even unto bonds and imprisonment and death. And when I heard the call of God to join this Gideon's band, who were battling so bravely against the lodge iniquity, I stood ready to obey it, because the way had been prepared years before. And I solemnly assert that, brought up in such a home, if I could have felt or acted otherwise it would have been a moral miracle.

And so I appeal to you, fathers and mothers, by all that you hold sacred and dear, by those precious words: God, and home, and native land, don't let Bands of Hope and Loyal Legions do your work for you. They won't do it, because they can't. Make the atmosphere of your homes an atmosphere of righteousness. Teach your children those great moral and religious principles on which all our free institutions rest. Explain to them the things they don't understand. Mothers may not find so much time to ruffle and trim their own and their children's garments, and fathers may not find so much time to read the newspapers, but it will pay—in the golden coin of eternity. Even now storms are rising in our national horizon. Carlyle's prophecy has not been fulfilled—nor half fulfilled. To-day, in the city of the Puritans, a devoted evangelist lies in jail, sentenced for a year because he has refused to humbly beg permission to preach the Gospel of the ring of rum-sellers and Romanists who rule Boston! Vile men, godless men, men who hate Christ, who trample his covenant under their feet, who will have none of his doctrines and none of his laws, are chosen to fill our highest offices. They hold the helm of our ship of state. And when the clouds gather, red-veined with the lightnings of coming woe; when the billows of God's judgments—those judgments which are like a great deep, roll over her decks, then what? Train the children. Teach our future voters that "righteousness exalteth a nation, but sin is a reproach to any people," and the catastrophe may be averted and our nation saved.

AT THE LODGE DOOR.

Rap—rap—rap!

Door-keeper.—Who is there?

Ans.—I am the lover of all mankind, the great benefactor ef the human race, who died that they might live, and I seek admission to your lodge that your members may receive the benefits I bring.

D. K.—What is your name?

Ans.—My name is Jesus Christ.

D. K.—You will wait until your request is communicated to our presiding officer, and his answer returned.

Jesus.—I am willing to wait so long as there is hope of my being admitted.

D. K. (after a pause).—Our answer to your request is this: There are many of us who do not believe you are what you claim to be; but we all believe in God and put our trust in him, and we are seeking to inculcate the great principles of virtue and morality for which we have the greatest respect. If, therefore, you are willing to come in upon this basis, you can talk as much as you please about faith in God and our duty to our neighbors, but you must be silent about your peculiar doctrines. We do not want to hear anything about the cross, or about the notion that you suffered death to atone for the sins of mankind, or that you alone can bring to man everlasting life.

Jesus.—But if I consent to be silent on these themes, how can I fulfill my great mission as the Saviour of sinners? "No man cometh to the Father but by me;" and God will not accept your homage except you render it through me, for it is his will that all men shall honor the Son even as they honor the Father. And though he offers to men the unspeakable blessing of eternal life, it is only in and through me for "I [alone] am the way,the truth and the life."

D. K.—Well, as a lodge, we entirely ignore these claims of yours; and if you should advance them in our meetings, you would only produce discord; there are proper places and times for you to speak on these themes.

Jesus.—I ask not to interfere with any other business that is right,or to monopolize the speaking,but only that I may have the privilege of using suitable opportunities to invite men to partake of the benefits of my salvation.

D. K.—You will not be permitt[illegible]to talk at all on these subjects in our lodge; and unless you consent to be silent, I must refuse you admission.

Jesus.—To refuse to admit me as your Saviour is to refuse to admit me at all, for where my salvation is ignored I cannot come; but I must warn you that by rejecting me you are rejecting him that sent me, for I am the salvation which God has provided for you. Your professed reverence for God, whilst turning from the Son of God,is an insult to the Most High, even as was the offering of fruits and flowers presented by Cain. God hath declared that without shedding of blood there is no remission of sins, and I alone am the Lamb of God which taketh away the sin of the world.

The Saviour turns sadly away from the lodge door, and as he does so, one who professes to be a follower of his comes up,but instead of following his Master he obtains admittance upon the terms which Christ himself would not consent to. He agrees to let the cross of Christ sink out of sight, and enters into a covenant of brotherhood upon the basis of a belief in a god which is not "the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ," and therefore not the true God at all, any more than is the God the Mohammedan worships. The god of the lodges is said to be the God of the Bible, but it is a false claim. The god of the lodges is a counterfeit of the true God. There is a surface resemblance, as there is between the counterfeit and the genuine coin, but it does not go below the surface. The god of the lodges requires no shedding of blood, no atonement for sin, has provided no Saviour for sinners, and no Holy Spirit to transform the moral nature; but the devotees of this false god claim that their god requires nothing from his worshipers but what every one can provide for himself; or that his righteousnes consists of nothing more than conformity to certain right rules of conduct.

True follower of Christ, follow him as he turns away from the lodge door. Go nowhere that Christ does not lead you; enter into fellowship with no company where Christ is not received. Let the refusal to admit your Master be the bar to your own entry. Be not deceived by a talk about fellowship with God. There is no fellowship with God apart from Christ. Only those have fellowship with God who can say: "Truly our fellowship is with the Father and with his Son, Jesus Christ.—Elder W. R. Young in Bible Banner.

REFORM NEWS.

BRO. HINMAN MEETS A CHRISTMAS CYCLONE.

Arkansas railroads and prairies—Members of the Marion Baptist Association—The Secretary of the N. C. A. National Convention.

PINE BLUFF, Ark., Dec. 26, 1887.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—Arkansas railroads are not all of them very reliable. I left Helena, Ark., on the 19th at 2:30 P. M. on a mixed train for Pine Bluff, by the Arkansas Midland. This road has been recently changed from narrow to standard guage, but the small iron rails have been retained. We ran about twelve miles an hour and by 6:30 we were five miles from Clarendon,the end of the road. Here we encountered a wrecked train that we could not pass. The night was dark and the mud deep, but a team took our satchels and some of us rode part of the way. The rest walked on the track and at 10:30 P. M. were in the pleasant prohibition town of Clarendon, where I found an excellent hotel kept by some Canadian people who were Christians and reformers. Next day at 12 M. I left for Pine Bluff on the St. Louis, Arkansas and Texas railroad, which is very rough and slow. Here, too, we were stopped by another wreck, which detained us several hours, so that it was night when we reached this city.

The country between Helena and this place impressed me as much superior in fertility to the east side of the Mississippi. Much of it is heavily timbered with magnificent oaks, with occasional strips of cypress and pine. Between the White and Arkansas rivers there are some fine prairies which are only sparsely settled. Southern people, and especially the Negroes, seem averse to settling on the prairies. They prefer the poorer pine lands,because of the better water, more abundant fuel and the fat pine for lights. When they move on to the prairies they are pretty sure to move back.

Pine Bluff is a bustling, growing young city. The number of wholesale liquor houses indicates a large consumption in the adjoining country as well as here. Just now there is a whirl of excitement over the Christmas holidays. The season has been fairly good and the colored people, who constitute more than two-thirds of the population of this county, are making haste to spend their part of the surplus, mostly for trifles and follies. There are, however, quite a number of colored men of wealth and character. The county has three colored members of the legislature, and they hold most of the county offices. The saloon and the lodge are the greatest obstacles to their progress. Happily, there is a waking up to these evils. I have found none of the colored pastors, and certainly there are no others, who do not oppose the liquor traffic. There is a strong and growing conviction that all forms of organized secretism are a standing obstacle and menace to the church.

One of the Baptist ministers, Rev. Geo. Robinson, is the pastor of the largest church in the city. He was once a slave, but now owns a farm of 160 acres and a pleasant home in the city. Between him and his former master there is the pleasant relation of neighbors and friends. Years ago he was made a Mason. He told me that he clung to it until he became convinced that it was "the devil's plan to supplant and destroy the church." He is a member of the Marion Association and heartily sustains its action in excluding all secretists. Other Baptist brethren, and especially Rev. Battles,have been very pronounced in their testimony against the lodge system.

None have been more earnest, persistent and successful than Rev. Lewis Johnson, who both in his school and church has not failed to give voice to the Covenanter principles in which he was educated. I preached for his people on Sabbath at 3 P.M. on the lodge system, and had the hearty approval of several who had seen much of the inside of the system. At night I preached in the M. E. church,Rev. Higgins, pastor; and though he and most of his people belong to the orders, my testimony was well received.

On the 22nd I visited the State Normal school. It has a fine building and over a hundred students. It is under the care of Prof. Corbin, an able colored principal, assisted by several colored teachers. By request I briefly addressed the students and distributed tracts.

I think this State an excellent field for reform work. I have found the people, both white and colored, more ready to hear the truth and with more of the freedom and heartiness that belongs to a new country. I have, however, been much hindered by the Christmas craze. It began on Saturday, continued all night, all day Sabbath,and at this hour,Monday night, the fireworks and explosives are still going off. The Southern fashion of drinking egg-nog seems to prevail among white and colored, church members and other sinners. How any people can think to honor the advent of the Prince of Peace by gluttony, drunkenness, and the mimicry of war it would be hard to tell! It is manifest that they have no thought of Christ, and it would be far more for his honor if the observance of the day were abolished. The Roman Catholics and Episcopalians had religious services, which were well attended; but in other churches the usual attendance was greatly diminished.

The first snow of the season fell last night and has all melted to-day. So far the winter has been very mild and there is apparently little of poverty or distress. Arkansas has in it the elements of great wealth, and is rapidly becoming one of the most important of the cotton-growing States. I hope to spend a few more days in this city and then go to Little Rock and then to Texas. The harvest is great but the laborers are few. Pray ye that the Lord may send more laborers into his harvest.

H. H. HINMAN.

A MEMORABLE REPORT FROM IOWA.

AN ARGUMENT ON THE METHODIST MINISTERS—A CHRISTIAN EX ODD-FELLOW UPON THE OLD CEREMONIES OF THE ORDER—NO CHRIST IN ODD-FELLOWSHIP.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—In my last letter I spoke of stopping for a night with James Harvey, of Pleasant Plain, Jefferson county, the treasurer of the Iowa State Christian Association. I always feel, when I am under his hospitable roof, that his household are, indeed, friends. From there, as I also wrote, I came to Richland, Keokuk county, and called upon Bro. Hiatt, a minister of the Friends' church, and after it was arranged that I should attend the Friends' meeting at Hopewell first day morning, and the meeting at Richland in the evening. We also arranged for three lectures: at Richland on Tuesday night, at Hopewell on Wednesday night, and at Woolson on Thursday night. There was a violent storm on Tuesday night, so that we directed the sexton not to open the house. But the other appointments were filled. Some of the roads were impassable, by reason of snow drifts, so the congregations were not as large as they would have been under more favorable circumstances. Aaron Stalker and Nathan Cox at Hopewell, and W. H. McCracken at Woolson, have been readers of the Cynosure. Each of them gave a donation to the State work. Some others at Woolson subscribed also.

On Saturday I went to Clay and called upon the Congregational minister. He received me very kindly, and conversed freely upon the lodge question. He thought the per cent of Congregational ministers who were entangled in the net of Masonry was small. I told him that in some conferences our Methodist brethren had been deceived by Satan, and had gone almost bodily into the lodge. But that where the true character of Masonry had been revealed by the discussion of the question, and by the dissemination of literature, in one conference three-fourths who had been Masons left the lodge; also that in one of the counties of Iowa, where light had been thrown upon the darkness of lodgery, I called upon twelve of the pastors, taking them by course, and found but one Mason, and only one Odd-fellow in the twelve. The other ten were not members of any secret society; and nine of them were radical anti-secret society men. Then I compared this, with the condition of the DesMoines Conference of the Methodist Episcopal church, twelve years ago, when 91 out of the 95 ministers who were members of that conference, were Freemasons. These men have been deceived; and having been drawn into the practice of the heathen religious ceremonies of the lodge, and led to engage in its deistical worship, they have come under the mesmeric power of Satan, and their minds are blinded; so that they do not perceive that Satan is working through the lodge system, to supplant Christ, and subvert Christianity, by an effort to make the deistical worship of the lodge the universal religion of mankind. Every one, to whom the knowledge of this great Satanic conspiracy has come, should aid in delivering these misguided brethren from the grip of the lodge power, and from the snare of Satan in which they have been taken. Surely these Masonic ministers will be filled with horror when they see that in giving their influence to the lodge they have given their influence to Satan.

The Congregational brother received the literature I gave him, and said he would give it to the leading men of his church, when he had examined it.

From Clay I went to Fairview and called upon one of the United Brethren, who is a reader of the Cynosure. A revival meeting was in progress, and so I made no move towards getting up a lecture. The brother on whom I called has been an Odd-fellow. He went clear through Odd-fellowship. He told me how they used to meet the candidate when he was ushered into the subordinate lodge, and startled him by slapping him upon both shoulders, and then give the stern command to bring forth the chains and put them upon him; and of the march around the room, and of the halt before the coffin with a human skeleton in it. To heighten the effect, the lights were turned down and two alcohol lamps were held, one at the head and the other at the foot of the coffin. The already frightened candidate was brought up blind-folded to the coffin, and the bandage suddenly removed from his eyes, and he bid to behold the skeleton, at which the disguised Odd-fellows, standing around, were pointing with their fingers. He also spoke of how the lodge transforms its votaries into the image of Satan, by becoming to them a school of falsehood. He told how the obligation to conceal what had already been revealed, operated as a snare to bring him under the power of Satan and lead him to lie.

He lived with his grandmother until after he was of age. She was a reader of the Telescope. A sermon had been delivered on Odd-fellowship, and published in the Telescope, and read by the old lady, who was horrified at the description of the Odd-fellow initiation. She appealed to her grandson to know if such things were done in the lodge. "Were you led blindfolded to an open coffin, in which was a human skeleton?" eagerly queried the grandmother.

He saw no way by which he could conceal the fact that he had been horrified in his initiation by being suddenly confronted by a grinning skeleton, only to lie. If he hesitated, and refused to answer, it would be taken for granted that he had gone through the dreadful ceremony. It would not do for him, as an Odd-fellow, to admit the truth, and so he lied to his grandmother, by denying that there was any such ceremony in the Odd-fellows initiation. He lived, however, to repent of his sin, and to confess it to the dear old saint by acknowledging the truth as a man and a Christian that he had denied as an Odd-fellow.

He said that one lodge that he attended had a vault made under the floor just deep enough to hold the skeleton, with a trap door which was carpeted to match with the carpet of the lodge room. This trap door was turned back when the candidate was to be confronted with the skeleton. He also spoke of the candidate's journey through the wilderness in the encampment degrees; the mock thunder, and the sprinkling water on the traveler in imitation of rain; and the brush and other obstacles he was made to stumble over as he was led on his journey, was described. But the crowning act was the leading the candidate over a bridge. This had an ascent of some three feet, a level place on top, and then a steep descent. The bridge was made of rollers, that would turn when stepped upon, so that the candidate was in danger, especially in his descent, of falling and breaking his back. Two men conducted the blindfolded man through the wilderness, and over this bridge, and they were charged to keep a firm hold upon him, as two men, while being initiated in Ballimore, had fallen in crossing this bridge, and injured their backs so as to become cripples for life.

His description was of Odd-fellowship as practiced in his lodge before the revision made at Toronto a few years ago. He said that, while to the candidate they talk of the lessons to be learned from these ceremonies, among themselves they speak only of the fun they have had while initiating him.

He said that at one time the Noble Grand of the Richland lodge was a member of the Disciple church of Richland. A Methodist minister had been initiated, and he noticed that there was no chaplain and no prayer in the lodge. The minister expressed his surprise that they should have no prayers, and asked for an explanation. The Noble Grand replied that he believed in the Christian religion; that he did not think it was right to ignore Christ in prayer. The ritual of Odd-fellowship would not allow them to pray in the name of Christ, and therefore he had not appointed a chaplain, for he did not think it was right to ignore Christ, as the Mediator, in prayer.

A discussion immediately arose, some claiming that it was not contrary to the principles of Odd-fellowship to pray in the name of Christ. But these parties were soon convinced of their ignorance. The deistical character of the order was proven right there in the lodge, by an appeal to the ritual itself; and those who thought that Christ might be honored and confessed in the lodge worship, were confounded. When the Methodist minister saw that Odd-fellowship was a deliberate conspiracy to supplant Christ, the one only way to God, by ignoring his mediation in the lodge worship, he proved himself a loyal disciple of Jesus by immediately arising in the lodge and making the declaration, "Then I am no longer an Odd-fellow."

So will every Methodist minister decide when he learns the truth of this matter, if he has not gone so far in this false worship as to have come completely under the mesmeric power of Satan.

I attended the revival meeting at Fairview Saturday night. Sabbath morning I went to Hopewell and preached at 11 A. M. in the Friends church. In the afternoon I went to Richland and preached at 7 P. M. in the Friends church by invitation of the pastor. On Monday night I lectured in the Friends church of Richland. At the conclusion of the lecture I distributed some reform literature, which was eagerly received, both by the middle aged, and the young. The next day I left, feeling glad that I had been permitted lovingly to preach and faithfully to defend the Gospel of the Son of God. I sent eight new subscribers to the Cynosure while at Richland.

C. F. HAWLEY.

CORRESPONDENCE.

IRISH PRESBYTERIAN AND ENGLISH PURITAN.

EDITOR CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE:—When the members of the English Parliament are being arrested and compelled to wear the prison garments, our attention is necessarily turned to Ireland, the bone of contention. A little book has been placed in my hand, "History of the Irish Presbyterian Church," by Rev. Thomas Hamilton. It gives some interesting facts. The Irish Parliament repudiated the Pope in 1537 and accepted Henry VIII. as the head of the church. The Reformation dawned. The reign of Edward VI. was brief but helpful. The bloody Mary did all she could to retard it. Queen Elizabeth favored the work. "The Plantation of Ulster" took place in 1607. The Roman Catholic earls had forsaken their estates and they were confiscated. They were divided into tracts of 1,000, 1,500, and 2,000 acres each, and given to English and Scotch settlers on condition that they would build a castle and bawn or walled enclosure and settle forty-eight able men of English and Scotch descent within four years, for the largest proportion; a brick house and bawn within two years, for the second class; and a bawn for the third. Ulster has been Protestant to this day. The three remaining provinces Leinster, Munster and Connaught are Roman Catholic.

In 1641 occurred the Irish Saint Bartholomew, when "several hundreds of thousands" were inhumanly and barbarously massacred by the Romanists. Its memory hangs like the sword of Damocles over Ireland to-day. At the battle of the Boyne July 1, 1690, King William vanquished James II. and Ireland was free. To-day there are 5,000,000 Catholics and 1,500,000 Protestants. Gladstone proposes to give Ireland a parliament and allow her to settle her own domestic affairs, the English Parliament still retaining the supremacy. According to his plan Ireland will sustain the same relation to England that New York State does to the United States. The Presbyterians in Ulster are afraid this Home Rule plan would rob them of their liberties, and hence their rejoicing when Gladstone was defeated, June 7th, 1886. But Home Rule is as certain to prevail as the sun to rise. It means the freedom of the people. The sun of civil and religious liberty has arisen never to go down again.

Last Friday's Tribune devotes almost a page and a half to the addresses at the banquet of the New York society of New Englanders celebrating the virtues of the Pilgrim Fathers. Three hundred members and guests were present. The president, Ex-Judge Horace Russell, made a jocose speech. He quoted the celebrated definition of a bore, "The man who always talks about himself when you want to talk about yourself." It is said that "he who blows his own trumpet generally plays a solo." Solos are the kind of music we like.

Rev. Joseph H. Twitchell, D.D., responded to the toast, "Forefather's Day." "Those unconscious, pathetic heroes, pulling their shallop ashore on the Cape yonder in 1620—what reverence can exceed their just merit! What praise can compass the virtue of that sublime, unconquerable manhood, by which, in the calamitous woful days that followed, not accepting deliverance, letting the Mayflower go back empty, they stayed perishing by the graves of their fallen; rather, stayed fast by the flickering flame of their living truth, and so invoked and got on their side forever the force of that great law of the universe, 'Except a corn of wheat fall into the ground and die, it abideth alone; but if it die it bringeth forth much fruit.' How richly and how speedily fruitful that seed was we know. It did not wait for any large unfolding of events on these shores to prove the might of its quickening. 'Westward the star of empire takes its way.'"

Yes, "but the first pulse of vital power from the new State moved eastward. For behold it still in its young infancy, if it can be said to have had an infancy, stretching a strong hand of help across the sea to reinforce the cause of that Commonwealth, the rise of which marks the epoch of England's new birth in liberty. The pen of New England, fertilized by freedom and marvelously prolific ere a single generation passed, was indeed the Commonwealth's nursing mother. Cromwell, Hampden, Sidney, Milton, Owen, were disciples of teachers mostly from this side the Atlantic. Professor Masson, of Edinburgh University, in his admirable Life of Milton, enumerates seventeen New England men whom he describes as 'potent' in England in that period. Numbers went to England in person; twelve of the first twenty graduates of Harvard College prior to 1646 among them; and others, not a few representing the leading families of the Colonies, who going over with their breasts full of New England milk, nourished the heart of the great enterprise; 'performed,' so Palfrey tells us, 'parts of consequence in the Parliamentary service, and afterwards in the service of the Protectorate.' It is not too much to say that on the fields of Marston Moor and Naseby, New England appeared; and that those names may fairly be written on her banners. The emigration of populations hither from Europe, great a factor as it has been in shaping the history of this continent, has not been so great a factor as the emigration of ideas the other way, and continues to be, in shaping the history of Europe, and of the mother country most of all."

Mayor Hewitt said: "In New York City we have 500,000 born in foreign lands, 500,000 born in the State of New York, and 25,000 out of New England: one New England man to ten Irishmen, nine Germans and one Englishman. If it takes ten Irishmen, nine Germans and one Englishman to support one Yankee, you will no longer want to restrict immigration, but on the contrary to increase it. You all know not only the active labor of these immigrants, but the great works which they have executed within the last ten years, and out of which has come the great prosperity which we now enjoy in this country. We don't want to restrict immigration. This country does not want to do so for one hundred years to come; but what it does want to do is to restrict the importation of immigrants who will be a burden to the country and not add to its wealth or resources. But so long as they have sound minds in sound bodies, it is impossible for any greater contribution to have been made to the resources of the country than we derive from the healthy and large immigration from other countries. But those who come here opposed to our institutions, those who come here with the idea that law is to be defied, those who come here to preach revolution, those who would travel under the red flag, are not suitable for a self-governing people. They are the enemies of order and of freedom, the poison which will circulate through any system where suffrage prevails, and it is alike the duty, the privilege, and the highest instinct of self-preservation which should induce us to put some check upon the inflow of such pernicious elements, to preserve for ourselves and for the lowest laborers who come here, the blessings of freedom which you and they will then enjoy."

Hon. Chauncey M. Depew spoke on "The Puritan in New York." He said: "The secret of Puritan success is the spirit of unrest. They had in their English homes the same comforts and opportunities as their neighbors; but they left. They had in Holland, after twelve years of residence, acquired the language and secured the industrial opportunities of all the rest of their class; but they left. They found in New England, after many years of residence, unnumbered acres of forest and farm as yet unoccupied; but they left. They became, and still are, the most beneficent of tramps. They love not, like the ordinary tramp, to live on the country, but to improve it." "The Yankee had room enough in New England, but he wanted New York. No history of our times can be successfully written which does not give a chapter to the eloquence of Henry Ward Beecher. The commanding influence of Mr. Evarts in this country and in Europe has been due, in a measure, to the opportunities which could be afforded by no other place than New York. New York is proud of her Puritans."

J. M. FOSTER.

DR. MINER'S WORD AS GOOD AS GOLD.

SO SAYS OUR BOSTON CORRESPONDENT.

EDITOR OF THE CYNOSURE:—It was with not a little surprise that your correspondent learned from Dr. Miner's letter in the Cynosure of Dec. 8th, that in the "Boston Letter" published Nov. 24th he had unconsciously done that grand old gentleman an injustice. A severe attack of sickness has prevented an earlier reply which certainly is his due. There was no intention on the part of your correspondent to infer that the doctor indorsed the Chicago anarchists, but that, in a more charitable and Christian manner than other clergymen of this city, he discussed some of the causes of anarchy; yet, since his attention has been called to the article in question, he can clearly perceive that the following paragraph, very carelessly and illy used, owing, however, to the haste in which the article was written in order to get it on to Chicago in time for publication, must have created a wrong impression, which he sincerely regrets:

"Whilst such men as Drs. James Freeman Clarke, Bartol and Davis were condemning the unfortunate bomb-throwers and indorsing the faithfulness of the courts in meting out well-deserved punishment; while these eminent clergymen were doing what they probably thought every other preacher was doing, Rev. Dr. A. A. Miner, the great whisky antagonist, was doing just the opposite."

Taken as a whole this statement was certainly an exaggeration, and failed to convey the writer's real thoughts. He certainly did not intend to imply that the doctor did not commend the action of the courts under the circumstances, but that in a more elevated range of judgment and criticism his mind went beyond the mere deeds of the culprits and the sentence passed upon them, and in similar justice and equity which the Almighty would exercise, dealt with the cause of the "manufacture of anarchists;" in fact that he struck at the root of the matter instead of the anarchist himself; that like a true explorer he sought the sources of this rushing, turbulent, anarchical stream which threatens to submerge beneath its muddy waters the social and political systems through which it flows. In this, your correspondent meant to imply the doctor differed from contemporary critics.

It was reported that many left the church, presumably because they were wholly bitter against the anarchists, and incapable of grasping the doctor's thoughts. No doubt that report was false, or exaggerated.

While your correspondent would feel badly, of course, if he should misrepresent any one, yet he is very sorry that he allowed himself, even through haste, in an ambiguous way to cast a wrong reflection upon one whom he so highly respects and admires as Dr. Miner, who most nobly espouses a cause so near his heart as the temperance, and he earnestly hopes the readers of the Cynosure, will in all confidence, fully accept his refutation as published in the Cynosure of the 8th inst., for everybody, friend and foe (the rumseller included) believes his word to be as good as gold.

Your correspondent is exceeding glad that Mr. Miner so promptly and frankly refuted the careless expressions which must have erroneously impressed your readers, and also rejoices in the opportunity for making correction, or rather explanation.

SUGGESTIONS FOR THE NATIONAL CONVENTION.

MEMPHIS, Tenn., Dec. 20, '87.

I am settled in the conviction that with the conversion of the ministry of the Gospel from the secret lodge, the church must be emancipated and the lodge fall from its respectable eminence—perhaps I should say, its "bad eminence." In discussion there is a large field to cover, but when ministers can be induced to hear and to speak, I think the core of the whole subject is touched when we press the one idea of loyalty to Christ and his church as opposed to all rivals of different character,—this and the family. There is perhaps more difficulty with dishonesty in men than with blindness or ignorance. However, we need to have patience with all.

Suppose that in the Convention a prominent place should be given to ask and answer:

1. Can a man be loyal to Christ and to the oath-bound lodge?

2. Can a man be true to his family and to the lodge?

3. Can a man be true to his own conscience and be a loyal adherent of oath-bound secrecy?

These plain tests lie on the surface of my thought always in connection with this subject. They may not add anything to the arrangement of topics, but they impress me as showing the joints in the armor of the other side, directly and very plainly.

B. A. IMES.

THE GRAND ARMY AND WAR.

CARSON CITY, Mich.

EDITOR CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE: — The specimen copy of your paper came to hand and its numerous articles were read with deep interest and to my edification. You are doing a good work, and may God hasten the day when the end you purpose accomplishing will be consummated. It does me good to read the articles of those who have liberated themselves from the iniquitous oath-bound institution, instituted by designing men and resting under the seal of the infernal powers. These are not the powers to which Paul said we should be subject, but rather an influence in the direction of making the laws of the powers that are ordained of God null and void by shielding a criminal brother so that he is not held answerable to the retributions of a broken law.

As far as experience goes with these secret societies I have had but little, yet were there no other objectionable feature about them but the secrecy, there is enough in the Word of God to condemn them. They consider the secrecy of their orders their life. This was declared in almost as many words by the editor of Farm and Home when asked by one of its readers whether it would not be better to set the candle on the bushel, or build the city on the hill. He also said its annual and grips was its protection. There is no secret society on earth but what will knowingly accept unbelievers, skeptics, etc., as members, and as illustrated by the California minister in his talk with the member of the G. A. R., the rougher element actually rules the society. Their lives are more to be felt than the more pious ones. Yet with all their protestations to make ill appear well Paul asks them plain questions which they can never answer: "What communion hath light with darkness? What part hath he that believeth with an infidel? What concord hath Christ and Belial?"

The Light is the life of the church of Christ, while darkness is the protection of the lodge. Christ is the Light and was manifest that all who believe on him might have life. The works of the Christian are the motive power of the church; they are the result of faith and for the upbuilding of mankind, while the works of the lodge are hidden in shameful security to persecute those who dare to make its works manifest. Of such Paul enjoins us to have no fellowship "for it is a shame to speak of the things done of them in secret."

As to whether the Grand Army of the Republic has symbols, initiatory rites and ceremonies, I know not, yet its acknowledged objects are to influence legislation, to secure better pensions for honorably discharged soldiers. If it be right to go to war it is equally right the survivors should also be paid, but my Bible teaches me that war is equally wrong with secret societies. Christ is the Prince of peace and came to establish a kingdom of peace, and the subjects of a peaceful kingdom are peaceful subjects. "Else would my servants fight." The whole life of Christ was one of peace. He taught peace under all circumstances, by words and examples. We can not engage in warfare without encouraging and developing the unbridled carnal lusts and passions, without making manifest the works of the flesh, such as wrath, strife, envy, etc. They that do such things cannot inherit the kingdom of God. Taking this view of things how can a man of God belong to an organization which has for one of its objects the bringing to our remembrance of bloody carnage that has never extended the borders of Zion nor exalted a nation.

Finally, let me say, "Let love be without dissimulation; abhor that which is evil; cleave to that which is good." "Bless them that persecute you; bless, and curse not." "Provide things honest in the sight of all men." Rom. 12:10, 14, 17. "Let us, therefore, follow after the things that make for peace." Rom. 14:19.

PITH AND POINT.

FROM MRS. J. W. PHELPS.

The friends of the late General Phelps, whose labors so long enriched the columns of this paper, will be glad to hear from his wife in the following, and to know that she and her son are well:

"I receive the Cynosure evey week and enjoy reading it very much. I read it very thoroughly; then most of them I send to some one else so they can have the benefit of them. I cannot tell you how great an interest my husband had in it. He said he always read every paper through three times. I think the Anti-masons have a great deal to encourage them. Are not all the labor troubles, the anarchists, etc., caused directly by secret societies? They are all branches of one and the same tree; some are in bloom, but a great many are bearing the most poisonous fruit, and so many dropping the fatal seed, and it falls where it receives good soil, making it flourish and grow."

A CONGREGATIONAL PASTOR AMONG THE FIRST SUBSCRIBERS.

I would not do without the Cynosure if I could. I have taken the paper ever since the first number, and expect to continue so long as we both live. It is the David's sling of the nineteenth century, and I hope to live long enough to see the stone from that sling sink deep into the Masonic Goliath's head. If I can take but one religious paper it will be the Cynosure. I have known and loved the senior editor too long not to appreciate the paper. It is a great help to me in every respect, elevating spiritually. Long live the Cynosure with its noble band of workers.—J. P. RICHARDS.

THE "CYNOSURE" BIOGRAPHIES.

Mrs. R. and I read the Cynosure with very much pleasure. We have never been in favor of secret societies. The biographical and narrative sketches convey the most thrilling and interesting history in my possession. —L. R. R., San Jose, Cal.

ANOTHER ORIGINAL SUBSCRIBER.

I have taken the Cynosure from the first starting of the little paper. My interest has not abated; but my days are drawing to a close, as I shall soon be eighty, and have other infirmities besides age. I feel as though I could hardly give it up as long as I can read it.—ALLAN WRIGHT, Wilton Center, Ill.

FIGHTING MONTANA MORMONS AND MASONS.

I am doing what I can here against Mormonism and secret societies in general, and against liquor. It made quite an excitement in the Sabbath-school this summer when I read from the Cynosure the discussions at the Newburgh, N. Y., Covenanter Synod on the subject of secrecy. One old woman said that paper was a counterfeit. An Odd-fellow said the men that wrote in that paper had been kicked out of some lodge. One young lawyer asked me if I had ever applied to any lodge for membership. I hope by the help of Him that reigns above to never see a lodge in this valley. I wish some fearless minister would come out here. I wrote to Bro. Reamer sometime ago to try and get a minister to come, but have not heard from him. I hope the friends of reform will all pray for our work against evil here.—S. E. FERRIS, Selish, Montana.

A BRAVE METHODIST BROTHER.

I told you that the Methodist preacher in this place was an Odd-fellow. I gave him Sawyer's sermon on Odd-fellowship. It cured him. He is now trying to have a revival on the separation doctrine, but the coldness was as thick as ice when he hit secret societies. You could almost see the chill running up and down the backs of his members. One remark—in fact the first one on the subject—was, "There are seven or eight secret orders in this place, and they are a curse." He commenced his services last Monday night, and has been preaching against church sins each night. His people act as if dazed. "But if he keeps pegging away" the crust will give way. If I could afford it I'd send him the Cynosure, but as that is out of the question at present, I'll continue to pray for him. God bless true reforms and true reformers.—J. N. Y., Custer City, Pa.

WE MUST VOTE AS WE PRAY.

Mr. Capwell is a man of sound judgment, and his letter shows that he is the right man in the right place. The American party is still in being, and should think of nothing else but acting as a party. It is true it is prohibition in sentiment. And if the Prohibition party, out of regard for the truth, and the uniting all true prohibi tionists in one body, will nominate men clean of the lodge, as a party we will vote for them. But if they nominate lodge men of any degree, we will nominate our own men.—AMERICAN PROHIBITIONIST.

BIBLE LESSON.

STUDIES IN THE NEW TESTAMENT.

LESSON III.—Jan. 15.—Jesus Walking on the Sea.—Matt. 14: 22-36.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Be of good cheer; it is I; be not afraid.—Matt. 14:27.

[Open the Bible and read the lesson.]

COMMENTS ON THE LESSON BY E. E. FLAGG.

1. The Night of Prayer. vs. 22, 23. Jesus was not only weary; he had just passed through one of the sorest temptations that can be presented to human nature. Could it have been anything else?—that storm-wind of popular acclaim, ready to waft him at once to a throne, the throne of David—his by ancestral right. He need not stoop to any corrupt intriguing, any art of the demagogue. He need only let the eager multitude, that would have forced him to accept the diadem, have their way, and it was his. He needed the healing and the rest of solitary communion with his Father. Lives that are most full of labor should be most full of prayer. Luther used to say, when in the hottest of his warfare against the papacy, that he was too busy to give less than four hours a day to devotion.

2. Christ in the Storm. vs. 24-33. Jesus had not forgotten his disciples while alone with God; and no more does he forget them now, exalted at his Father's right hand. Across the fiercest seas of trouble he walks to meet them, but he is not always recognized. He comes and takes a lamb of the flock, or perhaps an aged parent, ripe for glory, and we call it Death, the king of terrors. He comes and checks us in a career of seeming prosperity and we call it misfortune and disaster. Like the disciples, we cry out for fear. They were in the way of duty when the storm came up. The path of obedience is often the path of peril. Many are afraid to espouse an unpopular cause. They say it will injure them in reputation or in pocket, yet what matter if it does? Shall the truth be sold, and the praise of men weigh heavier in the scale of our desires than the praise of God? If all the human race acted on this principle, we should have no "goodly company of apostles," no "noble army of martyrs." Every spark of civil and religious freedom would have been smothered long ago, and the query, "Is life worth living?" would answer itself—in the negative. Across the billows of persecution, though they rise up mountain-high, Christ will come. And there will always be ardent souls like Peter, ready to walk on the water to go to Jesus, yet fainting when they see the wind boisterous. Faint Hearts are Little Faiths as well. They look at the difficulties and dangers of the way instead of Christ, and they begin to sink. In all reform work this point must be especially kept in mind,—to look to Jesus. The reforms of to day are intensely religious movements. The lodge and the saloon have reason to dread the prayer meetings of their antagonists, for it is there that the hosts of Christian men and women, who are to bring down these walls of Jericho, get their marching orders. Let loyalty to Jesus be the oil on the flame of our hatred to evil, and the fire will never go out till our nation acknowledges him in her Constitution and her laws; till she says at the ballot box, no less than in her legislative assemblies, "Of a truth thou art the Son of God."

3. Our Duty to Bring Others to Christ. vs. 34-36. The people of Genessaret scoured all the country round about for the sick that they might be cured. This was true home missionary zeal, though it only concerned the bodies of men. Diseased souls and suffering bodies are all around us. Let us bring them to the Great Physician, and tell them what he has done, what he is able to do, and what he will do, even for the faith that only touches the hem of his garment.

HANG THEM WITH THEIR OWN ROPE.

THE LODGE COMMENTS ON LODGERY.

The National Reveille is the best Sons of Veterans paper published, yet the patronage it receives from the order would not keep a poodle dog from starvation. Wake up, boys, smoke less cigars, drink less beer, and the nickels saved will soon enable you to save the required dollar.—The Comrade (G.A.R.organ). [But the S. of V. ritual obliges all these young men to join in prayer to a "Lord and Saviour," and to swear in the name of God. See Cynosure of last week.]

The Order of Sons of Veterans is modeled after that of the G. A. R., has in view substantially the same objects, and aspires to be the recognized natural successor to that grandest of all orders, the Grand Army of the Republic. Patriotism and not politics is its inspiration. Its membership is constituted of the sons of honorably discharged Union soldiers and sailors of the war of 1861-65, and their sons of succeeding generations. As the order is a military organization the requisite qualification for membership insures for the future a well drilled army of native born Americans. Cherishing the memory of their fathers' struggles for liberty and union, they will stand as a bulwark against all attempts to do violence to American institutions, come from what quarter they may.—National Reveille (Sons of Veterans organ).

What is sauce for the goose is very good victuals for the "goose's" mate: A committee of Ohio members of the Woman's Relief Corps, appointed by the National Department President, have been investigating charges against Sarah M. E. Battles, President of the Relief Corps of Ohio. One charge is that Mrs. Battles refuses to make a report to the G.A.R. department headquarters, and acts entirely independent of the G.A.R.; another is, that at the San Francisco National Encampment last summer, she hauled in the flag at her headquarters when the Ohio delegation of G.A.R. passed in the procession. Other charges are in a similar strain, the drift being that an attempt is made to make the Woman's Relief Corps independent of, instead of subsidary to the G.A.R.—Veteran's Review.

Masonic tradition attributed to Tubal Cain the invention of the Plumb, the Level and the Square. The First Great Light in Masonry attributes to him also the invention of musical instruments, and Mohammedan tradition the art of expressing the juice of the grape and making wine. Another tradition makes him the inventor of the fishing hook and line! May not this ancient Masonic worthy well be styled the patron of Masons, while they are at Refreshments? The viands form the "corn of nourishment," and the liquids the "wine of refreshment;" and may not we almost say, the harmony of sweet sounds from musical instrument and human voice divine, represent the "oil of joy?"—Keystone.

The next year the Grand Lodge of Michigan was requested to assist in laying the corner-stone of St. Paul's church, the mother Episcopal church of the West. But owing to the wild fanaticism which then prevailed in consequence of the W. Morgan affair, it was not possible to convene a quorum of members for that purpose. So St. Paul's corner-stone was not laid by the Grand Lodge, or the fraternity. Not even the great power and influence of that gallant soldier and patriot statesman, General Lewis Cass, who was Grand Master as well as Territorial Governor, was sufficient to enable him to convene a quorum of the members. The Grand Lodge was not again convened until June 2, 1841, fourteen years after. On the 17th of September, 1844 our present Grand Lodge was organized, pursuant to a resolution of the old (first) Grand Lodge, under new charters received from the Grand Lodge of New York, that body having refused to recognize the reorganization under what she termed defunct lodges of Michigan Territory.—Paper read by Dr. A. I. Sawyer, giving a sketch of Monroe Masonic Lodge, Monroe, Mich.

Readers ordering goods advertising in the CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE will do well to mention the paper when ordering as we have reason to believe that our advertisers [illegible] the readers well.

THE CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE.

PROSPECTUS FOR THE TWENTIETH YEAR.

As we turn over the leaf for another year the Cynosure would again write at the top of the new page: "Christ always; Christ only." It will more than ever be the purpose of all connected with the paper to make it a power for the coming kingdom of our Lord, before which all the systems of secret worship, mystery and iniquity of the great Babylon must fall. We would be on the CONQUEROR'S side in that day—we will stand for him now in the days of testimony and of tribulation.

THE CYNOSURE during 1888 will give the most earnest attention to the South. The National Convention at New Orleans, Feb. 17th, and the effort, which promises so much success, to put

of the paper into the hands of colored pastors gives a direction to our interests. We also hope that the National Christian Association will be able to put other workers into the Southern field.

The Minor Secret Orders, so-called, will have more respect given to their insinuating and benumbing influence. If Masonry and Odd-fellowship have felt severely the attacks upon their strongholds, they are making good all losses by training up an army of young men whose convictions are paralyzed in respect to secretism by the swarms of orders which cover their modicum of lodgery with a bait of temperance, insurance, patriotism, good fellowship, business aid, etc., etc. The Cynosure will endeavor to rouse our careless churches to see that this evil is likely to be worse than the first.

We have nearly completed arrangements for special Correspondence from the metropolitan cities in different parts of the country. Our readers may expect letters once a month, or oftener, from Boston, New York, Philadelphia, Washington, Cincinnati, New Orleans, Denver, San Francisco and Los Angeles. These letters will give graphic pictures of the earnest American life which throbs in our great cities, with especial reference to the news of the lodges in each.

The very popular Biographical Work of the Cynosure during the three years past will be continued with some features which will be especially attractive. During the last year there have appeared portraits of George B. Cheever, William H. Seward, Daniel Webster, John Brown, Charles Sumner, Charles Francis Adams, Enoch Honeywell, Bishop Hamline, Charles G. Finney, Howard Crosby, Dr. C. F. W. Walther, and Alexander Hamilton. These portraits have been accompanied with sketches which have presented facts of profoundest interest to our discussion, collated after diligent and often exhaustive search.

Letters from foreign lands we expect to be more frequent and valuable in 1888 than ever. Correspondents in England, Germany, Greece, Turkey, India, West and South Africa, China and Mexico will through our columns be in personal connection with our readers.

The Sabbath School department will contain the notes of Miss E. E. Flagg as last year. Sabbath-school workers are to be congratulated in the continuance of this arrangement. For readers of the Cynosure there are no more helpful and suggestive notes published than these, in the whole range of S. S. literature.

Best of all is the noble company of contributors and correspondents in our own land. We hardly need mention them. To keep in their company a season were —"worth ten years of common life."

We invite all friends of the past to honor themselves by remaining in this company. The Cynosure gives you a noble fellowship. You can hardly afford to forsake it. Let your name then be found on the list. Do your neighbor a good turn and get his subscription also.

J. BLANCHARD. HENRY L. KELLOGG.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, JANUARY 5, 1888.

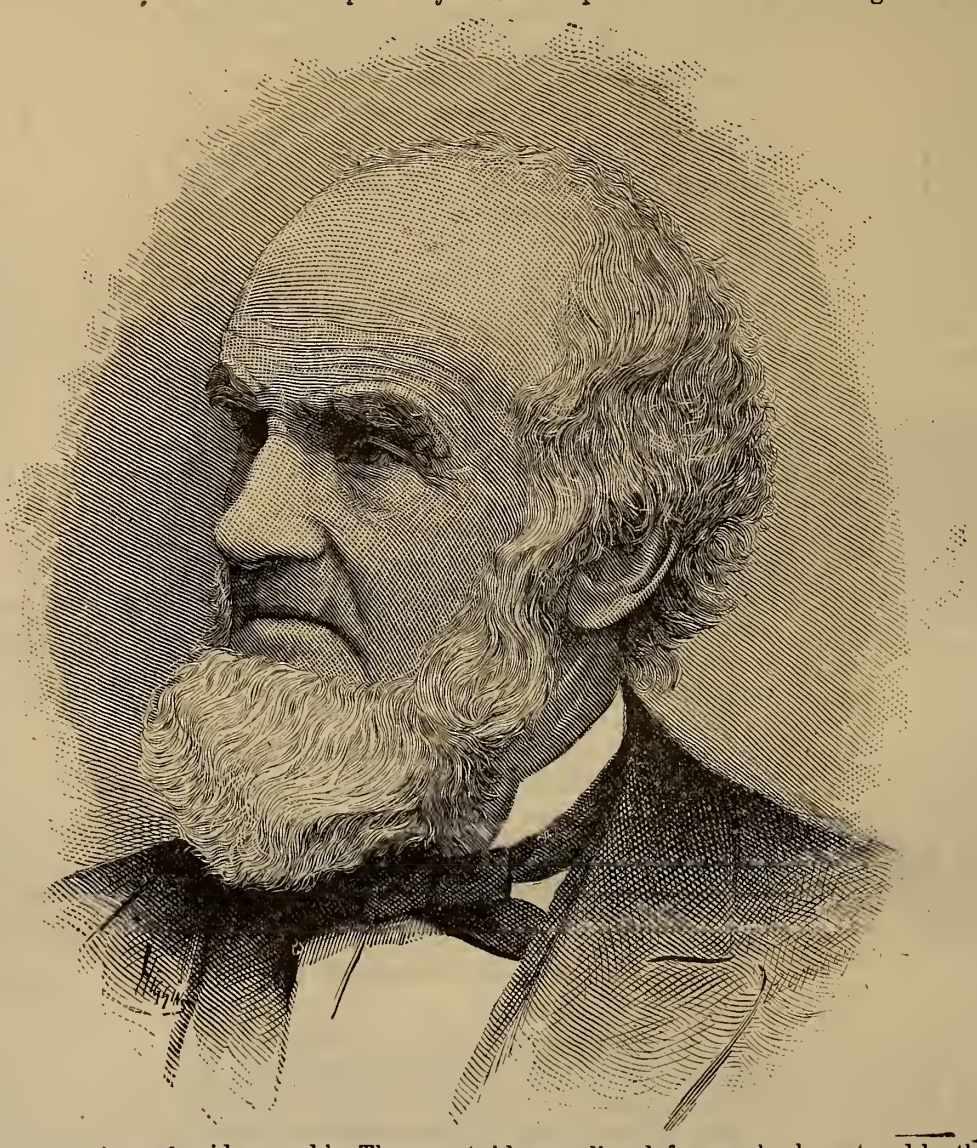
THE NEW ORLEANS CONVENTION FEBRUARY 17 TO 20, 1888.

The Publisher and Office Editor have planned a surprise for the Editor-in-chief and a New Year's gift for all the readers of the Cynosure, and present them on this page a fine portrait of PRES. J. BLANCHARD.

The papers notice the death of Secretary Powell of the American Missionary Association, at the age of 45. This death, following so soon after that of their beloved president, Hon. W. B. Washburne, is a severe stroke to this interesting and important national society. This sad intelligence reaches us too late for an extended obituary, which can be given hereafter. We presume Secretary Roy will be called to fill the vacancy made by this death. He is known and respected in the United States from coast to coast; and is an admirable successor of the first secretary, the beloved and sainted Prof. Whipple.

A correspondent writes of interesting and successful revival meetings now held in San Jose, California, by lay evangelist A. J. Bell, well remembered for similar meetings in Wheaton awhile since. If the churches can be cleansed from the leprosy of secretism, and the Holy Spirit have room by the casting out of the evil spirits which rule and ran the lodges, and then the rank and file become evangelists as after the martyrdom of Stephen, one hundred and twelve years which brings us to the opening of the seventh thousand years may easily see the earth filled with "righteousness, peace and joy in the Holy Ghost," which is the kingdom of God.

THE PROPOSED CANVASS IN VERMONT by the editor and a Vermont clergyman next spring, is strongly approved and endorsed in a letter from Mr. C. P. Potter, of Guilford Center. Both gentlemen are natives of and have a large acquaintance in the State; and both have long experience in addressing public assemblies. Both, too, understand and have been lifelong opponents of secret societies; and as Vermont cast her electoral vote solid for Wirt and Ellmaker in 1832; and as the children of those voters are yet alive, and remember the dying testimonies of their parents whose prayers went with their votes against the lodge; and, more material still, thousands still live who saw the Vermont lodges turned inside out, and their degrading and criminal secrets exposed; it is thought no spot in the United States promises a fairer hearing than the Green Mountain State. We thank Mr. Potter for his prompt action, and hope every Vermonter who hears of it will copy his example.



THE CHURCHES UNITING.

Pres. C. A. Blanchard, by invitation, addressed a Union Meeting of the three Protestant Congregations of LaSalle, Ill., against the secret lodge system, on Sabbath evening, Dec. 25. The request was conveyed by the pastor of the Baptist church but the Congregationalist and Methodist churches cordially united. The congregation was full and the attention excellent, though the discourse extended through some two hours, from the text, "Prove all things," etc.; subject: "The Relation of the Christian Church to the Secret Society System of our age." Rev. A. M. Hunt, pastor of the Baptist church, presided. Prayer and singing were had; the order was good; and thirty or forty persons, after the service, gave the speaker their thanks and benedictions for his discourse. Reply was attempted by four representatives of secret societies, but no disorder occurred.

This incident inspires gratitude to God, and good hope. A few years since but few individual churches could be found to ask a sermon against the secret orders. But here three churches unite, and those not heretofore denominationally committed against the lodge! Surely the city of LaSalle should be remembered with gratitude and thanksgiving to God.

A NEW REFORMER IN A NEW PLACE.

"Right Worshipful and Rev. John D. Vincil," in his report to the Grand Lodge of Missouri, fills some five columns in the Voice of Masonry for December. This new reformer holds this language: "No man of observation can entertain the hope that the evils of profanity and intemperance are 'not widespread.' They are 'widespread' and far reaching. That immorality among Masons is the blight of the institution to-day no man can deny."

And this vigorous writer in his long article takes note of the temperance action of Grand Lodges given in another place in this number. But what appears a marvel to us outsiders is this: All its fundamental, authoritative expounders tell us with Mackey that "Masonry is that religion in which all mankind agree;" and they name all the gods and altars but the Saviour Christ's, and Christianity, which it excludes and brands as bigoted, because it refuses to fellowship heathenism. This "bigotry" cast Daniel into the den of lions.

Now when temperance lodges have cast out the brewers, distillers and saloon-keepers, who are almost all Masons, and these men, being excommunicated and having all the secrets, form lodges of their own, how are the temperance lodges to refuse to fraternize with the liquor lodges without becoming bigots and sectarians? Mackey says, "Acacia means a Mason who by strict adherence to the principles of our order is free from sin." (See Lexicon.) But the Masons who made the "Ancient and Accepted Scottish Rite," which now rules the Masonic world, all bought and drank liquor. Did none of those Masonic saints and worthies "adhere to the principles of the order" which they themselves made and ordained? The fact is, the attempt to turn out Mason distillers and brewers will turn Masonry upside down, and stamp on its professed universal religion.

Besides, many distillers and brewers are much better religionists than Aaron Burr, who murdered Hamilton; or Benedict Arnold, who attempted the destruction of his country; or the murderers of poor Morgan, or the Masons by thousands to get his murderers clear and send them out of the country. Gentlemen reformers, the blood of murder is on your hands every time you give a grip or make a Masonic sign! For as Christ said, the blood of all the prophets down the ages was on that generation of "Morgan killers," assassins of men who told unpopular and unwelcome truth, so the blood of the man sunk at midnight in Niagara River reddens on your regalia and rusts on your jewels. And if the ghosts of the murdered dead ever come back to the scenes of secret assassination, the underground rooms beneath your monster temples in Philadelphia, New York and elsewhere, have felt their walls sweat cold drops of blood, and echoed nightly the sighs and agonies of men murdered like Pritchard, Miller, Morgan, Brownlee and others, for no crime but telling the truth concerning Masonry, and so violating oaths

"More honored in the breach than the observance," because the oaths themselves are crimes and sins which God requires should be confessed, "proclaimed on house-tops," repented of and put away.

SATAN CASTING OUT SATAN.

The Toronto Freemason says, "The Masonic fraternity have commenced in earnest to legislate on the temperance question," and gives the following facts in proof of the statement:

1. That Bro. I. A. Wills intends next July to bring forward the following motion in the Canada Grand Lodge: "No lodge shall permit to be used, in any lodge room used by them, or at the refreshment table, wines, spirits, or other intoxicating liquors."

2. It was a regulation by the ancient York Masons, as far back as 1725, that "No more persons shall be admitted as brothers in this society who shall keep a public house." (See Gould's History, vol. 4, page 107.)

3. The Grand Lodge of Illinois interdicts the use of intoxicants in lodge quarters.

4. Nebraska Grand Lodge resolved in 1885: "It is a Masonic offence for a Mason to engage in retailing or wholesaling intoxicating liquors as a beverage."

5. In Oregon, in 1885, the Grand Master suspended a Worshipful Master for being engaged in the liquor traffic. He abandoned the traffic and was promptly restored by the G. M. The same year the Oregon Grand Lodge resolved: "That the keeping of a liquor saloon, or attending bar in the same, shall be sufficient ground for suspending Masons engaged therein."

6. Wyoming Grand Lodge in 1884 enacted that "Constituent lodges are hereby prohibited from admitting to membership any person engaged in the manufacture or importation of any spirituous or malt liquors as a beverage."

7. Similar resolutions were adopted by Colorado Grand Lodge in 1886. Washington Territory in 1885, Missouri in 1886, and Kentucky in 1886, resolved "that selling intoxicants by the drink, be decreed a Masonic offense, punishable as other offences."

The ground of the above action is that saloon-keeping and liquor-selling is become disreputable and injures the craft, diminishes the "dues," induces demits and indicates the near triumph of the prohibition cause. But the presumption is that few or no attempts will be made to enforce the above decrees. But if enforced to any considerable extent, there will be temperance lodges and liquor lodges, and the members of both classes will secretly fraternize as before. In 1877, the Grand Orient of France erased from their ritual "the existence of God and the immortality of man." The Grand Orient and its dependences, and all who acknowledged allegiance to them, were promptly expelled from fellowship by the Grand Lodges of Ireland, England and many in the United States. But French Masons are still fellowshiped as before.

STODDARD–STEELE.—The earnest young agent of the Ohio State Association has found a wife from the Lord. He married at Cedarville, Ohio, on Thursday last, Miss Agnes E. Steele of that place. Next day the young people came on this city and to Secretary Stoddard's home in Wheaton, where one of the pleasantest of receptions was held on Monday evening. Mrs. Stoddard is a very estimable young woman, a Covenanter by religious education and profession. She was baptized by the late Dr. Sterrett of precious memory, and was a member of Dr. Milligan's church in Pittsburgh. She will be truly a help meet for Bro. Stoddard. They return to Columbus in a few days, will begin housekeeping and take up the reform work together, one among the churches of the State, the other with prayer and good cheer from the home altar. The Ohio friends are to be congratulated on this accession to their working force, and with us they will call down a thousand blessings upon this happy pair.

—Elder Rufus Smith is spending the winter at his home in Maryville, Mo., laying plans for general missionary work.

—Bro. Hinman's Christmas experience at Pine Bluff so moved his spirit that he sat down and wrote an able argument upon the day and its de-Christianizing character. If it does not appear soon in our columns, it will be because we hope its convincing presentation of the case will have a deeper effect some time later in the year.

—The Illinois State Executive Committee met with Mrs. E. A. Cook, on Washington Boulevard, in this city, Friday evening, There was great encouragement in the letters received from various parts of the State. The Committee had the pleasure of meeting Rev. Mr. Hunt, of LaSalle, Ill., who has made a proposition about engaging in the lecture work.

—The Baptist church at Cedar Springs, Michigan, is opposed to the lodges, and is reported as having maintained this position from its organization. The good people have not, however, so carefully guarded their testimony as they should, and a Freemason named Islip, taking advantage of a quiet hour, came in "unawares" (See Gal. 2: 4), and so concealed his true character that he was not discovered as a Mason until he made an address at a Masonic installation. The brethren deplore their lack of vigilance, but it does not appear that the Freemason has any scruples about his part of the affair.

THE N. C. A. NATIONAL CONVENTION.

OFFICIAL CALL.

The Seventeenth Convention of the National Christian Association is hereby called to meet in the Central Congregationalist church in the city of New Orleans, Louisiana, at 7:30 P. M., February 17th, 1888. An interesting programme has been arranged, able speakers have been secured, and three sessions will be held daily, closing with the evening of Feb: 20th. Seats are free and the public are most cordially invited to attend.

REV. J. S. MCCULLOCH, D.D., Pres.
REV. LEWIS JOHNSTON, Sec'y.

N. C. A. BOARD MEETING.

There will be a meeting of the N. C. A. Board of Directors at No. 221 W. Madison St., Chicago, at 10 o'clock A. M, Saturday, January 7th. The business of this meeting is highly important before our General Agent leaves for New Orleans, and it is desirable that there should be a full attendance. L. N. STRATTON, Pres.

PERSONAL MENTION.

—Rev. T. P. Robb, of Linton, Iowa, is enjoying much improved health, and is doing full pastoral duty.

—Dea. R. E. Adams, a former resident of Wheaton, died at his home in College Springs, Iowa, last Friday. He was a good man and faithful in his testimony for Christ against secretism.

—Rev. A. W. Parry, agent of Evansville Seminary, Wisconsin, has been released from class-room duties by the recovery of Prof. Coleman, principal of the seminary. He has raised already $4,500 for the institution.

—Miss Eva M. Shoutz returned recently to her home in Centerville, Iowa, from Chicago, where she was under treatment for sore eyes. She hopes soon to be able to engage in W. C. T. U. work, in which she is much interested.

—Bro. M. A. Gault has been giving lectures during the last two months in southern Iowa under the auspices of the W. C. T. U. He says that Mrs. Mary S. Littell, of Allenton, Iowa, president of the Eighth District, who has managed his campaigns, is in deep sympathy with the anti-secret reform.

A WORD FOR NEW ORLEANS.

"Know this, also, that in the last days perilous times shall come."—2 Tim. 3:1.

"Be ye, therefore, ready, also, for the Son of man cometh at an hour when ye think not."—Luke 12: 40.

There are in the United States two religions, the true and the false. There are two governments, a constitutional republic and a despotic empire. There are two forms of worship; the one Divine, the other Satanic. There are two systems of jurisprudence; the one open and accessible to all, the other secret and limited to the initiated. There are two objects of worship; the "God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ," and "the god of this world." There are two covenants; one unto life, the other "with death and an agreement with hell." There are two classes of people; those whose sins are "covered with the blood of Christ," and those who are trusting in "lying vanities."

Many believe that the secret lodge system is a false religion, by which men are deceived and perish; that it is a despotism, denying personal freedom and private judgment to its members; that its worship, rejecting Christ and his atonement, is a Satanic invention; that in secret and exclusive courts it defeats justice and delays the progress of temperance and other greatly needed reforms; that the lodge god is not theJehovah of the Old or the Jesus Christ of the New Testament, but "the spirit that now worketh in the children of disobedience;" that "he as God, sitteth in the temple of God," and "whose coming is after the working of Satan, with all power and signs and lying wonders, and all deceivableness of unrighteousness in them that perish."

They believe that the covenant exacting secrecy, submission and support, without warrant of law, Divine or human, is an engagement with hell and a league with the devil; that those who are ruled by their secret covenant cannot be disciples of Him who "ever spake openly to the world," or safe administrators of law, where impartial justice is the right of all alike.

And we further believe that it is a duty, solemnly enjoined upon all who have been enlightened, to "let their light shine," and to "reprove, rebuke, and exhort with all longsuffering," those whose eyes are yet blinded by "the god of this world;" that however silence may have been tolerated through ignorance, and the judgments of God tempered hitherto, he now "commands men everywhere to repent," and to "bring forth fruits meet for repentance," before "the door is shut."

Entertaining these views, we feel constrained to appeal to brethren of like precious faith to "be not hearers only, but doers," in the work of exposing, withstanding and seeking the removal of this secret lodge system:

1. By accepting Christ's word: "Every plant that my Heavenly Father hath not planted shall be rooted up."

2. By inquiring, "Lord, what wilt thou have me to do?"

3. By your public testimony, warning others and inducing them to investigate.

4. By associating with others in united efforts in your church or in the community where you live.

5. By praying for the cause, and for those who in God's providence are intrusted with its general management.

6. By contributing of your substance as the Lord has prospered you, in support of faithful workers, and the distribution of literature among the people.

7. By attending, if you can, the National Convention, Feb. 17, 1888, at New Orleans, and securing the appointment of as many delegates as practicable to go with you.

And lastly, "Be of good courage." We are on the Lord's side, and "they that be with us are more [and mightier far] than they that be with them."

J. P. STODDARD, Sec'y. N. C. A.

OUR SAN FRANCISCO LETTER.

As a party of ladies and gentlemen were about to be conducted through the interesting departments of the San Francisco Mint, the conductor paused and said, "You are now on the threshold of the largest mint in the world." A gentleman of the party remarked, "It wouldn't be in California if it were not the largest in the world."

This humorous allusion to the common boast that California's products surpass in size those of most or all other parts of our great Union, is recalled to mind by noting the strides which our city is taking in many enterprises. The three new lines of cable-roads now being constructed, one of which will reach from the business center, five miles away, to the Cliff House, where hundreds, not unfrequently thousands, of people throng daily to watch the curious sea-lions on the rocky islands near the shore, or the still more interesting and always grand Old Ocean, will place her, at least, on an equality with any other city in the world, for convenient ways of inter-municipal travel. The great number of fine business houses and residences which have been going up for a year or more help us to believe the almost fabulous account of the number of Eastern people who are coming to make their homes in this fascinating country.

The kindergartens for the children of the poor have progressed wonderfully in the last five years. Between twenty and thirty of these free kindergartens are largely attended, some of the children's parents paying a little each month; but many receive all the privileges freely. Fourteen of these nurseries, where the seeds of virtue and love are sown in the hearts of the coming men and women of the next generation, are under the supervision of Mrs. Sarah B. Cooper, whose untiring energy and Christian gentleness have endeared her to many hearts. Eight of these kindergartens are supported by the consecrated wealth of Mrs. Senator Stanford. What a grand work these noble women are doing for our nation in saving these precious little ones, and laying a good foundation for them to build upon when they arrive at years of discretion! And what a reward must await them! How can any woman spend her time tending a poodle dog, while they are surrounded by neglected human souls!

The Pacific Coast Conference of Charities and Corrections held its annual meeting in Union Square Hall of this city, beginning Tuesday evening Dec. 13th, 1887, and closing Friday evening the 16th. Mr. Fred. H. Wines, Secretary of the Illinois Board of Public Charities, made the opening address, and was tendered a reception at its close in the adjoining parlors. This address, as well as his remarks in the different discussions, was highly appreciated. All denominations joined in the conference, and some Jewish and Catholic gentlemen. Interesting addresses and papers were presented on the subjects of: "Industrial Education of Youth," "The Relation of Alcoholism to Charities and Corrections," "Suggestions for Improvements in the Administration of the Criminal Law," "The Co-operation of City Charities in the Prevention and Cure of Pauperism," and others equally interesting. Governor Waterman, Mayor Pond, General O. O. Howard, and other earnest workers took part; and we hope that much good will result from it.

Christian people are looking anxiously forward to the visit of D. L. Moody to this coast early in the new year, and praying that God may prosper his work, and pour out such a spiritual blessing as this coast has never yet received. 'Tis high time that Christians here awoke out of sleep and worked unitedly to save this fair heritage of God from those who are trampling his honor in the dust. S.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Dec. 29, 1887.

The holiday season at the Presidential mansion is passing in an unusually quiet manner. The death of ex-Secretary Manning cast a shadow over Cabinet circles as well as the White House, and a number of receptions were omitted through respect to his memory.

We have had no Congress this week. Some of the Senators and Representatives went home to eat their turkeys, but I notice that there are more here now than ever before at this season. This is because of the Inter-state Commerce law, which prevents the issue of passes to Congressmen. Statesmen now travel like ordinary men. They pay for their sleepers and not a few of them travel in common coaches. The subject recalls Representative Holman, of Indiana, whose excessive economy in legislation has caused him to be called the "watch-dog" of the Treasury, and also the "great objector," because, on the floor of the House he rises to "object" to almost every proposition that involves an inroad upon the national money vaults. It would seem, however, that Mr. Holman is pretty consistent, for when he visited the Indian reservation on official business a year or so ago, he wanted his committee to take the common cars in order to save sleeping-car expenses.

Probably no man in the city has enjoyed the season more than Washington's philanthropist, Mr. W. W. Corcoran, a man full of years and deeds. He has just entered upon his ninetieth year. Last Tuesday was his birth-day, and his house was fragrant with the flowers that had been sent to him. He received a large number of callers; letters, telegrams and cable messages from all quarters came in all day, making his parlors (with the flowers,

THE HOME.

JANUARY.

A new year smiling comes. It seems that we
But yesterday the last one turned to greet.
Swiftly the months passed by, and silently
We marked it fade, and felt that something sweet
Was drifting from us; and we softly sighed
As the year, lately new, grew pale and died.

O January! first of this new year,
What scenes are hidden in thy coming hours?
We greet thee with a mingled joy and fear,
Knowing thou hast for us both thorns and flowers;
And as we blindly meet each new-born day,
We ask for guidance o'er the untried way.

Welcome, New Year! Faith bids each heart be strong,
For God will order all that comes with thee.
To him we leave it, glad to march along,
Feeling that what is best alone will be;
And as we onward pass, kind wishes fall,
That this may prove a happy year for all.

CHURCH AMUSEMENTS.

The church has gone into the amusement business largely. In the days of primitive simplicity, it was thought that the world and Satan had a monopoly in that line. This, however, is "an age of progress," so-called, and the church has entered the market, and is in competition with these great caterers. The discovery has been made that the church, in order to hold its young people to its altars, must provide for the natural craving for amusements. It used to be held that Jesus and his work furnished ample resources to meet the loftiest aspirations of a saved soul. It was sung

"Thou, O Christ, art all I want,
More than all in thee I find."

That sort of sentiment is now thought not to be up to "the times." Sad as it may appear, judging from the new order of things, Jesus is not equal to the occasion. A little amusement must be thrown in. In order to keep the people from the theatre and opera, our churches must be made into semi-theaters and semi-operas.

The holidays furnish occasion for the ingenious and progressive sons and daughters of Zion to make full proof of their new vocation. They prepare dramas, farces (very farcical), suppers, fairs and entertainments of every sort. They are spending "their wretched strength for naught." So far from preventing attendance upon a full-grown theater and opera, by these efforts they are whetting the appetite of the people therefor. The church-theater is a preparation for the world-theater. Satan is delighted with these inventions. They had a jubilee, doubtless, in his dark realm, when some silly brain in Zion first conceived the idea that we must fight Satan and sin by a slight indulgence in their world-approving exercises. We might well paraphrase one of our hymns on this point, substituting Satan for Jesus:

"He rests, well pleased their toil to see,
Beneath his heavy yoke they move."

But this is serious business—dreadful business. It is eating out the life of the church—it is destroying our young people, rendering them unfit for all true spiritual exercises. We counsel every earnest follower of Jesus resolutely to discountenance these church amusements. Be kind, but firm. Loyalty to Jesus demands it. Give your money, liberally, for every laudable church object—but stand aloof, positively, evermore from the unholy festivals.—Guide to Holiness.

PLEASURES WHICH A CHRISTIAN SHOULD FOREGO.

1. Those as to the propriety of which he is in doubt. Rom. 14: 23.

2. Those in which he cannot indulge without danger that his example muy lead others into sin. Rom. 14: 15; 1 Cor. 8: 9.

3. Even those in which, if he engage, he will grieve weak Christians, who disapprove them; much more those which Christians universally condemn. 1 Cor. 8: 12, 13; Rom. 14: 15; Mark 9: 42.

4. Those which have the taint of sin upon them. Jude 23.

5. Those which, if indulged in, would place him in a false position (1 Thess. 5: 22; 2 Cor. 8: 21), and seem to identify him in taste and life with a sinful world, from which he should be separate. 2 Cor. 6: 14–17; Rom. 12: 2.

6. Those which might gain the mastery over him, and which would interfere with anything of more importance. Eph. 5: 18: 1 Cor. 7: 31; Phil. 4: 5.

7. Those into which he cannot carry his religion without incongruity (1 Cor. 10: 31); on which he cannot ask God's blessing (Col. 3: 17); in which he cannot show forth the shining graces of a Christian character, to the honor of God (Matt. 5: 16); and in which he cannot breathe the atmosphere of Christ's presence.—Selected.

CONSISTENCY.

One of the commonest mistakes made by a Christian, who has a measure of regard for his reputation and influence, is in thinking that it is somewhat safer for him to relax from a high standard in moral practices away from home than at home. There are men and women who would not use wine on their own table at home, or in the circles of their own community, and who would think it unwise, if not wrong, for them to attend the theater or opera in the city where they live, who feel free to use wine on an ocean steamer, or in a hotel abroad—"where everybody uses it;" and who venture on just one evening or so at the theater in London, or at the opera in Paris, or in Vienna, "just to see a first-class actor for once," or "just to hear the music, and to look at the building, you know." Now, if these persons were aware how sure the report of that departure of theirs from their ordinary practices is to be in free circulation in their church and in their community within, say, ten days of their return from abroad (if, indeed, it has not reached their home before them), and how certain it is to lower their reputation for consistency and sincerity among those whose good opinion they value, they would be likely to come to the conclusion that, if wine-drinking and going to the theater or the opera are commendable practices, the Christian who indulges in them would do better to be open in that indulgence at home, than to make an exception in their favor away from home. In many a church, there are those who count themselves examples of Christian conduct at home, who suffer even in their best Christian influence all through the winter because of the reports of their pursuing a different course from their home practice while abroad during the summer. If a good name is worth retaining at home, it must not be risked carelessly away from home.—S. S. Times.

THE CONVERTED INDIAN.

"I understand," said John Sunday, the converted Indian chief, to a congregation which he was called to address at Plymouth in the year 1837, "that many of you are disappointed because I have not brought my Indian dress with me. Perhaps if I had it on you would be afraid of me. Do you wish to know how I dressed when I was a pagan Indian? I will tell you. My face was covered with red paint. I stuck feathers in my hair. I wore a blanket and leggings. I had silver ornaments on my breast, a rifle on my shoulder, a tomahawk and scalping knife in my belt. That was my dress then. Now, do you wish to know why I wear it no longer? You will find the cause in the second Corinthians, fifth chapter, seventeenth verse: 'Therefore, if any man be in Christ, he is a new creature; old things are done away; behold, all things are become new.' When I became a Christian, feathers and paint 'done away.' I gave my silver ornaments to the mission cause. Scalping knife 'done away.' That is my tomahawk now," said he, holding up, at the same time, a copy of the Ten Commandments, in the Ojibbewa language. "Blanket done away." "Behold," he exclaimed, in a manner in which simplicity and dignity of character were combined, "Behold, all things are become new."

Would that professing Christian men, with their pipes, and cigars, and tobacco, with their gross appetites and evil habits, with their business tricks, lodge oaths, and sharp practices, and women with their fashions and feathers, their paint and their trinkets, their vanity and vexation of spirit, would give as good evidence that they are in Christ, and are new creatures as did John Sunday.

PAUL'S THORN.

Paul's "thorn in the flesh" is conjectured by Dr. John Brown of Edinburgh, to have been weak eyes, and he advances evidence for it. The first indication is the utter blindness, caused by lightning, on his way to Damascus, which lasted some days, and was only relieved by the aid of Ananias, "when there fell from his eyes as it had been scales." The second was the blunder of Paul's not recognizing the high priest, in Acts 23, when he says, "I wist not that it was the high priest," though his dress was so distinctive. Third, his letter to the Galatians, "I bear you record that you would have plucked out your own eyes and given them unto me," immediately after the declaration that he had preached the Gospel unto them through infirmity of the flesh. Then he states that he bears in his body the mark of the Lord Jesus, which would suit admirably to the disabling effect of his conversion, when Jesus addressed him a personal remonstrance. Were his eyesight suffering, this would remind him perpetually of the day when he was struck down on his persecuting career by blindness. Lastly, he calls the Galatian church to see how large a letter he had written with his own hand; yet the epistle was one of his shortest; and it could only have surprised them by being his own handwriting—not by its size—he being the only Apostle whose impaired vision obliged him to employ an amanuensis.—Armory.

MY LITTLE FOOT-BRIDGES.

One Sunday I was talking to the Swedes on the North Side in Chicago, trying to help them to see the simplicity of faith. It came to me to compare the obstacles in the way of one who is beginning to trust for full salvation, to the chasms with which those foreigners were familiar in their old mountain home, so deep and wide that they could not get over nor around nor through them, though they were perishing for the food that lay in abundance on the far side.

I have a little foot-bridge that I swing across the chasms in Christian experience, t-h-a-t, meaning an exponent of the Divine intention. I like to think of it as a little bridge over which simple souls may pass to assured rest.

If I will, I can honestly choose that God's will be done in everything that concerns me. No matter about my feelings, I may be exceedingly sorrowful, as my Master in Gethsemane, or I may say, "Thy will be done," with a song instead of a sob. I say it and I mean it, but, how do I know that I do sur render all to him? Ah, I have come to my first great chasm. Now for the bridge. Who created in me this great wish to be wholly the Lord's? The Holy Spirit. Why did he stir me to such earnestness in this matter? That he may help me. Then he surely helps me, and with his infinite aid I am wholly given to the Lord.

But I come to another chasm. How do I know that the Lord receives me? Why did he help me to come? That he might receive me. Then I am received, thank God! But how can I be sure that he cleanses me from all sin? Why did he receive me? That he might cleanse me.

"Then, having gone so far by faith, you mean to depend on your feelings the rest of the way. Why does he cleanse you from sin? Does he mean that your heart shall stand empty, like a newly washed cup, while you have to work all the time to keep out of it the worldliness and sin that are ready to flow back into it?" I see: he cleanses that he may fill me. I take it as I did the rest, by faith in his promises and in himself.

And now you see the chain of bridges. He stirs me to come, that he may help me to surrender completely. He helps me to surrender, that he may receive me. He receives me, that he may cleanse me. He cleanses, that he may fill me. And you may go on: he fills me, that he may use me. He uses me, that he may glorify himself.—Times of Refreshing.

TWO LITTLE HOME MISSIONARIES.

Down town in the church parlors the mothers and elder sisters were as busy as bees packing the annual box to be sent to the home missionary in Iowa. Up town in the white house on the hill, two little daughters, Agnes and Anna, had a bright idea. They thought they would be home missionaries themselves, and their little tongues went so fast that the gray cat on the rug looked up blinking and wondering, the dog shook his head sagely, and Nurse Margaret, passing through the room, repeated quite unnoticed her favorite bit of wisdom, "Children should be seen and not heard."

When Mrs. Raeburn came home from the meeting, Anna flew to her, with eyes and lips and hands all pleading at once.

"Mamma, Agnes Clark and I have such a bright idea. We want you to let us have as many pretty pieces as you can spare, silk, worsted, calico, whatever you do not want yourself. We intend to make lots and lots of beautiful things and sell them, and send the money to the missionaries, just we two."

"Isn't that a large enterprise for two little heads and four little hands?" said Mrs. Raeburn, folding up her veil and smoothing out her gloves. "Do you think you will both persevere? Because this mamma does not like her little girl to begin anything which she does not finish."

"Neither does my mamma," said Agnes quickly.

"Well, you may have my piece bag, and perhaps Cousin Dora will give you some good advice," said Mrs. Raeburn, tying on her kitchen apron and going out to make some biscuits for tea.

Just then old black Betty, carrying home a great basket of freshly laundered clothes,went slowly past the door. Betty was a good laundress and very industrious, but she had three grandchildren to care for, and the little girls noticed that the wind blew right through her poor, thin shawl, that her shoes were out at the toes, and that she walked feebly, as if she were tired.

"Anna!" said Agnes.

"Agnes!" exclaimed Anna.

"Let's help old Betty!" said both at once. They retired to the depths of the sofa in the corner, and talked again with so much animation that the pet dog shook his head, and the cat purred approvingly, while the nurse, once more passing through, reminded Miss Anna that the baby was asleep.

For the next four weeks the two girls hurried home from school every day, studied their lessons and wrote their exercises first, and were then very much occupied with their needles from after tea until bedtime. Cousin Dora said they might work in her room, and every evening two golden heads might have been seen bending over rainbow-tinted silks, while fleecy rills of wool went flowing over dimpled hands in the shade of Cousin Dora's lamp. The path between the homes of the Raeburns and Clarks was very short, and Ted Raeburn was quite used to escorting Agnes home when the clock struck nine.

The result of their industry was pronounced very creditable when at length all their handiwork was spread out on Dora's bed for the admiring mothers to see.

There were the gayest little pin cushions, round and heart-shaped; there were a "cunning" case for court-plaster, a tidy, a mouchoir case, a bag, a doll's gown and apron, and a pretty little wall pocket, all evolved from odds and ends. A pair of bedroom slippers, a pair of baby's shoes and a tippet, testified to the good use which had been made of the wool and the knitting needles. When the mothers had looked and praised and admired, they set their wits to work, mother-like, to help along. And so it came to pass that when, a few days later, little rose-colored invitations flew about the town, bidding friends and neighbors to a Little Maidens' Fair at the home of Anna Raeburn, the table in the parlor was quite a wonderful sight, while in the dining room were cake and lemonade, and by the door was a great pyramid of button-hole bouquets, which grew beautifully less,and found ready buyers at five cents apiece.

"My daughters," said the dear old pastor, "you have done admirably."

Anna and Agnes thought so too, when, the visitors having gone, they counted their money,and what with silver dimes and nickels, pennies and occasional quarter and half dollars, the amount footed up to no less sum than twelve dollars and fifty cents.

What does Aunt Betty need? was now the question. The answer was not far to seek. The children's idea was to slip the pocket book containing the money under her door in the dusk and then retreat, leaving her to think that an angel had sent the benefaction. But to this the sensible mothers objected that Betty would certainly spend every penny for her grandchildren, and that her own personal comfort would not be increased at all.

It ended in a happy journey of two girls and two mothers to the principal stores,where the merchants, understanding how this money had been earned,gave the children as good a discount as they could possibly afford. The purchases were as follows:

One pair of thick,soft blankets,warranted to keep out the cold.

One pair of thick, stout shoes, warranted to keep out the wet.

One ton of coal,warranted to burn freely and well and keep Aunt Betty's house warm and comfortable.

One basket of potatoes, warranted to taste delicious, whether boiled or baked.

Oh, how happy Anna and Agnes were when all these things were sent home. As often as they saw Aunt Betty with her stout shoes on her poor, old feet, they felt a deeper interest in her than ever before, and whenever the wind whistled with great shrillness at night, as they cuddled up in their own cosey beds, they were glad at the thought of Betty's blankets.

It is more blessed to give than to receive. Every single word of this little story is true, and this winter old Betty, trudging back and forth with her basket, will not suffer for the lack of a good shawl or a flannel skirt,as she did a year ago. Kind deeds are like seed sown in the ground, sure to multiply, and other people, who knew what the girls did, will look out for the interests of Betty and others equally in want.—Sel.

TEMPERANCE.

THE SALOON AND THE SUPREME COURT.

The Saloon reels under the terrific blow dealt by the Supreme Court of the United States in the Kansas cases. It reels to and fro and staggers like a drunken man, and is at its wit's end. Its swagger is for the moment gone. Its loud, boastful tones have fallen into a hoarse whisper, and its impertinent challenge to the American people has lost its defiant ring. The power and majesty of Law which it has so often scorned, inspire it with an awe it never felt before. It has made its final appeal and has found that there is no way of escape for it from the mighty grip of Law. Any State may now declare it a nuisance and proceed to abate it, and it has no remedy except in rebellion. Every phase of the Saloon—the brewery, the distillery, the groggery, is subject to the exercise of this sovereign power; and the manufacture and the wholesale and the retail of intoxicants may be as rigorously suppressed as any other form of nuisance deemed detrimental to health or morals.

The decision of the Supreme Court declares that compensation for damage to property cannot be exacted from the State when the manufacture and sale of intoxicants are prohibited. This is the great point decided. Every man, henceforth, who enters into, or continues in, the business of making or selling intoxicants in any State,does so at his own risk. His business may at any time, either by legislative enactment or constitutional provision, be declared a nuisance and be suppressed as in Kansas,or be prohibited as in Maine and other States. It is in effect a notice to every brewer and distiller and dealer that he must be prepared to give up this business whenever his State commands him to. Formal action by the popular voice or by legislative process outlaws his business, and turns the criminal machinery of the State against him. The moral force of this fact is irresistible. It will crush the Saloon as slavery was crushed. The supreme interpreter of our Supreme Law has given us this mighty weapon of warfare. Let us wield it with all our power.

The contest is narrowed down and simplified by this decision. The Saloon, with its whole business is, in effect, delivered into the hands of the people. The people may do what they will with it. They may support it or they may tolerate it; they may cripple it or they may destroy it. Their right to deal with it is henceforth unquestioned.

The lessons for temperance men are these: 1st. Be of good cheer. Let this victory inspire you with larger hope and with greater courage. Make the most of it, both for the help of your own cause and the hindrance of that of the Saloon. 2d. Do all that is possible to educate and strengthen public sentiment against the Saloon. This extremely important work may be pushed by manifold processes. 3d. Combine wherever you can and as far as you can for the good of the cause. Combine to cripple as well as to destroy; combine in ward and village and town, as well as in county and State. Combine in legal action, in legislative effort, in political endeavor, in social work, and in religious and other organized movements intended to restrict and save from the curse. 4th. Do not drive those who do not agree with you in methods into the ranks of the enemy. There are some phases of the conflict in which they can be used. Make them allies in the educational work, if they can go no further; in the effort to rescue and reform, if they will not oppose license. 5th. Shut up a saloon wherever you can. Bring every provision of existing laws to bear against the business, and by using all influences, all methods, all advantages, you will steadily gain on the enemy and in the end rout and overcome him.

The victory is with us; for the Supreme Being and the Supreme Court are on our side, and against the Saloon, and from these it has no appeal.—Independent.

PROHIBITION AND CIVIL RIGHTS.

The curse of Almighty God will rest on those who are responsible for sending rum from this country to Africa. Well informed persons regard it a greater evil than the slave trade.—Christian Witness.

What does the rumseller care about the curse of God? Is he not one of that class of fools that say "There is no God?" What does he care for Africa? The "almighty dollar" is much more to him than the Almighty God.

But is the rumseller alone guilty? Is not the government (the people whom the government represents) particeps criminis? Prohibitionists are certainly on the right track. To demand the earnest support of every upright and thoughtful colored citizen, that party has only to include the civil rights of the colored citizen with prohibition as the prinpal end of its being. The first duty of every man is to see that his life, liberty and other rights common to the body politic are secure. Then he can cheerfully unite in party measures for the general good of the commonwealth.—Baptist Monitor (colored).

WIFE-POISONING.

Not long since I was walking in the city with a celebrated physician. As we passed a house surrounded with every evidence of wealth and refinement, he spoke: "I have a patient in there, an idolized wife, who is dying, and beyond all help, and none of them know what is the matter with her, and still her husband has killed her."

"Why, doctor," says I, "what do you mean?"

"I mean just this, her husband is just literally steeped in tobacco until the insensible perspiration from his body has become a deadly poison, and his wife has absorbed enough of this, and had before I was called in, so that she will die."

At an establishment where they treat patients for the cure of the tobacco habit, a man just brought in was washed as clean as soap and water could make him, and then some flies were allowed to alight on him. In five minutes by the watch they were dead. There was poison enough in the perspiration that came out of a man,washed as clean as possible, to kill them. You can imagine what it would be when he wasn't washed, perhaps, to spend hours each day in a warm bed with him.—T. B. Terry, in Albany Argus.

A TEMPERANCE MARTYR.

Washington has added another to the catalogue of martyrs in the cause of temperance. Capt. S. S. Blackford, a one-armed union soldier, who for many years was captain of the capitol police, has been for several years engaged in fighting the saloons in the District of Columbia. He commenced his work when his oldest son was murdered in a saloon while under the influence of liquor, and has kept it up incessantly until he died to-day with his armor on. It is the practice in the District of Columbia to refuse a license to a saloon unless a majority of the property-owners on both sides of the street for four blocks sign a petition for such license. A saloon-keeper, whose case was considered to day, got a majority of one; and Capt. Blackford, who protested against granting the license, said that if the commissioners would give him a little time he would persuade some of those who had signed the petition to reconsider and keep the saloon off the street. The commissioners gave him until 11 o'clock this morning to accomplish this. At 11:10 they granted the license to the saloon-keeper. Half an hour after this act was done, the news came to the district office that Capt. Blackford had fallen dead upon the street. In his pocket was an affidavit from one of the property-holders setting forth that he had signed the petition for the saloon under a misapprehension, and desired his name to be stricken off. In order to reach the office of the district commissioner before 11 o'clock Capt. Blackford ran nearly a mile, burst a blood vessel, and fell dead in the street. The commissioners have no power to revoke a license except upon complaint of the police that the saloon for which it is granted is a disorderly place, but they will refer this matter to their attorney and see what can be done about it.—Daily News.

The Prohibitionists of Illinois will hold their next convention at Springfield, May 10, 1888.

Senator Blair's new book is being printed and will be ready for publication on Jan. 1, 1888. The name is "The Conflict Between Man and Alcohol."

Enforcement of the prohibitory law is steadily going forward in Rhode Island. No policeman is allowed to wear a uniform in Pawtucket unless he is willing to do his duty in this all-important question.

The London Temperance Hospital has been established fourteen years. In that time alcoholic stimulants have been resorted to in not more than five cases, and in those instances the results have proved no more successful than where remedies ordinarily used in the hospital were employed. Up to the present time over 30,000 patients have been under treatment, more than 12,000 of whom were to a greater or less degree addicted to drink. Many of these, seeing the good effect of the treatment, have become total abstainers. The rate of mortality has been only 3 per cent. In fatal cases there were fully one-fifth more deaths among non-abstainers than amongst teetotalers. In no case has Dr. Edmunds, the senior physician, prescribed alcohol.

cards and dainty souvenirs of the event) an interesting scene. Mr. Corcoran, in looking back through the long vista of his eighty-nine years, remarked one day that he had shaken the hand of every American President except Washington, who died, said he, "before I began to run about the White House." But he had evidently forgotten the exception in the case of President Lincoln. Mr. Corcoran was not on sufficiently good terms with him or with his Administration to have shaken hands with the War President. Mr. Corcoran, unhappily, was at that time so warm a sympathizer with the South that he found it necessary to leave Washington for a time. But his liberal acts of recent years at least are well known. He has given about $3,000,000 in charity, and he has probably $8,000,000 left. He lives in the house which was occupied by Daniel Webster when the latter was Secretary of State. The venerable historian, George Bancroft, is one of his nearest neighbors and most intimate friends.

RELIGIOUS NEWS.

—Bro. B. M. Sharp, as the new pastor of the Reformed Presbyterian church at Blanchard, Iowa, is doing good work and growing in the estimation of the people.

—Prof. J. K. McClurkin, who was elected to Dr. Sloane's place in the Reformed Presbyterian Seminary, in Allegheny City, is said to be a natural born teacher, and is quite popular with the students.

—Mr. George Muller, of Bristol, England, is now engaged upon his fifteenth evangelical tour, recently commencing his labors in New Zealand.

—Ben Hogan and Lieutenant Tom Lauery closed their revival work in Indianapolis just before the holidays. Their work was deep and lasting. They made hundreds of converts and many friends.

—The religious movement in colleges, inaugurated by Prof. Drummond, is taking definite and practical shape. A large meeting of Yale students was held December 9, at which addresses were made by the leaders of the New York City Students' Movement. A number of the students of Harvard University have also inaugurated a similar movement, and have appointed a series of meetings which are to be conducted by leading pastors and to be followed by personal effort.

—The Baptists of Canada have agreed to accept Mr. McMasters's bequest of three-quarters of a million of dollars, on the testator's terms. The money is to be used in founding a university. With a view to this end a charter has been granted by the Ontario Legislature for the union of the Toronto and Woodstock Colleges. Whether the new university shall be located at Woodstock or in Toronto is to be determined at a special session of the Board of Home Missions.

—J. C. Waller, his wife and two children, who went from Burlington, Vt., to the Congo country to take part in Bishop Taylor's mission work, have returned to New York. Mr. Waller is a badly disappointed man, and his report is as gloomy as his mind. He describes the enterprise as a complete failure, and thinks he was lucky to escape alive. The supplies were inadequate. The steamer, which cost so much money, is lying a wreck on the banks of the river. Mr. Waller hopes that the missionary societies which furnished the funds for the expedition will investigate the truth of his statements.

—The Norwegian Synods of America held their fourth general missionary meeting, beginning on October 25th, in the Indian Mission House at Wittenberg, Wis. The president, Pastor Rasmusen, was re-elected, and the meeting was well attended. Among those present may be mentioned Missionary Walen, from Madagascar, who has been sent by the Norwegian Mission Society to visit the Norwegian congregations in the United States to arouse among this people a deeper interest in foreign missions, and to collect money for this important field. A number of services were held, both in Norwegian and in English. The Indian boys, under Pastor Lartraus's direction, sang a number of Psalms and recited the catechism. Two Indian children—a boy of seven and a girl of five—were baptized. These two children are the first fruits of the Norwegian Lutheran Mission among the Indians, and this was the first baptism.—Lutheran.

THE EVANGELIST BELL IN CALIFORNIA.

SAN JOSE, Cal., Dec. 19, 1887.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—Chicago has once more sent to our coast a servant of the great King, to invite our people to the Gospel feast. Bro. A. J. Bell of your city arrived here on Saturday, the 10th inst., and commenced a series of revival services in the First M. E. church on Sabbath evening following. His coming was announced several weeks in advance of his arrival and our pastor, Rev. F. F. Jewell, D. D., had prepared the way for a rich harvest. The church was in good condition, and as a result of the work of the past week about eighty have united with the church, of whom about sixty-five are new converts. Bro. Bell is much beloved by all who know him. The meetings here will continue indefinitely. Bro. Bell's address while on the coast is Santa Barbara, Cal.

THE GOSPEL IN ARMENIA.

Bro. G. H. Gregorian, a native Armenian who studied in this country at Wheaton and Union Park Theological Seminary, Chicago, begins his ocean voyage this week for Constantinople and Yozgat in Asia Minor, expecting to devote his life to the Gospel work among his own people. From Great Barrington, Mass., he sends to the Cynosure the translation of an interesting letter from a fellow worker in Armenia:

"Coming to the work of our society," says the writer, "I wrote you before about the progress of the work at Everek, and told you of my visit there a year and a half ago, when I helped Mr. Sarkis Melekian, a young man, to be ordained a priest, that he may preach plain Gospel under the cover of priestly gown. I succeeded, though it cost the young man a great deal of trial; for they said, 'He speaks the words of Avedis,' etc. Finally he was ordained, and began to preach the Gospel in the church. They opposed him, and commanded him to desist. When they forbade Mr. Melekian they thought the matter was ended, but it did not; on the contrary, the work spread more than ever.

"I think I wrote you before about the Gospel preaching at five different families. The people who gathered in these five houses uniting together form a congregation of several hundred, who went to the church one Sabbath noon, opened it, and began to have their Gospel study in the very church. The rulers and priests tried to prevent them, but with no effect. And now every Sabbath noon the Word of God is preached to the people in their own language and in their own church. Oh, how blessed to hear! . . . We have not yet succeeded in entering the church at Cæsarea, but also hope to enter and together with the great congregation to read the Word of God and preach.

"These days there is not a little movement in this city. A party was gathered to remove the pictures from the church called "Medz Djam"(Cathedral), and they removed many pictures from the church. The other party tried to put them back again, but met with no success. Finally, they settled the quarrel by hanging a few pictures of the prophets high up on the columns; but no candle is lighted before these pictures, nor are they worshiped by the people. If any should wish to kiss them they cannot, because they hang so high up.

"Another thing: You know that in this part they make a picture called 'Hire Asdvadz,' (God the Father) in both Greek and Armenian monasteries.

"The Word of God prospers, and great works are done, and still shall be done; only you pray that the Lord himself may work."

AVEDIS YEREDSIAN.

Cesarea, Nov. 10, 1887.

A SPECIAL CALL FOR WASIOJA.

BELOVED BRETHREN, SISTERS AND FRIENDS, EAST AND WEST:—This cold winter, to pay teachers, and meet current expenses, to make the school a blessed success for reform and true holiness, Wasioja needs and must have your immediate help. Please make an effort and send to Rev. W. C. Mullenix, treasurer, Wasioja, Dodge Co., Minn., all interest or principal now due. Wasioja was our "Pioneer" Wesleyan School, and has stood like a beacon-light of reform and true holiness in the midst of a lost world in darkness; and for thirteen years has, at the expense of great personal sacrifice of many devoted friends, sought, through many hardships and deprivations, to secure the best possible results for the cause of God in this excellent school; and as a result, some of the best workers in the Gospel in our Zion are graduates from Wasioja.

The school is doing well and prospering this winter, but needs your help, your prayers and co-operation. Shall we have it? Let all pay who can, and all who have not subscribed, please send a liberal "New Year's gift" to this excellent Christian school, and thus gladden many hearts and do much to carry forward this good work. J. A. RICHARDS, Gen. Agent.

LITERATURE.

INGLESIDE RHAIMS. Verses in the Dialect of Burns. Rev. J. E. Rankin, D. D. Price, cloth 50c. John B. Alden, New York.

The former pastor of the Congregational church of Washington City seems to be a remarkable proof of the old saying, "Blood will tell." Scotch brogue and Scotch pathos have not often been so finely reproduced outside the "old country," and those who have admired the beauties of Burns with hesitation because of his private life, may turn to this volume and find no doubts to mar the satisfaction. "Dr. Rankin," says Joseph Cook, "has much of the genius and more than the orthodoxy of Robert Burns." Dr. Rankin has written strong and beautiful English verse, but this volume is all Scottish in subject, scene and treatment. The unaffected love of nature and the hearty interest in the joys and sorrows of home-life which were the favorite themes of Burns show a marked sympathy with the genius of the Scottish poet, but the stream of song flows between banks that do not muddy its waters. In some of these poems, the "Auld Scotch Mither," the "Lost Guid-man," "Jean Anderson" and others, the reader will scarcely miss the fire and fancy that have made Burns read and loved the world over.

In another form the publishers have given us Dr. Rankin's "Brechin Ballads," in which the Scotch style is made to do excellently as the medium of controversy, and the "Andover heresy" is given its benefit to the full. The pernicious spirit of caste is shown to be of the pit in "Fred Douglass at the Gowden Gate," as no prose argument could approach.

In Scribner's Magazine for January Mr. Edward L. Wilson, the photograpic traveler, contributes an interesting account of "The Great Pyramid" of Cheops, which describes the appearance and structure of that ancient monument; narrates the incidents of an ascent and descent; pictures the view from its summit, and tells much about its history and the curious speculations to which it has given origin. Another attractive illustrated article is "Japanese Art, Artists, and Artisans," by William Elliot Griffis, the well-known author of "Mikado's Empire." The pictures are made from drawings by a Japanese artist. The leading article of the number, "The Man at Arms," describes the man at arms from the time of Charlemagne (800) to the perfection of armor (about 1450), and is the result of study and research continued from time to time for several years. The numerous illustrations are based upon the unique collection of military manikins in the Paris Museum of Artillery, and upon old manuscripts, prints, tombal effigies, etc. "Municipal Finance," "French Traits—Intelligence," and "A Chapter on Dreams," and several stories make up the contents of an interesting number of the magazine.

The Baker Taylor Co., 9 Broad St., New York, publishers of Dr. Strong's book, "Our Country," announce the speedy publication of the discussions at the late meeting of the Evangelical Alliance in Washington under the title, "National Perils and Opportunities." Cloth, $1.50; paper, $1.

The International Committee of the Y. M. C. A. have published from their office, 23d St. and 4th Ave., New York, a list of topics for daily prayer meetings for 1888. The selection seems to be an excellent one, which must prove useful and suggestive to all Christian workers. It will serve an excellent purpose also for daily private readings.

The Library Magazine, in late weekly issues, has the following important articles: The Catholic Revival of the Sixteenth Century. from the Quarterly Review. Science and the Bishops, by Prof. T. H. Huxley. The Theosopic Movement in India, by Herr Ernst von Weber. Rural France, from the Edinburgh Review. Address on Aphorisms, by John Morley, M. P.; American Museums of Pre-Historic Archæology, by Alfred R. Wallace; Roses and Rose-Culture, from the Quarterly Review.

A silver lining to every cloud! With the short, dull days of early winter come the cheery holidays and Vick's beautiful annual, and lo! spring alrcady appears not far distant. LODGE NOTES.

The employes of the North Pennsylvania road have withdrawn from the Knights.

The Masonic reunion of Scottish Rite Masons was held at the Masonic Temple in Toledo, and largely attended by visitors from all parts of Ohio.

The Knights of Labor of the Reading Railroad system have issued an appeal "to workmen and workwomen of America and outside of it" to support the Reading strikers by contributions. The business of the road has not been materially interfered with by the strike of last week.

The costly headquarters of the Knights of Labor in Philadelphia, and the expenses of keeping up the institution, together with other injudicious operations, are said to have pretty nigh bankrupted the organization. Bad accounts come from there. The property has been mortgaged to raise money. In short, the Knights of Labor are in the condition of a man or a government having a deficiency instead of a surplus.—Eve. Journal.

A convention is to be held March 1 in New York, to form a National District Assembly of Longshoremen. The reports received from the officers of local bodies indicate that 50,000 men will thus be brought into one general organization, under the jurisdiction of the Knights of Labor. Such an organization would be the largest body of workers of one class in the world. It is a part of the plan of the organization to extend it to all the leading ports of the world.

Knights of Pythias in Pennsylvania are excited over a dispute between the Supreme Lodge of the United States and the Grand Lodge of the State, which threatens to be carried into the courts before it is settled. The Grand Lodge of Pennsylvania claims the right of self-government for itself and its lodges, but this is denied by the Supreme Lodge. There are 40,000 members of the order in this State, of which 17,000 reside in Philadelphia. They are a unit in support of the position taken by the Grand Lodge of Pennsylvania.

A desperate fight between Orangemen and Catholics occurred at the village of Killybearn, near Cookstown, County Tyrone, Ireland, on Monday. Stones, bricks, clubs and revolvers were freely used, and the house of the parish priest was almost wrecked, the windows and doors having been smashed and the furniture badly damaged. The Catholics had the better of the fight at the start, but the Orangemen were re-inforced and the struggle was renewed with increased fury. The battle was finally stopped by the police, who made several arrests. Many persons were injured by stones and clubs, but it is not known that anybody was hit by bullets.

FRIENDLY GREETINGS

Granted to be one of the Best Profusely Illustrated Magazines.

"It is a charming illustrated magazine, 40 pages monthly, of anecdote and argument for the Christian home. Finely and profusely illustrated. Certainly one of the cheapest extant; but better, one of the best. Full of the Gospel spirit. Excellent temperance sketches, missionary intelligence, short stories, all clean and wholesome, calculated to promote purity and knowledge in the 'Home Circle.' Whatever its circulation it ought to be doubled."—N. Y. Christian at Work.

OF

A Happy Life.

28th THOUSAND.

Baptist Commendation.

"We are delighted with this book. It reaches to the very core of Christian experience, and is eminently experimental in its teachings. It meets the doubts and difficulties of conscientious seekers after the bread and water of life, but whose efforts result only in alternate failure and victory. The author, without claiming to be a theologian, sends out the results of a happy and rich experience to help others into a happy Christian life."—Baptist Weekly.

Presbyterian Endorsement.

"The book is so truly and reverentially devout in its spirit that it disarms criticism. It contains so much that is sound and practical, so much that, if heeded, will make our lives better, happier and more useful, that the intelligent reader who really wishes to lead a life 'hid with Christ in God' can scarcely fail to derive profit from its perusal."—Interior.

Methodist Word of Praise.

"We have not for years read a book with more light and profit. It is not a theological book. No effort is made to change the theological views of any one. The author has a rich experience, and tells it in a plain and delightful manner."—Christian Advocate.

United Brethren's Approval.

"We have seldom met with a more interesting volume, abounding throughout with apt illustrations; we have failed to find a dry line from title-page to finis."—Religious Telescope.

Congregational Comment.

"It contains much clear, pungent reasoning and interesting incident. It is a practical and experimental lesson taught out of God's word, and is worthy of universal circulation."—Church Union.

POPULAR COMMENTARIES

In the critical biblical literature of the century few books have been so unqualifiedly endorsed as

Jamieson, Fausset & Brown's Commentary

On the Old and New Testaments. It has been tried, tested and proven, during one of the most active periods ever known in biblical research. That it has not been found wanting is evident in the still unabated demand. At considerable outlay we have issued a new edition of this valuable work in clear type, attractively bound, and at a price much lower than any complete commentary ever before issued.

In Extra Fine English Cloth, sprinkled edge, the full set, (4 vols.) $8 00
In Half Morocco, the full set, (4 vols.) 10 00

"The BEST condensed Commentary on the whole Bible is the Commentary on the Old and New Testaments, by Jamieson, Fausset & Brown. It contains notes of the choicest and richest character on all parts of the Holy Bible. It is the cream of the commentaries carefully collected by three eminent scholars. Its critical introduction to each book of Scripture, its eminently practical notes, its numerous pictorial illustrations, commend it strongly to the Sunday-school worker and to the clergyman. Then it is such a marvel of cheapness."—Rev. J. H. Vincent, D. D., in "Aids to Bible Study."

The leading clergymen and college professors of the country unite with Dr. Vincent in placing this commentary in the first rank of all biblical aids.

The Facts Stated.

HON. THURLOW WEED ON THE MORGAN ABDUCTION.

This is a sixteen page pamphlet comprising a letter written by Mr. Weed, and read at the unveiling of the monument erected to the memory of Capt. William Morgan. The frontispiece is an engraving of the monument. It is a history of the unlawful seizure and confinement of Morgan in the Canandaigua jail, his subsequent conveyance by Freemasons to Fort Niagara, and drowning in Lake Ontario. He not only subscribes his NAME to the letter, but ATTACHES HIS AFFIDAVIT to it.

In closing his letter he writes: I now look back through an interval of fifty-six years with a conscious sense of having been governed through the "Anti-Masonic excitement" by a sincere desire, first, to vindicate the violated laws of my country, and next, to arrest the great power and dangerous influences of "secret societies."

The pamphlet is well worth perusing, and is doubtless the last historical article which this great journalist and politician wrote. [Chicago, National Christian Association.] Single copy, 5 cents.

HOME AND HEALTH.

FRIED FOODS.

What the spit is to the English cook, and the bain-marie to the French, the frying-pan is to the American. The Canadian lumberman slings his soup-pot over his pack; the British sportsman cuts a stick, trims it, and impales his game over or before the embers; our native who "roughs it" cares for no kitchen utensil beyond the culinary vade mecum of his grandmothers. In it he grills bacon, venison, and fish, makes gravy, fries flapjacks, and stews the maple sugar and water that is to drench them, boils water for tea, coffee and shaving, and washes the dishes when what was prepared in it has been eaten.

The dietetic chord for the day is sounded at our national breakfast in fried chops, fried cutlets, fried eggs, fried ham or bacon, fried fish, fried fish-balls, fried potatoes, fried sausage, fried tripe, and fried beefsteak. The relative mirror is indicated in fried buckwheat or other griddle-cakes, fried mush or hominy, or, what some prefer to all these, fried bread. Luncheon and dinner maintain the theme in fried vegetables of all sorts, in fritters and pancakes, and, if supper be served, croquettes, fried oysters, and doughnuts "give the diapason closing full."

The reasons for the preference we display for this mode of cookery are neither various nor many. It is the easiest way of making ready raw material or "left-overs" for the table. The steady, slow simmer that from toughness brings forth tenderness; the steaming, roasting, boiling—to perfect which attention must be paid to degrees of heat, to basting and turning—require skill and time. Our middle class women are overladen with work, and ambitious to accomplish what they consider as higher things than cookery. What can be hurried up is "put through" in what Americans (and no other people) call "less than no time." The frying-pan makes short work in unrighteousness of whatever is cast into its gaping maw. The housewife—with no conception of the valuable truth that cooking of the right sort will take care of itself, if once put properly in train, while she is busy with other matters—delays setting about it until the margin of time is reduced to the minimum.

The best writers on diatetics proscribe fried foods so unsparingly that even she whose chief aim in the day is to run through a given quantum of labor, might pause to read and ponder. The pernicious properties of hot grease and substances soaked in it are published in the market-place of medical and domestic journals. "As a broad rule," says Dr. Fothergill, "the harder the fat, the less digestible is it." When all that is volatile and soluble is driven out of it by rapid heating and cooking, and the ever nauseous touch of calcined grease is superadded, the digestive organs give over trying to assimilate it.

Yet our dear sisters continue to fry everything that can be fried; to grow sallow and spleeny; and to take patent medicines to patch up the coats of their stomachs.—Marion Harland, in Journal of Reconstructives.

The Spaniards have a proverb that "the man who sits with his back to a draught sits with his face to his coffin." This is the time of year to remember health rules. Many a cold will be taken in churches. The people will walk to church in the warm sun of some of the autumn days wearing their overcoats. On entering the building, colder than the outside, having neither sun nor fire, they will remove their coats and sit down in a perspiration. The true method is to carry the coat on the arm, and put it on when entering a cold room and ceasing the exercise.—Selected.

The keeping of fruit requires a uniform, low temperature, just above the freezing point. Fruit, in ripening, gives off carbonic-acid gas, which is deleterious, hence fruit should not be stored in the house cellar, if it can be avolded. Where there is no other place for the fruit, then the ventilation of the cellar must be carefully looked to.

"Be not among winebibbers; among riotous eaters of flesh." Prov. 23: 20.

PERSECUTION

By the Roman Catholic Church.

A Moral Mystery how any Friend of Religious Liberty could Consent to "Hand over Ireland to Parnellite Rule."

By Rev. John Lee, A. M., B. D.

General Viscount Wolseley: "Interesting."
Chicago Inter-Ocean: "A searching review."
Christian Cynosure: "It deserves a wide circulation at the present time."
Bishop Coxe, Protestant Episcopal, of Western New York: "Most useful publication; a logical sequel to 'Our Country,' by Josiah Strong."
Emile De Laveleye of Belgium, the great publicist: "I have read with the greatest interest your answer to Cardinal Manning. I think Rome's encroachments in the United States ought to be carefully watched and resisted."
Rev. C. C. McCabe, D. D.: "It is a useful book and ought to have a wide sale. You are dealing with a question which will soon dominate every other in American politics. The Assassin of Nations is in our midst and is approaching the Temple of Liberty with stealthy tread. The people of this country will understand the Belfast frenzy some day better than they do now."
The Right Hon. Lord Robert Montague: "I have read it with the greatest pleasure, and with amazement at the intimate acquaintance with the acts of Romanism in our midst which you have evinced. I only wish that, instead of publishing your pamphlet in Chicago, you had sown it broadcast over England, Scotland and Ireland."

Labor Troubles,

BY REV. C. C. BROWN.

The Danger—The Laborer's Grievance—The Laborer's Foe—The Laborer's Fallacy—The Laborer's Hope—Mind and Muscle—Co-Laborers.

TIMELY TALKS ON AN IMPORTANT SUBJECT.

The Papers Say of this Book:

"It is well to remind the world of the great law of human brotherhood, but how to make the 'more general application of it?' 'Aye, there's the rub!' Our author contributes his mite in that direction, and his voice and reasoning will reach some ears and perhaps touch some understandings and move some selfish hearts that are buttoned up very closely and hedged aroond by over much respectability and comfortable prosperity."—Chicago Tribune.

"The writer does his work in a way remarkable alike for its directness, its common sense, its impartiality, its lucidity and its force. He has no theories to support; he deals with facts as he finds them; he fortifies his assertions by arrays of demonstrative statistics. The work is among the best of the kind if it is not the best that we have seen. While it is scarcely possible for it to be put in the hands of all our wage-workers, we wish it could be read by every one of them."—Chicago Interior.

FARM NOTES.

THINGS TO THINK OF.

"In dairying he who sells butter at common prices, which is made from milk produced from common cows, fed the common way, will never rise to comfortable circumstances, but lead a hard life of toil all his days."

Get out of the deep, worn rut of your old prejudices. Stand up and look the problem of better success square in the face like a man of pluck and brains. Don't whine about monopolies as long as you don't do anything for yourself on your own farm.

Monopolies are bad enough. Corrupt officials are bad enough. High taxes are bad enough. All these outside evils are bad enough, the Lord knows, but to sink down in indifference inside your own line fence, call every improvement that is urged upon you "theory," is a thousand times worse on your fortune. With such a spirit, no wonder monopolies grind you, officials steal from you, and taxes rob you. Think of a farmer trying to make money by taking milk to a cheese factory from a lot of cows that yield him only 3,000 pounds of milk a year, and he not knowing or caring anything about improving that yield by breeding in better dairy blood.

Think of him going along, year in and year out, and not knowing how to feed a good cow, even if he has one, so as to bring a little profit from his hard labor.

Think of him making butter that costs him every bit of 16 to 18 cents a pound and swapping it at 10 to 12 cents a pound for groceries at the country store—paying high for the groceries and getting nothing for his butter.

Think of him selling cream to a creamery and never stopping to think, or read, or study an hour in a month as to the kind of cows he ought to have for that business, or the proper way to care for them in order to get the most cream.

Think of a man blindly plunging along in these old ruts of farm practice for years and never caring to read what other men are doing who are successful and make money in the dairy business.

Think of a man doing all these things, as thousands are doing, and not caring enough for his own profit to invest barely 100 cents a year for a good dairy paper that is wide awake to his best interests all the time, and worth each week a hundred times its cost for a year.

Think of a man doing all these things, and then blaming the railroads, the monopolies and the tariff for his bad fortune, not once dreaming that he himself is mostly to blame because he cares so little for knowledge and the experience of others, when it can be had so cheaply.

Then think how foolish it is to say that a paper that is trying to build up practical success on the farm, and enlarge the power of the farmer to help himself, is not a true friend of the farmer because it is not everlastingly howling about monopolies.

Remember, success, like charity, begins at home.—Professor W. A. Henry.

CONVERTING STRAW INTO MANURE.

In the West the object is to feed one-third of the straw-stack and convert the balance into manure as rapidly as possible. The straw trampled under foot by the cattle will not thoroughly rot if left to itself. To rot and fine it, it must be stirred about, and the swine can be made to do this work. If the hogs are fed on the straw once a week they will move the entire mass, unless quite deep, rooting after stray grains. If their noses do not get to the bottom of the heap, sharpen a heavy stake and prod it through the straw, then withdraw it and drop shelled corn or oats into the hole. In this way a hole can be made every few feet over the pile, and the hogs will turn the manure thoroughly. A hog's snout is a very cheap and effective manure hook. The hogs must not be allowed to lie on the rotting straw, as this is almost sure to produce disease among them. They become too warm, and then when they come into the open air they contract colds, catarrhal or pulmonary diseases. If the hogs are used as above recommended, straw can be converted into well-rotted and fined manure within six months; and if the straw-stack is put on level ground, not much will be lost during this rapid conversion. When from twelve to eighteen months are required for the rotting of the manure (and this time will be required when deep masses are not disturbed), and the straw is on a side hill, not a little of the value of the manure is lost by being washed down hill.—American Agriculturist.

WESTERN WEALTH.

Such conflicting reports are heard from various sources that it is a relief to read a reliable statement of the actual situation of the farmers, stockmen and business men of the West, such as is contained in a pamphlet just issued under the above title. The statistics given are the latest official figures. Parties desiring this pamphlet can secure a copy free by addressing C. H. WARREN, Gen. Pass. Agent, St. Paul, Minn.

CONSUMPTION SURELY CURED.

To the Editor:—Please inform your readers that I have a positive remedy for the above named disease. By its timely use thousands of hopeless cases have been permanently cured. I shall be glad to send two bottles of my remedy FREE to any of your readers who have consumption if they will send me their Express and P. O. address. Respectfully, T. A. SLOCUM, M. C., 181 Pearl St., New York.

MONTANA HEARD FROM.—Recent railroad extensions have developed exceptionally fine mineral, stock and farming districts. Maps and full particulars, free, upon application to C. H. WARREN, Gen. Pass. Agt., St. Paul, Minn

STOCK IN MINNESOTA.—From an exclusive grain country, Minnesota is being rapidly tranformed into the finest stock and dairy State in the Union. Cheap lands still obtainable, convenient to railroad. Particulars, free, upon application to C. H. WARREN, Gen. Pass. Agt., St. Paul, Minn.

NEW BUSINESS CENTERS.—The building of railroads in a new and fertile country creates many new towns, affording excellent business opportunities. Particulars regarding such opportunities in Montana, Minnesota and Dakota will be sent upon application to C. H. WARREN, Gen. Pass. Agt., St. Paul, Minn.

PROSPEROUS. North Dakota never had better crops than those just harvested. Many opportunities to secure fine Government lands recently surveyed, near excellent coal fields and adjacent to railroads. Maps and full particulars, free, upon application to C. H. WARREN, Gen. Pass. Agt. St. Paul, Minn.

SUCCESS, Are you mortgaged, paying heavy rents, or running behind? Can you move to new location? Excellant lands, cheap, which will increase in value several fold in five years. No other such opportunities existing. Full particulars, free, upon application to C. H. WARREN, Gen. Pass. Agt., St. Paul, Minn.

FAILURE OF CROPS is an unknown experience in Central and Northern Dakota and Minnesota. Maps and full particulars regarding lands, prices, etc., sent free. Address C. H. WARREN, Gen. Pass. Agt., St. Paul, Minn.

WHY WORK FOR ANOTHER, or on small salary? Why continue working on a worn-out farm? Why try to secure a living from such high-priced or heavily mortgaged farms? Why work on rented land? WHY not start for yourself? Why not secure at once some of the low-priced but very fertile and well located lands adjacent to railroads now to be obtained by those going to Northern Dakota and Minnesota, where you can make a larger net profit per acre than on the high priced or worn-out land you now occupy? Why not go and look the situation over and see for yourself, or at least obtain further information, which will be sent free, if you will Address C. H. WARREN, Gen. Pass. Agt., St. Paul, Minn. ?

THE BROKEN SEAL;

This deeply interesting narative shows what Masonry has done and is capable of doing in the Courts, and how bad men control the good men in the lodge and protect their own members when guilty of great crimes. For sale at 221 W. MADISON ST., CHICAGO, by THE NATIONAL CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION

The Master's Carpet

BY

E. Ronayne.

Past Master of Keystone Lodge No. 639 Chicago.

Explains the true source and meaning of every ceremony and symbol of the Lodge, thus showing the principles on which the order is founded. By a careful perusal of this work, a more thorough knowledge of the principles of the order can be obtained than by attending the Lodge for years. Every Mason, every person contemplating becoming a member, and even those who are indifferent on the subject, should procure and carefully read this work. An appendix is added of 32 pages, embodying

Freemasonry at a Glance,

which gives every sign, grip and ceremony of the Lodge together with a brief explanation of each. The work contains 425 pages and is substantially and elegantly bound in cloth. Price, 75 cents. Address

BEREA EVANGELIST,

A monthly journal whose aim it is to advance

CHRISTIANITY

and to help break down everything that hinders its spread.

It teaches that men need to be converted to the personal Christ, and not simply to a system of truth, and that there must be implanted in them a divine life as well as a correct belief. The

EVANGELIST

seeks to show that the division of Christians into sects is a great wrong, and a very serious obstacle to the advancement of the Redeemer's kingdom, and it seeks to show Christians how they may be one in Christ, and to persuade and help them thus to unite. The

EVANGELIST.

also opposes Intemperance, Secret Societies, Worldliness, and the spirit of Caste, and aims to "war a good warfare" against all wrong.

Old Age and How to Enjoy It.

A most appropriate gift book for "The Old Folks at Home."

Compiled by REV. S. G. LATHROP.

Introduction by
REV. ARTHUR EDWARDS, D. D.,
(Editor N. W. Christian Advocate.)

The object of this volume is to give to that great army who are fast hastening toward the "great beyond" some practical hints and helps as to the best way to make the most of the remainder of that now is, and to give comfort and help life that is to come.

"It is a tribute to the Christianity that honors the gray head and refuses to consider the oldish man a burden or an obstacle. The book will aid and comfort every reader."—Northwestern Christian Advocate.

"The selections are very precious. Springing from such numerous and pure fountains, they can but afford a refreshing and healthful draught for every aged traveller to the great beyond."—Witness.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

COUNTRY.

A conference consisting of the Executive Committee of the Illinois River Improvement Convention, and prominent citizens of Illinois, Missouri and Iowa, discussed waterways last week. At a subsequent meeting of the committee a bill and memorial asking for an appropriation of $100,000 from Congress for the expenses of surveying a ship canal route from Chicago to the Illinois River, by a commission to be appointed for that purpose, were adopted, and a sub-committee appointed to convey them to Congress.

The Prohibition Convention of Kansas has elected the following delegates to the National Prohibition Convention to be held in Indianapolis, Ind., in June: Ex-Governor John P.St.John, of Olathe; M. V.B.Bennett, of Columbus; Mrs. Fannie Rastell, President of the Kansas W. C. T. U., and Rev. A. M. Richardson, of Lawrence.

About 13,000 miles of new track were laid in the United States during 1887, surpassing the record of all preceding years.

At a mass meeting held in San Francisco Wednesday night, Mayor Pond presiding, resolutions were passed calling Congress to enact laws excluding the Chinese from any entrance to the United States.

The $50,000 bonds voted by Beatrice, Neb., in aid of the Rock Island road, have been declared void by Judge Brady, who rules that no provision was made for paying the principal of the bonds.

Seventy five or a hundred Hungarian and Bohemian granite workmen at Hillsdale, Minn., striking for back pay, captured the telegraph office on a drunken riot Tuesday, and demanded the money in the safe, with revolvers at the operator's head A sheriff's posse has gone from Tower to quell the rioters, who had been working, up to the time of the strike, in getting out granite for the Auditorium Building in this city.

Nathan Reed, a resident of Lee county, Ga., who did not live happily with his wife, brutally murdered his whole family and then committed suicide. He sent a half-grown boy, who lived with him, after a doctor. When the doctor and boy returned they found the cabin a heap of smoking ruins, and in them the charred bodies of Reed's wife and six children. A further search of the premises disclosed Reed's body in the well with his throat cut.

Another disastrous wreck took place at Kouts, Ind., on the Chicago and Atlantic railroad. The second section of a freight train ran into the first in a blinding snowstorm, and a fireman lost his life.

Charles Hall, of Shelbyville, Ind., while officiating as Santa Claus at a Sabbath-school festival Wednesday night, was terribly burned from his clothes catching fire from the lights on the tree.

Patrick O'Brien, an Iowa contractor, was found freezing in a doorway at Cincinnati Wednesday night. He had been drinking, and on his person was found $8,000 in money and $6,000 in checks. The police express great surprise that the man had not been robbed.

Forty buildings at Wakefield, Wis., were burned Monday, including the bank, theater, postoffice, clothing and general stores, and a dozen saloons. The loss is placed at $100,000.

In Atchinson, Kas., a cow which had been bitten by a mad dog became furiously mad, and, breaking out of the pen in which she was confined, ran down the street. A Mrs. Hollis, who was in her path, was attacked and gored so badly that she died from the effects of her injuries.

Near Shelbyville, Ind., Saturday evening, Mrs. Sarah G. Ewing, aged 62, was attacked and killed by hogs, which then tore and mangled her body.

North and South bound passenger trains collided on the Cincinnati Southern Road near Greenwood, Ky., Saturday. The crash was terrible, the engines being so thrust together that they could not be separated. Eight persons were killed and many injured. The accident came from a conductor misreading his orders. There is no doubt that several persons were burned to death. A number of charred bodies were found where the smoking car of No. 1 was burned.

A dreadful smashup took place on the New York, Pennsylvania and Ohio railroad, five miles west of Meadville, Pa., the New York limited dashing into a freight train. Both trains were two hours late. Five persons were killed instantly, and sixteen badly injured.

During a fight between fifty schoolboys at Allegheny City Monday afternoon revolvers were drawn, and Joseph Johnston, aged ten, was fatally shot.

The Haddock murder case will be called in Sioux City to day, and it is believed the indictments against all the defendants in court will be nolle prossed. Three are fugitives.

FOREIGN.

Most of the German rivers are frozen over. Several of the Baltic ports, including Konigsberg, are closed. The southern and western rivers are covered with drifting ice, and it has been found necessary to remove the pontoon bridges. Railway traffic is greatly interrupted. In Thuringia and the Hartz Mountains the deer and other game are flocking to the villages for food. Several deaths from the effects of exposure are reported in various parts of Austria.

A passenger train collided with a snow-blocked freight train near Avila, Spain, on Thursday. Several persons were killed and others were seriously injured.

A battle was fought in the mountains near Guatemala recently between federal forces and revolutionists, ending in the rout and almost annihilation of the insurgents and the execution of the captured leaders.

During a hurricane at Halifax, N. S., Wednesday night, shipping and wharves were damaged, buildings partly wrecked, and trees and fences leveled.

During the performance in the theater at Carthagena, Spain, Friday evening, a broker occupying one of the stalls committed suicide by exploding a dynamite cartridge. The concussion extinguished all the lights in the house, and the audience, becoming panic-strcken, fled from the building. During the excitement over 100 persons were more or less injured.

The temperance party was defeated at Toronto Monday, losing their candidate for Mayor and by law to reduce the number of taverns and shop licenses, by large majorities.

Mail advices from China state that a powder magazine containing forty thousand kilogramms of powder exploded at Amoy Nov 21, doing immense damage. The force of the explosion was very great. A quarter of the buildings of the town were laid in ruins. Fifty soldiers were blown to atoms, and several hundred inhabitants killed.

THE CHRISTIAN CNOSURE,

The CYNOSURE represents the Christian movement against the Secret Lodge System; discusses fairly and fearlessly the various movements of the lodge as they appear to public view, and reveals the secret machinery of corruption in politics, courts, and social and religious circles.
There are in the United States
Some 200 different Lodges,
With 2,000,000 members,
Costing $20,000,000 yearly.
This mighty world power confronts the church and seeks to rule and ruin every Christian Reform.
No Christian Reform Movement of the day is so necessary, yet so unpopular and beset with difficulties, as that which would remove the dark pall of oaths, dark-lantern meetings, secret signs, mysterious and pagan worship about altars condemned by the Word of the Living God.
No other paper gives the best of its correspondence and editorial strength to this vitally important reform. The CYNOSURE should be your paper in addition to any other you may take.
Because it is the representative of the reform against the Lodge, with ablest arguments, biographical and historical sketches, letters from lecturers, seceders and sufferers from lodge persecution. The ablest writers on this subject from all denominations and all parts of the country contribute. Special departments for letters from our metropolitan centers, on the relation of secret orders to current events.
The CYNOSURE began its twentieth volume September 22, 1887, with features of special and popular interest.

Last Wednesday States Attorney Marsh moved to dismiss all the indictments against the Haddock murder conspirators, except for the three men who have never been arrested. The result of the last trial of Arensdorf proved the futility of further pursuing the case, and the rum demon has his triumph. Arensdorf and probably the whole red-handed gang will be driven out. The ring-leader goes to Milwaukee to find a place to pursue his vile trade of brewing. At least let us hope the martyrdom of Haddock cleared one city of the liquor curse.

As Mr. Moody left Pittsburgh, he urged Francis Murphy to return to his own city and follow the revival work with a special effort for drinking men. The latter left Chicago to follow the suggestion, but an unhappy difference has arisen, and it is reported that the churches are closed to the temperance evangelist and their pastors do not co-operate. One of them explained that they were compelled to take back seats, and there was too much Murphy about the meetings. This inharmonious state of things is to be regretted. Mr. Murphy is intensely personal in his meetings, he could not do battle in any armor but his own: and it should not be taken unkindly by the pastors that workers in the good cause can be found without calling on them. Murphy is daily visiting the work-shops of Pittsburgh and Allegheny, holding meetings, exhorting to a better life and getting signers to the pledge.

Ex-Governor Alger, of Detroit, is one of the wealthiest men in Michigan, and has a generous heart. A year ago he made the hearts of thousands glad by gifts of clothing and food. The other day he repeated the pleasant task by taking five hundred poor boys to different clothing stores and giving them a complete outfit from head to foot; and by the aid of churches and charitable societies distributed wood, coal and flour to a thousand worthy families where poverty hung about the door. This generosity ought to be infectious, though it is not strictly according to the Christian plan (See Matthew 6:3). But is quite different from the lodge plan likewise; and we are glad to note in the Detroit Freemason that Gen. Alger is not a member of that order. He is surely giving to our rich men an example of the surest way to get the most happiness from money.

The great strike on the Reading railroad involves so many interests that it is not likely to be long since the suffering is so sharp. In 1874, when a similar strike occurred, the losses sustained by merchants and trades-people in the region was reckoned at $1,500,000, under which 200 merchants entirely failed, and over 1,200 barely escaped. They will not be caught again, and are of course bringing every influence on the company to yield. But in the meeting of the directors the other day, President Corbin was sustained, and a motion to appoint George W. Childs arbitrator was voted down. "The engineers' and firemen's brotherhoods" have resisted the strike, though they may be Knights of Labor. The "grand master" of one of these "brotherhoods" has telegraphed that no "bulldozing" on the part of the Knights of Labor will be permitted. The Reading company is therefore able to run trains, but there is no coal to load them.

The call from New York, resulting from the Evangelical Alliance meeting in Washington, which appears on our 12th page, roused the dormant Chicago branch into holding a meeting last Monday. Nearly all the prominent pastors of the city were present; and the temperance question was well discussed and a petition adopted for the closing of saloons on the Sabbath day, which will be circulated. On this topic Dr. P. S. Henson said Chicago, with all its self-glorification, was mean beyond most cities on the continent in the shamelessness of its violation of the Sunday laws. There were now no city officers pledged to this reform, even under a reform administration, because the crafty hand of Mephistopheles had secured the repeal of the Sunday law. There was a State law, but possibly its officers were inefficient or careless. He had noticed when gambling was suppressed that the Chief of Police had a conference with the gamblers, warned them, and they quit. If the Chief of Police and the Mayor should do the same with the saloon-keepers we might have a decenter Sabbath and fewer murders. It might interfere with the Mayor's political aspirations, but if public sentiment was aroused, the people stirred, and the pulpits thundered their righteous anathemas, good would follow as surely as the sun rose.

Mr. Lamar has resigned the portfolio of the Secretary of the Interior in a candid letter to President Cleveland. He thinks that the Senate may delay his confirmation, his successor is waiting, and the vacancy in the Supreme Court should be filled. It is an honorable plea for lenient judgment upon his action In taking a place which the vote of the Senate may not allow him to retain. The Senate Committee on Judiciary discussed the case Saturday. A test vote was taken and there will undeniably be two reports, the majority being against confirmation. It is a question how the Senate will stand, but it is generally believed that the Presidents' nomination will be approved by a narrow majority. The nomination is in many respects unfortunate. A nominee for the Supreme Bench should be above the suspicions that delay confirmation. Mr. Lamar's personal integrity and ability are not denied; but his legal attainments are narrow, and his public utterances respecting recent amendments to the Constitution, on which, and on legislation depending on them he will have to decree as judge, are decidedly against him. His views of American citizenship, too, as seen in his denial of Jeff. Davis's treason make us hope for his rejection.

The General Executive Committee of the Knights of Labor order met in Philadelphia Tuesday, over the Reading strike. But the local managers of the order have carried on their work with too strong a hand to now withdraw, should the General Executive Board order the men back to work. The case is similar to the Stock Yards strike in this city, which began with a miserable pretense and ended not only in failure, but before it is forgotten may break up the Knights of Labor. Powderly's order at that time, though just, was yet despotic, according to the constitution of the organization; and the anarchist sympathizers who run the order in this city have made it the beginning of division. The long meeting in St. Paul saw several struggles between the factions, and the anti-Powderly crowd have just issued a "secret" circular calling for a general rebellion against Powderly, and a reorganization of the order. Their main charge is "the gradual absorption by, and concentration in the General Executive Board and its wily agents of a power which now "does arrogantly deny to members of the great labor organization, of which they are paid servants and we paying members, rights which in this country Presidents, Senators or courts have never refused to the humblest wage-workers in the land." The trouble with these poor men is their ignorance of the nature of secretism. The lodge system is inevitably despotic. Had they heard the warning of the N. C. A. they might have escaped their present anguish of spirit by avoiding its certain source.

THE INDIANS AND THEIR LEADERS IN THE REBELLION.

BY HON. S. C. POMEROY.

Having in a series of reminiscences last year spoken of those men who led the Southern States into apostasy from the general Government, of the causes which inspired them, and the means they adopted, it would be a mistake to omit the fact that they not only led astray their own people and compelled them to sustain the rebellion, but also seduced five of the Indian nations which were most advanced in civilization, and caused them to apostatize from their faith in the Government. That atrocious proceeding will be the subject of this article.

The Indian tribes have always been regarded as a people by themselves, having their own laws and customs, and not citizens of the United States, or of any State; so they held no allegiance to any section, North or South, or to any government save their own. That was their legal status. The four or five civilized nations south of Kansas, in what is known as the Indian county, were rich in cattle, lands, and annuities from the government of the United States. In all the earlier years of our history the Indian tribes have been dealt with by treaties, and the United States government has appointed agents, and supported them among the Indians.

The tribes of which I now write were well advanced in civilization before they left the old States. There had been faithful and earnest missionaries among them, and these missions had been removed to the Territories where the nations moved. The Cherokees, Chicasaws, Choctaws and Seminoles were as prosperous, had as good schools, and were as well civilized as the majority of the people in the States where they had lived.

Since these tribes adopted civilized habits, and took our schools and language, they have increased rather than diminished in their population. Before that, and during their wild state, there had been a constant wasting away. At the date of the Revolutionary war, there were as many Indians as white people upon what is now the territory of the United States. After two hundred and fifty years, they have diminished to about 260,000, all told. History nowhere else records the destruction of a people of three millions to a quarter of one million within such a brief period, although they had no serious wars, or famine, or pestilence. The case comes down to this: the Indian has had the contact of bad white men, and their bad whisky.

During the late war, the Cherokees, Creeks and Seminoles—tribes which held few, if any slaves, furnished over three full regiments for the union cause. They were good soldiers, rendering most efficient service. The Choctaws and Chicasaws, were originally in great part from the State of Mississippi, and held some slaves. They had at the date of the rebellion a slaveholder, D. H. Cooper, for agent, and one Albert Pike as their adviser and attorney, and as a friend to represent them and look after their interests at Washington. These two men managed the affairs of these two tribes, and for a long time seemed to enjoy their confidence.

During the administration of General Jackson, great efforts were made to remove these tribes from their primitive location, and have them take lands west of the Mississippi River. They owned the most valuable lands in the State of Mississippi, which thhe cotton planters wanted. The government applied both peaceable and forcible means for their removal. I remember reading their most pathetic lamentation upon leaving their homes and the graves of their fathers, when I was but a school boy.

Upon examination of old records, I find that while they were yet living in the State of Mississippi, the legislature passed laws embracing these tribes within the jurisdiction of their State laws; and under the state Sovereignity doctrine, they demanded of Andrew Jackson, President of the United States, "That these Indians be removed, or they be required to submit to State authority." To avoid a quarrel and conflict with that State, Jackson sent Gen. Eaton down there "to secure their removal at any cost." So he undertook, and finally succeeded, in making a treaty securing their removal. To do it he said (See House Doc. No. 98, of 1873, p. 40): "It is not your lands but your happiness we seek." "We seek no advantage, and will take none." "Your great father (Jackson) could not approve of such a cause." "He has sent us not as traitors but as friends and brothers to act as such." With this lie on their lips, and with both treachery and deceit in their hearts, they induced these confiding Indians to cede their country to the United States, upon a promise of payment, which to this day has not been fulfilled! These Indians were hurried off, and left their claims for their lands and other sums due them, to be settled for, by their attorney and agent. On they were driven with great sufferings and great losses. Hundreds died on the way. Their herds and flocks perished on the route or were left behind for those eager to seize their lands and their improvements.

Now is seen the part enacted by their trusted friends Cooper and Pike, the one their agent, the other their attorney. When an agent or attorney deserts his clients, abandons their cause, or sells out to the other side, it is such a record of disgrace and infamy that the man is entitled to no standing in any civilized society.

The House of Representatives, by its Committee on Indian affairs, in 1873, ordered an investigation into all these frauds upon the Indian tribes. That investigation was had, and published in House Document No. 98, of that year. I quote from that document, from which it will be seen that by those guardians of the Indians, so far as these civilized tribes are concerned, they were awfully swindled, wofully deceived, seduced into the service of the Rebellion, and their money taken for the benefit of Cooper and Albert Pike. To sustain this, I quote from House Doc. No. 98, page 495:

WASHINGTON, D. C., May 22nd, 1872.

Albert Pike, sworn and examined by the chairman of the committee.

Question.—Be kind enough to state your name, residence and occupation.

Answer.—Albert Pike—Washington—a lawyer.

Q.—Are you acquainted with the Choctaw and Chicasaw people?

A.—Yes. I have been acquainted with their country since 1852.

Q.—Do you know anything of their financial condition—in relation to accounts between them and the United States?

A.—Yes. I made a treaty with them for the Confederate States....paid them money....I have forgotten the amount.

Q.—Do you know anything about the manner in which Gen. Cooper expended moneys for them in 1861, as agent of these Indians?

A.—No sir. I only know he received $134,000 to buy corn....I do not know what he did with it.

The reader must bear in mind the Indians never got a bushel of that corn, as will hereafter appear.

Q.—Did he deliver any portion of that to you as a Confederate officer?

A.—No sir... I was employed by the Choctaws before the war....I was paid a certain amount of general fees. Then an additional fee, over and above the others.... In the winter of 1861 he (Cooper) paid me $1,800....I do not think it was out of the corn money....I was paid toward my compensation as attorney.....In 1862 Gen. Cooper turned over to me as a Confederate officer some money, which he said was in his hands, as agent of these Indians, belonging to the United States.

Q.—How much did he turn over?

A.—Five thousand dollars. I was in command of the Indian country at the time, as brigadier general in the Confederate service. Cooper was agent for the Chicasaws and Choctaws, under my appointment.....He was also in the Confederate service under me; first as colonel, afterwards as brigadier general....I needed money for the troops. I told him I would receive it. He brought it, in Confederate money.

Thus under oath Pike confessed he did take money from Cooper, knowing it to be Indian money coming from the United States. That money was paid Gen. Cooper in gold coin. He paid Pike in "Confederate money"!

On the 2d day of March, 1861, the act of that date was passed by Congress, appropriating $500,000 in part payment of the Choctaw claim for lands ceded before they left Mississippi—"$250,000 cash, $250,000 in United States bonds. The cash they got! The bonds were held back by a subsequent act of Congress. Cooper drew that money, when at the time he was a defaulter for $140,931.52."

On page 83, the above report says: "Cooper was also a defaulter to the full amount of $140,931.52 (over and above this sum of $250,000) from the 31st day of March, 1861, to this time. Eleven years and eleven months at 6 per cent. would amount to $100,766.03; making a total $241,697.55. Cooper is also defaulter to the Choctaws as well as the Chicasaws. Cooper did buy corn for the Choctaw people that spring; but he sold it on the way up the Red River, for the sums above stated," and he spent the money; the Indians got none. It must be borne in mind that these men had given in their adhesion to the rebel cause before they got this money! So they knew the character of the acts they were performing. They knew they were to misappropriate that money! It was a false pretense which they put forth when they came to the United States Treasury and receipted for the appropriation in the name of these outraged Indians.

I am not now alluding to their crime of rebellion, but to their crimes of cheating the Indians; to their frauds upon them—on the U. S. Treasurer, who by this time was Salmon P. Chase, of Ohio. I can understand how honest men can be lead to follow their States in rebellion, but tell me how honest men can plunder the defenseless; can steal their money; and carry the gold of the United States, appropriated for Indian support, to their own pockets, or the coffers of the rebellion? To have had this money taken in war by an enemy would have been bad enough. The crime of rebellion was bad enough, for men fattening upon Government office, and being educated and fed from its bounty. But this crime of leading astray the Indian; squandering his money; demoralizing his home and country; abandoning him to defeat, to want and sorrow,—these crimes make a page of history, growing darker and blacker as the years pass away.

BOTTOM LINE WORK.

BY REV. M. A. GAULT.

I wrote recently to a leading W. C. T. U. worker in a Missouri county-seat for a lecture announcement before their Union. The result is a good illustration of how secretism shuts the door against reform work. This lady laid the matter before the Union. The secretary, a lady whose father was a Mason, had been at Lake Bluff last summer, and sympathized with the attack of John B. Finch on the National Christian Association. She opposed my lecturing under the auspices of the Union, for she had observed that I sympathized with the anti-secret cause. My correspondent is a devoted friend of our cause, and at one time president of the Union, but was unable to secure a meeting for me. She says that on account of the stand she has taken against secretism, she is called a crank, and has been cast out of the synagogue, and has lost her influence with the "Good-Lord, good-devil" type of believers. This devoted woman is sighing and crying over the state of affairs, and says she is praying that God will bring light out of the darkness. She is satisfied that a great warfare, and much persecution and trial awaits us before the work is accomplished.

It is a serious question what our duty is in such a case. Many will say, Let this question of secretism alone; it will only hurt our work. But I have often read the reply Miss Willard made in her address at the Ohio W. C. T. U. convention, when some said that to favor third party prohibition would hurt their work by making it unpopular, and thereby shutting off contributions. Miss Willard said: "Have we not said a thousand times, that to stand for principle can bring us only good in the long run? To be sure we may lose money, and doubtless shall for a while, but our true riches are not in banks or specie, and have never been. I often think our Heavenly Father deems it better that we should not be wealthy, either as individuals or a society. Devotion, energy, enthusiasm, of these nobody can deprive us, and to stand for the embodiment of our principles in a party that shall grow to be the balance of power, and afterward the arbiter of destiny in this great controversy; to help onward such a vast movement is the greatest good to which we can lend our influence."

Let such words be emphasized at the present juncture. Building so near the foundation in our great reform work, let us be careful that nothing but enduring granite goes into the walls. In laying the foundation of the peers of the St. Louis bridge, if some had insisted on putting blocks of cottonwood alternately with the granite, how unwise to have allowed it just for the sake of peace. Let us remember that we are building for the generations to come. Our work must be submitted to a fiery ordeal, and nothing will endure but immutable principles.

Another thought has come to me often—that expressed in these words by Wendell Phillips: "Build from the bottom line of true reform; build the pyramid from the base, not from the apex." The present duty of national reformers and anti-secret reformers is not to go to conventions like the recent Alliance at Washington, where neither Dr. French nor Bro. Stevenson could get a hearing on special reforms, but to go to the people in less influential centers, where they are better prepared for the reception of the truth. It is seldom that D. D.s and L. L. D.s will take up a reform question until it becomes popular with the masses. Another important saying of Wendell Phillips was, that "No reform, moral or intellectual, ever came from the upper classes of society. Each and all," says he, "comes up from the protest of martyr and victim."

MASONIC MINISTERS.

BY ELDER N. CALLENDER.

Matthew Henry, the shrewd commentator, somewhere remarks that "a wicked man is the wickedest of creatures, a wicked Christian is the wickedest of men, and a wicked minister is the wickedest of Christians." May I not add that a Masonic preacher is the wickedest of ministers? By Masonic minister I mean one who loves and adheres to Masonry and at the same time professes to preach the Gospel of Christ. Can any one but a hypocrite do this? Hypocrites make very wicked professors and more wicked ministers. Is it better always to err on the side of charity? Often it may be. But in a world where millions of souls are led by false prophets such as Masonic ministers, it is a question whether it is best to err on the side of charity and embrace an apostate as a prophet, or stand aloof from a real prophet till we have tried and proved him true.

Can a man be less than an apostate, who falls from Christianity to Freemasonry? Freemasonry defined is simply anti-Christ. I will stake my reputation upon the truth of this proposition. The Bible proofs of this would make a respectable volume. Is there a religion in the world that more definitely antagonizes the Gospel? It can be made to appear that Masonry antagonizes every rule of the Decalogue and every fundamental principle of the New Testament. Is it our duty, through the plea of toleration or the plea of charity, to fraternize with such men? Can we do so and be consistent? How can we and not disobey God who forbids fellowshiping such? And then I dare not become responsible for the great harm that such a course would do. Must we then discriminate between Masonic and true ministers of Jesus? Is not the task a grave and a severe one?

Yea, verily, and full of embarrassment. Unwelcome as the task is, it is the better alternative. Let me not seem to fellowship what my very being shrinks from as a moral pest. Though it pains my soul to do so, I must be true to my convictions, and as I see things, true to my God. Whence comes this painful predicament? Who is responsible for it? He who turns to "another gospel which is not another." Has not the time for separation come? Paul regarded the Galatians who turned from the Gospel to the law as "bewitched." What must be thought of those who turn from the Gospel to Freemasonry? We can see a reason why a Jew should go back to the law of Moses and to the old rite for justification; but for a professed Christian and a minister to go back to the religion of Baal is too much for us to fellowship.

Out of respect to the memory of the dead we attend the funeral of a neighbor and find a Mason in the desk to officiate. We are invited up. We refuse to sit with such a man because in so doing we must in some measure sanction a Christless, heathen religion. Such a trial we recently had. And the Masonic minister, though an old man, of a family, had conducted an illicit correspondence with another man's wife under an assumed name, "Jennie Dalby," and broke the marriage tie between that woman and her husband. If he was not a brother Mason, as he probably was not, then he violated no Masonic law. Said minister ingeniously withdrew from his conference and yielded his ordination papers without standing trial. He is now preaching under the sanctions of his conference, I am informed. I believe he is held up by the lodge. Lodgery will cripple and debauch the church in exact proportion as she gives it her fellowship. Fellowshiping evil is contamination by it, and no power in earth or heaven can prevent the effect.

I am glad to note that in Scranton City there is one Baptist pastor who stands erect on the lodge question. A late incident will illustrate. One of the champions of embryo Masonry (Good Templarism) lectured on temperance in the new church located in the part of the city called Providence. After he got through speaking he proceeded to find the required number, ten, to organize a Good Templar lodge. They had reached the number, less two, when a boy of 15 years, who belonged to the church, was asked to be one of the required number. A ringing NO was the answer; whereupon the brave and good pastor rose and said, "I have no faith in lodges, and don't want any lodge organized in this church." No lodge was organized there.

How often this contemptible trap has been sprung on the pastors of the churches! None but the cheek, "puffed up" by lodgery, is capable of such affrontery.

GOD'S AMBASSADOR.

He that negotiates between God and man
As God's ambassador the grand concerns
Of judgment and of mercy, should beware
Of lightness in his speech. 'Tis pitiful
To court a grin when you should woo a soul,
To break a jest when pity would inspire
Pathetic exhortation; and to address
The skittish fancy with facetious tales,
When sent with God's commission to the heart;
So did not Paul. Direct me to a quip
Or merry turn in all he ever wrote,
And I consent you take it for your text;
Your only one till sides and benches fail.
No; he was serious in a serious cause,
And understood too well the weighty terms
That he had taken in charge, and could not stoop
To conquer those by jocular exploits
Whom truth and soberness assailed in vain.

THE CHURCH AND THE LABOR QUESTION.

[Address before the Evangelical Alliance Congress at Washington, D. C , Dec. 8, 1887, by Geo. May Powell, Chairman American Arbitration Council.]

Three years' intense work in seeking to aid in securing Christian settlements of strikes and lockouts, and in advancing other phases of right in the labor question, has taught us that the influence of Evangelical religion has been the star of hope in one of the darkest, wildest storms that ever swept over our country.

In this work we have sometimes needed the counsel and influence of Senators, and merchant princes, and others. All these have received us kindly, but we have never found any practical co-operation except from such of these men as were sons of the church.

We all see that there are millions of money involved in these struggles; but we consider even these vast sums small, beside the hunger and cold, and mental and other physical sufferings of women and children, and of poor, helpless, honest men who are more than willing to work. But all these millions of dollars, and all this suffering combined, are small beside the moral questions at stake. Giving a man work, is often to save him. By parity of reasoning, to throw him out of work is to lose him, and it may be his family, soul as well as body. Therefore, as the Government Labor Bureau Chief has well said in substance, "The labor question is one of ethics." Hence the propriety of discussing it in such a presence as this, in the form of the "Relation of the Church to the Capital and Labor Question."

If this question is viewed through sordid and selfish lenses, it is as enigmatic as the handwriting once on a Babylonian palace wall. Its solution will confuse and baffle those most wise in worldly wisdom. Yet seen and analyzed in the light of a sermon once delivered on a Syrian mountain for a pulpit, its interpretation is arrived at with more than the clearness and precision of algebra.

In the work of my Committee we have not been able to settle as many of these industrial turmoils as we could wish; but we have, directly and indirectly, settled those involving hundreds of millions of dollars. Better still, we have helped those most directly interested, to see how to settle them for themselves. Thinking they had done it themselves, they were better satisfied, and so made more willing to abide more steadfastly by the results.

Our work has also been so blessed, that we have been enabled to "side-track" some gathering labor troubles off into profit-sharing, or into productive co-operative measures.

In all these lines of effort we have relied largely on scattering hundreds of millions of tract pages on arbitration, and other Christian measures, through the secular and religious press. See for example, "Strikes, Lockouts and Arbitration," an article in the Century Magazine of April, 1886. In it there were about a quarter million issue of rules of arbitration which we had tested in strike settlements which we had successfully organized and completed; also notes and comments on the same, making it easy for many others to satisfactorily use them, as many did, all over the country, without any further action on our part. Over a further million of these rules were issued and scattered through republication from this magazine, by local newspapers from ocean to ocean. Better still, accounts of how such troubles had been prevented by such conciliation as that in the Peace Courts of France, and by the culture of Christian relations between those earning and paying wages, was set forth in that paper and its more than a million re-issue. See also an address of ours on the general subject of Industrial Friction before the Managers of the Chicago Board of Trade, October 26, 1886, and an address on "Profit-sharing" we gave at the Social Science Congress at Saratoga, September 9, 1887.

We treat liquor and tobacco as the great side-track of waste of billions of the people's money, and Christian temperance work, especially that of the W. C. T. U., as the track to run this treasure into the true economic interests of labor and capital. We claim that "under-consumption" is a term giving truer diagnosis of one great cause of labor trouble, than "over-production." Because: When the mass of the people spend the two billions or more of dollars, now worse than wasted annually in drink and dissipation, in buying home-made products sorely needed in their homes, the song of labor will be pitched in the major instead of the minor key.

In our public papers and addresses, we recognize home and city missions—especially the latter—as the Gibraltar of this whole subject. But we find, too, the weakness, as well as all the strength we have, in the church. For example: We see in the Sabbath the base line of this campaign. The question being "one of ethics," conscience is its spinal column, and the Sabbath the day for it to be given strength, so that laborers and capitalists may see just what the golden rule demands of them, and have grace given to act accordingly. Yet an address on the Sabbath question given by a prominent city pastor, which we hoped to use with good effect, turned out instead to be a weapon of the enemy. He treated the Sabbath of the Puritan as having no foundation in the New Testament. He took the specific ground that as the curved line is "the line of beauty in art," so we must vary our practice in Sabbath observance by changing demands of our times. He even sneered at the Puritanism of one who would not ride on a Sunday street-car.

Aside from the theater being the lock of strength of the Demon of Impurity, we recognize it as a terrible enemy to the economic interests of labor and capital in exclusively secular senses. It is the place where tens of thousands of skilled workmen and women actually spend a majority of their earnings. They do this to an extent that keeps them sharply up to the danger line financially. Consequently, in time of labor trouble, the most natural tending is to swell the ranks of the dangerous classes. Notwithstanding this was set forth in a request by our commission to a large and influential body of clergy to do some of the kind of preaching on this subject that hits something, they declined. Investigation gave us sadly significant proof that they declined for fear of consequences of hitting paying and influential members and officers of their churches. But we will not now further multiply this class of unpleasant illustrations.

Antinomianism in the church, active as well as passive, is a twin brother of anarchy. It is seen in the treatment of domestic servants; in slack twistedness on such subjects as the Sunday press, and amusement questions; in many a church member giving more money for either theaters or tobacco, than for all good purposes put together.

Still, what is wanted, even more than money, is for every Christian man, woman and child to be an active, every-day missionary.

No man or woman is likely to become an anarchist, or in any unwise sense a labor agitator, who has been the subject of personal mission work by any Christian worker, young or old. When these sons and daughters of the church are each simply doing the kind of daily mission work that their own spiritual health, nay, life demands, labor troubles, and others like them, will vanish like morning mists when the sun arises in its strength.

THE RIGHT UNION.

It has been the hope of the laboring man to join with his brother tradesman in a union. This union has had but the one purpose of furthering its own wages at the expense of its employers, of the public, and of the interests of law and order. If the union won in any battle, territory accrued to its empire—that is, wages went higher. If it lost, oppression came. Higher wages meant right; lower wages meant wrong. Owing to the moral weakness of such an evangel it may be sorrowfully said that the unions have in effect been right. They have not been able to get too much wages, though there be nothing in their code of ethics that would reject such a consummation. They have suffered unending defeats. Into this union they would admit no man who was not selfishly interested in obtaining higher wages. He might love his city, he might dread strikes, he might dislike bossism, but if he were not a working carpenter he could not be true to the carpenter's union, said the elect. All but working carpenters were enemies. Consolidating, the unions at last formed vast federations, and though they might call on lawyers to write the deeds of their association, still no lawyer, of all the professionals, should join. It is safe to say that the carpenter who thus tabooed the lawyers never bought a house or took a mortgage without the aid of one of these men whom he has thoroughly branded as constitutional enemies of society. On a platform which declares that only manual toil is fair to mankind the craftsmen have striven to better the state. Have they succeeded? Will they succeed? Are they now so sure they are right as they were in 1868? Is not the employer as proficient in the art of selfishness as the employe?

Pushed thus to the necessity of adopting unselfish principles, what should the union man do? He should form his union on the true lines. The State of Illinois is his union. Anything that shall be really good for carpenters will be good for Illinois, either now or in the long run. A play at narrow unionism between Gould and the telegraphers has ended with Gould in complete control and telegraphers in full rout. Now let the workingmen "join the State" on the basis of justice to all. Under such an organization, where no Illinoisan desired to rob, it would soon grow very uncomfortable for all stock-waterers and would-be oppressors.—Chicago Herald.

In the New Englanders' late commemoration of Forefather's Day, December 22, in New York, General Horace Porter said, "The rugged old Puritan, firm of purpose and stout of heart, had the courage of his convictions; he counseled not with his fears. He neither looked to the past with regret, nor to the future with apprehension. He might have been a zealot; he was never a hypocrite. He might have been eccentric; he was never ridiculous. He was a Hercules rather than an Adonis. In his wars he fired hot shot. He did not send in flags of truce, he led forlorn hopes, he did not follow the wake of changes." "He was a grand character in history. We took off our hats to him. We salute his memory. In his person were combined the chivalry of knighthood, the favor of the crusader, the wit of Gascony and the courage of Navarre."

During an exciting temperance campaign in Lake City, Fla., four temperance girls invited a young man, who was very influential on the other side, around behind the court house. They asked him to be seated, and, then surrounding him, closely held him a prisoner until the polls were closed. He was a gentlemanly young man, and, as he could not get away without being rude, he submitted gracefully. Temperance won the day.—Waterbury American.

When Jesus came into our earth, the world turned him out of doors; but when he comes to sanctify, he turns the world out of doors. Reader, has he turned the world out of thy doors, the doors of thy heart?

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 7th, 1888.

The first week in January having been made a week of prayer by all the Christian churches throughout the world, union meetings among the different denominations are held, and those conducted by the women in this city are particularly interesting. The meetings are held early in the morning and at noon. The first sunrise meeting ever had in Washington was held on Monday morning at the Congregational church.

President Cleveland, along with the European grandees, felt moved to send a Jubilee gift to the Pope. But in his choice he was wiser than they: he sent a handsomely framed copy of the United States Constitution. This was presented, you remember, through Cardinal Gibbons, instead of through Mr. Stallo, the American Minister at Rome. The circumstance provoked some comment, but it seems the President had a very good reason for this new departure. Mr. Stallo is not on good terms with the Catholics at Rome and would not have been received by the Vatican if he had presented himself. It is stated that at a banquet in the "Eternal" city to which the American was invited, one of the cardinals of the Sacred College was among the guests, and that Minister Stallo, after creating a scene by announcing that he would not participate in any entertainment in Rome where Catholic clergymen were invited,withdrew from the house. I would not like to vouch for the truth of this whole story, but it indicates a stalwart devotion to conviction in our Italian Minister. It is not surprising that Mr. Cleveland thought it necessary to take another channel through which to make a present to the Pope.

The Fisheries Commission resumed its meetings to-day in the Diplomatic reception room of the State Department. This is the most sumptuous apartment which Uncle Sam has yet furnished. The distinguished conferees have had a long rest from their leisurely labors. The English representatives of the Commission have been visiting the Canadian Capital, and other Canadian cities for the past few weeks, where they were lionized as much perhaps as they were in this city. They claimed that Washington, when they left it, was the most hospitable city they had ever seen. They were not allowed to dine once at their hotel while here. The Commission holds but two sessions a week. I suppose this slow pace is maintained in its work in order to be in keeping with its dignity as the special international parliament.

Since I last wrote you, our lawmakers have returned from their holiday vacation to their desks in the Capitol, and the brilliant festivities of New Year's Day have inaugurated the season's social life in the official world. No doubt is expressed that the season in the fashionable world will be as gay and giddy and brilliant as the lightest-winged butterflies of Washington society could wish. But Congress is more of an unknown quantity. It is hoped and there is some reason for believing that it will settle down earnestly to the great tasks before it, and that the session will be one marked for hard work and good work, but it is not safe to predict or to hope too much from Congress. It has disappointed us too often. The countryman's caricature is not altogether undeserved. He named his slowest horse "Congress," because said the facetious farmer, he never passes anything.

As usual, on New Year's Day, the scene at the White House was interesting. According to a custom instituted by and honored since the time of Washington, the President was "at home" to receive the greetings and calls of ceremony, duty, courtesy, curiosity, or good will and friendship, from all classes of people. This annual reception embodies all the ceremony and all the glitter which our republican simplicity allows. The Supreme Court, the Diplomatic Corps, with its foreign Court costumes, silver and gold lace and royal decorations, then Congress, officers of the Army and Navy, in full uniform, the Civil service, the District officials, various organizations, and lastly the people, prominent and obscure, rich and poor, passed through the suite of parlors and grasped the Presidential hand and that of the first lady of the land. The old mansion was in gala dress for the event. Flowers were in profusion everywhere, and the ceremony, happy in its traditions, went on with a program similar to that followed in the early days, and without any disturbing accident or incident worthy of mention. So smoothly did all the arrangements made for last Monday's occasion run, that it has been called the most perfectly managed reception ever held at the White House. *

PRESS COMMENT.

Certain labor organizations have resolved to boycott the product of some of the Milwaukee brewers because of their treatment of their employes. The greatest blessing that could befall the working classes of America as a whole would be the boycotting of the products of all breweries and distilleries, wherever located. Whisky and beer are their worst enemies, the worst enemies of their families, of their prosperity and of their general welfare.—Chicago Eve. Journal.

A circular signed by the Rev. F. F. Jewell, pastor of the Methodist church in San Jose, is creating considerable consternation in religious and temperance circles at the present time. In it the reverend gentleman objects to Senator Stanford endowing a university for the young with money derived from an industry which is annually causing the ruin of hundreds of young men, and he asks all religious and temperance organizations to file protests, to be presented to Senator Stanford, asking him to endow his university with money derived from some other source than the product of the vine. —San Francisco Examiner.

We gave some account, in our issue of October 6th, of the impression made by Profs. Drummond and Simpson, of Edinburgh, which we had heard. The opinion was expressed that possibly a process of salvation by doing rather than by at once believing on Christ was being taught by these distinguished men. The Signal, a thoroughly sound and excellent magazine, published in Edinburgh, quotes, in its December number, what we said and adds, "We are very far from being surprised at the doubts and apprehensions expressed by our much esteemed American contemporary." The Signal strongly dissents from the statements made by the Professors that "the strongly intellectual and brightest minds (among the students in the Universities and Colleges of Scotland) are skeptical or infidel." It closes its remarks by saying. "It is strange that we hear so much abroad about the great work in Edinburgh, when we see so little evidence of it at our doors." —Christian Instructor.

If Dakota is admitted shall Utah come also? It appears that not a few Democrats in the House are foolish enough to propose this arrangement in order to secure a Democratic to balance a Republican State, and it is asserted that the Administration rather encourages the idea. But the more intelligent among the Democrats must know what a risky step this would be, and what a storm would be excited against their party by it. The religious people of America, both North and South, have the same opinion of the "Latter Day Saints" that they always have had. But for the restraining power of the Supreme Court it would not be possible to keep their abhorrence of this polygamous sect within the bounds of toleration. And every man who voted to place polygamy beyond the restraint of national law, would be marked for political extinction. Not only the individual members, but the party to which they adhered would suffer for their action. And then, even if the House agreed to the measure, the Senate would be sure to reject it by more than all the Republican votes.

Of course the proposal to admit Utah will be based on the new State constitution, which forbids polygamy. But the whole Gentile population of the Territory, Democratic as well as Republican, have warned the country that such a prohibition is valueless, as it would never be enforced by any government elected by the majority, the "Saints."—The American, Philadelphia.

REFORM NEWS.

THE ARKANSAS CHURCHES PREPARING FOR THE LORD.

CHURCH AND SCHOOL WORK AT LITTLE ROCK—CASTE AND SECTARIANISM.

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Jan. 4, 1888.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—My stay at Pine Bluff was not so profitable as was to be desired. The people were all absorbed in the "holidays," and had little time or thought for reform principles and teachings. Nevertheless some seed was sown. I spoke three times and distributed a good many tracts that were gladly accepted.

On the 30th I came to Little Rock, forty miles, by the Arkansas Valley Railroad, which, like all other roads of this State, might be improved. Little Rock I found to be a pleasant, growing city of about 33,000 inhabitants. It has three rather spicy daily papers, and several weeklies. There is about the usual proportion of colored and white churches, some excellent school buildings, and well conducted public schools. There is a considerable Northern and Western element, and this city resembles more the cities of the Northwest than do similar towns on the east of the Mississippi. There are two Congregational churches, the older organized under the patronage of the American Missionary Association and composed of colored members. The pastor, Rev. Y. J. Sims, is a graduate of Taladega College, and reflects the principles and teachings of that excellent institution. He has been here five years and has made his church work a fair success. Lest some might think that such pastors owe their success to an intermixture of Caucasian blood, I will say that Bro. Sims and Bro. Gunner are pure Negroes, and are proofs—if any were needed—of the capacity of the race to teach and guide.

The other Congregational church is composed of white members only, and was organized under the patronage of the American Home Missionary Society. That there should be two Congregational churches in a city of this size is not strange. They are far enough apart to make two a convenience. But why in a population, one-third of which is colored, one should be all white, and the other all dark, is a mystery only explained by the fact that the spirit of caste has invaded the mission churches of the South, and instead of casting it out, it is proposed to sanction it by building up two kinds of Congregationalism.

The division of the body of Christ into sects of any sort is wholly unwarranted by the Word of God. Those who defend such divisions do so on the ground that difference of opinion on doctrinal points are a barrier to harmonious work for Christ. Fallacious as this argument manifestly is, especially in view of the fact that such differences existed in the primitive church, and were not suffered to be the ground of division, there can be no excuse for color line churches. The cruel prejudice and brutal treatment which the colored people of the South are continually receiving from their white fellow citizens is but a fuller carrying out of the caste spirit which is manifested by all the churches. Northern Christians cannot consistently complain of the exclusion of the Negro vote and the mobbing and hanging men without trial, while they at the same time say to intelligent, cultured Christians, "We will not unite with you in church fellowship or church work." It is possible that something of this blame belongs to our "brother in black," but as a rule it does not. All over the South a white Christian who visits a colored church is treated with kindness and consideration; but the very reverse is true of the treatment of colored Christians who visit white congregations. It is said that the Arkansas Association made up of white churches has invited this colored church to unite with them. That surely as far as it went was fraternal, and it is hoped that the first church will speedily accept the invitation.

After calling on Bro. Sims and Rev. I. P. Robinson of the First Baptist church and finding them in cheerful sympathy with our reform, I arranged for my Sabbath work. At 10 A. M. I attended Sabbath-school at the First Congregational church; at 11, I preached to a not large, but very intelligent congregation. At 3 P. M. I preached in the fine brick Baptish church to a large congregation. This is the largest church in the city. I did not fail to testify against the secret lodge system, and had the hearty approval of the pastor. At night I preached again at the Congregational church from Eph. 5: 11, 12. I had a good many lodge members to hear me, but all gave the most earnest attention, and I trust a good impression was made. I was thankful to have begun the year with a full day's work.

Monday I rested and wrote. On Tuesday I visited Philander Smith College, the large and excellent institution established here by the M. E. church for the education of the colored youth. I was kindly received by Pres. Mason, who assured me of his hearty sympathy in our work, and appointed me a time when I should address the students. I visited a number of M. E. ministers who, though they had been entangled by the lodge, are now glad to have it opposed. I also attended the colored Baptist Educational Convention, which commenced its sessions in the First Baptist church and is to continue three days. Some able papers were read, especially one by Prof. Booker, of the Baptist college of this place, on the missionary work of the Baptists. Rev. Dr. Stone of Lebanon, Ohio, whose long experience in college work entitled him to speak, made some able remarks. A lady whose name I did not get made a strong speech on the waste by tobacco-using and other forms of extravagance and intemperance.

Providence permitting I expect to-day to address this convention on the objects and work of the N. C. A.; to-night to preach in the First Congregational church; to-morrow to address the students of Philander Smith College, and next day go to Hot Springs, Ark., to spend the Sabbath. I am thankful for a fair degree of health and the loving care of our heavenly Father. H. H. HINMAN.

CORRESPONDENCE.

A WORKING CHURCH AND PASTOR.

BROOKLYN, N. Y.

EDITOR CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE:—A volume has been placed in my hands entitled, "Lafayettc Avenue Church,its History and Commemorative Services, 1860 to 1885, Rev. Theodore L. Cuyler, Pastor." It is made up of "Historical Discourses" by Dr. Cuyler; Sabbath-school Services, with addresses by D. W. McWilliams, John Wanamaker, Ralph Wells and Dr. Cuyler. The reunion, with addresses by Mayor Low, Dr. Storrs, Dr. Robinson and Dr. Cuyler: and letters read from Joseph Cook, T. DeWitt Talmage, John B. Gough, Prof. Shedd, Geo. L. Prentiss, Ray Palmer, Newman Hall, Dr· McCosh, the poet, Whittier, and others; and a historical sketch and methods of church work.

The sermon contains this statement: "During my present pastorate I have preached to you 2,300 discourses, and have delivered over 1,000 public addresses in behalf of temperance reform and of Sabbath-schools, Young Men's Christian Associations and kindred enterprises for human welfare. I have officiated at 570 marriages, and baptized 802 children. The total number received into the membership of this church during this time has been 3,610. Of this number 1,566 have united by confession of their faith in Jesus Christ. The number of members now on our church register is 2,012." As to method he says, "Personal contact with souls, personal effort for souls, is the only secret of success. As far as the minister is concerned, this requires the most constant, unintermitted pastoral labor. My own established rule has been: first, to try to know everybody in the congregation; and secondly, never to allow a single day to pass without more or less personal visitation. The Bible and books in the morning and door-plates in the afternoon make a good curriculum for a pastor's day. To carry out thoroughly a system of personal oversight; to visit every household, to stand by every sick and dying bed; to put one's self into sympathy with every troubled brain and aching heart, is a process that strains the nervcs and swallows up the time. I discovered long ago that I could not delve deeply in the mines of profound scholarship, or roam in the fields of elegant literature (much as I love it), and yet be a faithful pastor, too. So I made my choice, and I think that eternity will show that I 'chose the better part.'"

Dr. Cuyler said: "When I was in Utah a young man came up and said, 'Dr. Cuyler, I was once in your Sabbath-school in Brooklyn; I am now teaching a mission-school up in Brigham canon, where there are fifty bottles to one Bible. I came down here to see my old pastor.' Another one met me in California and took mc by the hand and said, 'When did you see father and mother in Brooklyn?' and then broke down and could say no more. That young man is out in California at work. Lafayette Avenue Sabbath-school has its representatives all over the world."

Mayor Low said: "When I was first elected mayor of Brooklyn, I received a letter in a handwriting that has since become familiar to me—the handwriting of Dr. Cuyler, whom up to that time I had never met personally. He asked if he might venture upon the privilege of an old man addressing a young one in order to give a piece of advice. The words containing this advice were these: 'Never be afraid, Mr. Mayor, of offending individuals. No matter what you do, you must offend somc; but be very careful that you never offend the common sense of the community at large.' If Dr. Cuyler has been preaching such doctrinc as that for twenty-five years in this Lafayettc Avenue Church, I do not wonder that this church and this pulpit have been such a source of power." Dr. Storrs quoted a Scotch anecdote. "One Sabbath a woman came into the kirk a little late. Now in the kirk a man's text is called a 'groun.' The good woman came late, as I have said, and the minister had commenced his scrmon. Accordingly she asked another woman, 'Where's his groun?' 'His groun!' replied the neighbor, 'he lost that an hour ago, an' he's been swimming ever since.' I have seen a great many ministers who reminded me of that story. They have becn swimming around from place to place, and many of them have had hard work to keep afloat. I think our brother has been right in trying to kecp his ground, and I think you have been wise in keeping him here."

Apropos to the efforts of the Evangelical Alliance to unite the churches in evangelistic work, the study of this book is of great value. Dr. Cuyler's church is a model working church.

J. M. FOSTER.

BRO. MICHAEL'S PLAN FOR THE METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH.

Some time since the editors of the Christian Cynosure allowed me to publish an article entitled "A Plan Proposed to Lovers of Righteousness in the Methodist Episcopal Church." I have received many assurances of approval of the method recommended in that article. What I want, however, and what I believe God wants, is action. After further consideration and examination, I am more thoroughly convinced than ever of the practicability of the scheme, and of the eternal good which must result from its thorough and correct application.

The complete conception of Bible holiness includes the ideas of renunciation, reformation and righteousness. I greatly desire to put copies of the "Plan" and the tracts which explain it in the hands of all who admit this statement to be true, and who are willing to be governed by it no matter what the cost may be. As I put the tracts in their hands, I shall pray that God will burn the truth into their souls. To every one who will send me two one-cent stamps, I will agree to mail one copy of the Plan, one copy of "A Word Concerning the Plan," and one copy of "An Appeal to the Holy People in the Methodist Episcopal Church."

Please do not throw this aside as a catch-penny arrangement. Gladly would I give these tracts away by the tens of thousands were I able to do so. With one cent required for postage, you get for the other, thirty-four pages of printed matter. I do not ask to make anything, as far as money is concerned, out of the undertaking. Should you want larger quantities, send money instead of stamps, and order according to the prices given on the tracts.

When you work the Plan, be sure to report the result.

I will be very thankful to the editors of other journals who will give this note a place in their columns.

LUTHERANS ASSISTING NESTORIA.

ROCK ISLAND, Ill., Jan. 2, 1888.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—You have been pleased to name me among the contributors to your paper. My contributions have been very few and small. In the issue of December 22 you had an item about Pera Johannes, the Nestorian. A near relation to Pera Johannes, and of the same old Nestorian church at Kurdistan, Persia, has been visiting this country again, visiting it six years ago to find some help for his school work at home. For help he has applied to the Lutherans, nearly exclusively, and those from the three northern countries of Europe, who are giving an uninterested aid without any proselyting purpose. He has got about $1,000 up to the end of the year just gone, and he will have more. He will go back this month, since he at New York attended to the printing of the catechism (Luther's Smaller) from the English, which he has translated to his Syro-Chaldean tongue.

I am very well satisfied to see what side you have taken respecting our Democratic President, Mr. Cleveland, and his last message. It is a pleasure to find his recommendation agrees with the platform of the American party. For both President Cleveland and his message, I think the most of the Republican papers of every tongue, as far as I have seen, are too slow to acknowlcdge his merit, but quite ready to point at his least mistake. Mr. Cleveland is not a full free-trader, and I am not, but that the duties may be partly taken away, I think both correct and useful. For one, I wonder they were not reduced long ago. Thirty per cent is the tax on printed books; let it be retained for English print, but for books of any other tongue it is barbarous, indeed, and to no help for anybody.

I think that many Republicans will vote for Mr. Cleveland at our next election. I will do it, at least, if thc Republican is Mr. Blainc, or one of his kind. I suppose it will be lawful to put in Mr. Cleveland at the head of the Republican ticket for that which may be given. Please enlighten and oblige.

Western Kansas and adjoining parts of Colorado are quickly settled by Swedes. The Kansas Conference of the Augustana Synod called a minister, Rev. Stuntine, at Austin, Texas, to take a charge comprising five counties in the northwestern part of the State; Logan county in the middle. This minister arrivcd about the end of November, and first made a trip to the different Swedish settlements, several already having their small church buildings, one of stone, the material of the remainder being turf. When he had gladdened them all with the preaching of the Gospel, he returned to his family, which he had left in the new built parsonage, in a place named Boaz, in the middle of Logan county, Page being the post-office. The parsonage is as yet the only house in the new town, but lots are sold to the value of $3,000, mostly to Swedes. Consequently the congregation, few as yet, has to meet in the minister's dwelling; bnt next summer there will be a congregation of perhaps 300 communicants. In the five counties 70,000 acres are bought by Swedes, 1,500 in the number, and more will buy. I think it is more common in the West that a new town has a saloon and gambling house in the first place, but here, exceptionally, the parsonage was the first one.

A. R. CERVINE.

NOTE.—Prof. Cervine will remember that we do not vote directly for President. In order to have a ballot counted for a certain candidate it must bear the names of the electors who are understood to be pledged to that candidate.

SECRETARY PARVIN'S LIBRARY.

CEDAR RAPIDS, Iowa, Jan. 2, 1888.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—Some fourteen years since I left the M. E. church in this city because I was unable to endure the ordeal of being told the way of life by adhering Masonic ministers. The pastor of the church (Presbyterian) I now attend in his New Year's discourse yesterday seemed to lay emphasis on our duties in making a new departure for a better life with the commencement of the coming year. He said even if we failed to come up to the line of life and experience we aimed at, it were better so than not to have made the attempt. Perhaps so. I have failed in dropping you a line or two the past year to let you know how the warfare prospers hereabouts, and will try and begin to amend in that respect.

About two years since the disciples of the "Handmaid" built a—what I think is denominated a State library building, quite an imposing structure on the principal avenue of the city. On the front door in large gilt letters is written: "OPEN. WALK in." The back part of the building seems to have no windows on the sides but is lighted altogether through the roof. I have had some curiosity to see the inside, but have been in doubt as to the welcome I should receive if I should attempt to walk in, and even the most courteous treatment I am afraid would hardly be properly appreciated on my part. At any rate I have not set any time as yet for a formal call. The building stands there looking innocent and quiet enough. I also have seen the party in charge, Prof. Parvin, a man advanced in years and of gentlemanly look. I judge from a Masonic view the whole investment is a success. It looks to me as if they had roped in to lodge communion nearly all the young men in the city of both church members and outsiders.

I don't know as the Scripture is quite fulfilled here wherc it says that no man might buy or sell unless he had the mark of the beast in his hand or his forehead. I haven't seen any marked in the forehead as yet; but let any onc run for any municipal or county or State office worth having, who can't give the grip with his hand, and I guess he will "think somedings" when he sees the count. No doubt some Mason who reads this will say this is a capital article; it proves that it pays to join us. Very well, admit it; in a certain sense it does pay. It pays the Standard Oil Co. to so manipulate both financial and political affairs so as to make immense profits and crush out all honest competitors regardless of right and equity. It pays the steel rail monopoly to keep up a tariff of $14 per ton on steel rails. It pays railroad projectors and builders and stock diluters to carry on their divers and various tricks and ways and so on to the end of many chapters. You see it pays. No doubt in the world about it. But does any fraud, or trickery, or double dealing ever pay, by which one man obtains that which in strict equity and right belongs to another? I mean in that higher and fuller sense in which a man can look up towards God and from a full heart thank him for his worldly possessions and feel that in his sight he has come honestly by them. Does it pay in the riches that are abiding and eternal; in peace with God and a joyful sense of his loving presence in the soul?

I hear Major Whittle is coming here to preach next week. He is to commence at the M. E. church. It is a good place to begin. Then, it is said, after he gets well under way, Mr. Moody will come on and give him some assistance. He had better come right on at once. The ground needs a double team from the word go; and if the Apostle Paul could possibly be got to come they will need him too, for how they will ever get God to help them unless they tell the church Masons their sins in plain English and by name and get them to confess and renounce in public their lodge oaths and attendant abominable iniquities along with their other sins, and get them thoroughly purged and cleansed to start on, I cannot understand. Either Finney, Ronayne and others are liars of the first water, or else God differs from what I read of him in his Word, if with the average Masonic Christian outfit in this latitude, we have a work of grace that will be genuine and abiding. There won't be any use in ignoring the facts here set out. No lodge devil cast out, no work of lasting grace. "Keep not thou silence, O God; hold not thy peace and be not still, O God. For lo, thine enemies make a tumult, and they that hate thee have lifted up the head. They have taken crafty counsel against thy people and consulted against thy hidden ones. As fire burneth a wood, and as the flame setteth the mountains on fire, so persecute them with thy tempest and make them afraid with thy storm. Fill their faces with shame that they may seek thy name, O Lord." N. BOURNE.

THE W. C. T. U. OPPOSED BY LODGES IN PENNSYLVANIA.

CUSTER CITY, Pa.

Bradford, Pa., with its 12,000 inhabitants, has between twenty and thirty secret lodges and ten churches including two synagogues, one Roman Catholic and one Universalist. Mrs. S. told me she asked a lady from Derrick City (a suburb) why they didn't organize a W. C. T. U. in Derrick, seeing they had such a temperance element. Her reply was, "We're so lodge ridden and so poor we can't sustain one. It is lodge, lodge, lodge, every night of the week."

I learn that the "SONS and Daughters of Temperance" (?) have broken up two or three W. C. T. Unions in this county, notably at Port Alleghany; but there the Division died and the W. C. T. U. has arisen again. I quote you from a letter to me from the president of the Coryville W. C. T. U. (this county) a short time since: "We have not been able to get a meeting for a long time, but last Thursday evening succeeded in getting a new organization, and can find nothing but sectarian selfishness at the bottom of it all; and as an order of Sons and Daughters of Temperance has been organized here they had hoped to run out the W. C. T. U., but my hope is in God." Miss Willard ought to see the parasite preying upon her unions. I understand the Division in Bradford are trying their best to proselyte the ladies of the union there. Oh, for an anti-secret bomb to be thrown into this lodge-cursed district. The M. E. pastor at Custer City came here an Odd-fellow, but anti-lodge light was thrown upon him and I understand he has said, "I have got through with it;" but I have not heard it from his own lips.

God bless the Cynosure, its faithful staff and all the men and women of God who let their light shine, and help me to keep mine always bright.

J. C. YOUNG.

UNITED BRETHREN IN AFRICA AND AMERICA.

AVALON, Mo.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—In the Dec. 15 number of your paper, I find a letter from Bro. Gomer of Africa, which to me is very interesting; but it suggests some questions that puzzle me. For thirty years our family have been deeply interested in the prosperity of that mission. We have been willing in our poverty to deny ourselves the comforts of life that we might help that work. We felt that the United Brethren church ought to carry the Gospel to these benighted people, because of the stand she took against the curse of slavery and secrecy, two of the worst evils that bound and fettered these poor heathen. We believed, too, that that was the reason that God so favored and prospered our mission and missionaries there.

After reading what Bro. Gomer says as to the wickedness of secret societies there, and the stand he feels compelled to take against them, the question comes, What will the church do about it? Shall we have two sets of rules, one to govern United Brethren in Africa and one for those on this side of the Atlantic? If our missionaries over there insist on teaching the heathen that they must give up their lodges to be Christians, how will these converts feel when they become aware of the fact that in America United Brethren preachers, elders and bishops are teaching their converts that they can take lodge oaths, can fellowship ungodly men, drunkards, atheists, infidels and all kinds of wicked men; and whoever teaches and believes otherwise is narrow minded, and should either get out of the church or forever hold their peace on this vexed question?

If we continue to give through the United Brethren church, will it help to build up secrecy or help to tear it down? This is the question we have been puzzled over. The colored race must be saved from the slavery of the lodge—no question about that; but how and by whom, is the question that is continually arising in the hearts of those loyal to the kingdom of Christ.

Are there still but the two kingdoms in the world, the kingdom of light and the kingdom of darkness? Can the Christian belong to both of these kingdoms at the same time? We know that all along the history of the ages there has been a terrible conflict going on between these two powers. Has the nature of things so changed that men belonging to both these kingdoms can clasp hands in a brotherhood dearer to their hearts than the kingdom of Christ? Or is it our brethren who have changed, and are going now to leave the Master to fight this battle with the powers of darkness alone? It is well known by our brethren that Masonry rejects Christ, and it is the corner-stone of the whole secret system. It certainly does not belong to the kingdom of light, for it receives the ungodly and sinners, the unbelievers and infidels alike.

In the olden time God commanded his servants to "break up the fallow ground;" to "sow not among thorns;" but to-day the order seems to be reversed. The church has decided not only to sow among, but help to cultivate thorns. But the question is, What shall we do? If our money belongs to the Lord, we ought to feel that what little we have should all be used to help the Master tear down the kingdom of darkness. We see no better way than the one proposed by the N. C. A., to enlighten and save the colored man in the South, and then God will raise up scores of these to go and teach a pure Christianity to their brethren in their native land. And while we do this we will pray God to deliver Bro. Gomer from the position the church has placed him in, so that he can assure his converts that his church has but the one law for the church in America and in Africa, and that every dollar paid to the United Brethren church goes to help the Master in the conflict against the powers of darkness. A. BUTLER.

PITH AND POINT.

GOOD WORDS FOR THE SOUTHERN FUND.

I hope the fund for colored ministers of the South may be reached. Nothing can be of more moment to the interests within this reform. If I can find something to help the cause I shall do it.—NATHAN CALLENDER.

I hope that we may get the $1500.—M. R. BRITTEN.

I send you my mite, $5.00, to help in sending the Cynosure South. I am glad there are others that can do so much more than I can and I am glad so many are willing to do. I wish I could do more. I wish the Cynosure might be read by all the families in our land.—MRS. J. A. BINGHAM.

Enclosed you will find P. O. order for ten dollars for the fund for the Cynosure for the Southern ministers, and may the blessing of the Lord go with it.—O. C. BLANCHARD.

The balance of the draft, $15.00, is for the colored Baptist ministers' fund of the South. My prayer is that God's blessing may rest on your labors.—JOSIAH TALBOT.

I have boen looking and praying since the effort to send a thousand copies of the Cynosure to the colored ministers at the South was put forth that the good Lord would open the way that I might aid with the rest. And now in the afternoon of the last day it comes around and I inclose $1 for that fund.—CHAUNCEY REYNOLDS.

A SECEDED GRAND MASTER ON THE BAPTISTS OF TEXAS.

I am thoroughly convinced that secret societies are anti-Christian and the church should condemn them. I was once Grand Master of the United Brothers of Friendship for this State, and after hearing lectures in these secret meetings, in which God's church was evil spoken of, I quit the order. This society is the strongest in this country west of the Mississippi and south of the Ohio rivers. This is a secret society of colored men. The colored Baptists of Texas have quit worshiping God and have gone after the secret society, and I wish it was in my power to travel over this State and preach against whisky and secret societies.—J. B. R., Calvert, Texas.

THE G. A. R. AND CHURCH DISCIPLINE.

I hope with the Lord's help and blessing soon to be able to help support our cause against the demon of secretism. Father, now 79 years old, a thorough Christian and scholar, translated several pieces from the Cynosure for the Hollandish papers and continues to do so. I wish you would give us a strong article on the G. A. R., showing it up to be the same Masonic religion, under the cover of seduction, military terms and titles, and that it is one of the regular acknowledged secret societies. We have a member of our church who lately joined the G. A. R., imagining it to be all right. He will be forced to leave it, or be disciplined, as soon as the Consistory is satisfied that it is as I know it to be.—HOLLANDER.

LOCAL OPTION IN OHIO.

J. M. Foster in his correspondence dated Dec. 22, 1887, at Brooklyn, N. Y., says, "In not a single village where local option has been adopted are the saloons closed." This refers to Ohio. My knowledge is limited to three villages that have adopted local option, Mount Victory, Hardin Co., Ohio, and Rushsylvania and Belle Centre, Logan Co., Ohio, and the reverend correspondent can not find an open saloon in any of the three villages.—PROHIBITION REPUBLICAN.

BIBLE LESSON.

STUDIES IN THE NEW TESTAMENT.

LESSON IV.—Jan. 22.—Jesus and the Afflicted.—Matt. 15: 21-31.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Is any among you afflicted, let him pray. —James 5:13.

[Open the Bible and read the lesson.]

COMMENTS ON THE LESSON BY E. E. FLAGG.

1. The woman of Canaan. vs. 21-23. The half-heathen people of Tyre and Sidon corresponded in some degree, in their mixture of races and general godlessness, to the half-civilized population on our far Western frontiers. But it was to a widow woman in Sidon that Elijah was sent to escape the vengeance of Jezebel, herself a Sidonian princess. True piety gives forth its brightest light in the darkest places. This woman's faith was by no means an unintelligent, unreasoning faith. She addresses him as Lord and Son of David; and yet he answers her not a word. The disciples say, "Send her away." This is the common method of humanity in dealing with distress it cannot console or alleviate. How many people, when a great moral question presses upon them, and they are asked to combat popular wrongs, tacitly say in reply, "We don't want to think about it. It will disturb our peace of mind; it will upset our favorite theories. We want to let it alone." So said thousands in regard to the dead and gone slavery issue. So say many in regard to the saloon. Tell them that the lodge is its ally, that its balls and suppers and banquets have lured and are still luring an uncounted throng into those paths which lead directly to the saloon and a drunkard's grave, and they shut their eyes and stop their ears. Wrongs and abuses are tolerated, not so much because society is hard-hearted as because it is apathetic and self-indulgent. If it has no panacea for the suffering it does not want to hear the cry of the sufferer. But the very importunity which is so troublesome to man is music in the ears of divine compassion. Let us not be afraid of repeated askings. Our Lord meant this woman to be the faith teacher for future generations, and so he slowly and painfully taught her the lesson we all need, to knock until the door is opened to us.

2. The humbleness of faith. vs. 24-28. Whole libraries have been written regarding the nature and origin of faith. Here we have Faith standing before us, a living, breathing form, clothed in humility, willing to take the lowest place, but not willing to be turned off without a blessing. True faith is content to be a fool for Christ's sake. She takes poor humanity, grievously vexed with the devils of sin and vice, up in her arms, not only believing that they can but that they will be cast out. Reforms do not conquer by force of numbers, but by the amount of faith in the hearts of those who carry them on. It needs to be like this woman's—a flame which burns down every barrier, and finds fuel in the very discouragements cast in its way. The anti-secret reform, as it is the most unpopular of all, is, from a human point of view, the most discouraging. But the devil which has always vexed humanity the sorest is the devil of false worships, and we know that we have the promise that he shall be cast out. When people say, "I am not in sympathy with Masonry, but it can never be overthrown and there is no use fighting it," they tacitly say, "I don't believe God's Word." The life of all true reform is prayer, earnest, beseeching, persevering prayer. When every ballot cast for the overthrow of intemperance is winged by prayer the Babylon of the liquor traffic will go down like a millstone.

3. The healing of the multitude. vs. 29-31. There is sin and suffering all about us and we have the same right to take the sins and sufferings of others to Jesus that we have to take our own. The multitudes will glorify God when they see his power, and we ought to ask and expect great displays of that power, not only in the healing of diseased bodies but in the casting out of great evils, for we are living in those latter days of which the prophet wrote, "I will make the unclean spirit to pass out of the land."

THE CHURCHES VS. LODGERY.

The following denominations are committed by vote of their legislative assemblies or by constitution to a separation from secret lodge worship:

Adventists (Seventh-day.)

Baptists—Primitive, Seventh-day and Scandinavian.

Brethren (Dunkers or German Baptists.)

Christian Reformed Church.

Church of God (Northern Indiana Eldership.)

Congregational—The State Associations of Illinois and Iowa have adopted resolutions against the lodge.

Disciples (in part.)

Friends.

Lutherans—Norwegian, Danish, Swedish and Synodical Conferences.

Mennonites.

Methodists—Free and Wesleyan.

Methodist Protestant (Minnesota Conference.)

Moravians.

Plymouth Brethren.

Presbyterian—Associate, Reformed and United.

Reformed Church (Holland Branch.)

United Brethren in Christ.

Individual churches in some of these denominations should be excepted, in part of them even a considerable portion.

The following local churches have, as a pledge to disfellowship and oppose lodge worship, given their names to the following list as

THE CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE.

PROSPECTUS FOR THE TWENTIETH YEAR.

As we turn over the leaf for another year the Cynosure would again write at the top of the new page: "Christ always; Christ only." It will more than ever be the purpose of all connected with the paper to make it a power for the coming kingdom of our Lord, before which all the systems of secret worship, mystery and iniquity of the great Babylon must fall. We would be on the CONQUEROR'S side in that day—we will stand for him now in the days of testimony and of tribulation.

THE CYNOSURE during 1888 will give the most earnest attention to the South. The National Convention at New Orleans, Feb. 17th, and the effort, which promises so much success, to put

of the paper into the hands of colored pastors gives a direction to our interests. We also hope that the National Christian Association will be able to put other workers into the Southern field.

The Minor Secret Orders, so-called, will have more respect given to their insinuating and benumbing influence. If Masonry and Odd-fellowship have felt severely the attacks upon their strongholds, they are making good all losses by training up an army of young men whose convictions are paralyzed in respect to secretism by the swarms of orders which cover their modicum of lodgery with a bait of temperance, insurance, patriotism, good fellowship, business aid, etc., etc. The Cynosure will endeavor to rouse our careless churches to see that this evil is likely to be worse than the first.

We have nearly completed arrangements for special Correspondence from the metropolitan cities in different parts of the country. Our readers may expect letters once a month, or oftener, from Boston, New York, Philadelphia, Washington, Cincinnati, New Orleans, Denver, San Francisco and Los Angeles. These letters will give graphic pictures of the earnest American life which throbs in our great cities, with especial reference to the news of the lodges in each.

The very popular Biographical Work of the Cynosure during the three years past will be continued with some features which will be especially attractive. During the last year there have appeared portraits of George B. Checver, William H. Seward, Daniel Webster, John Brown, Charles Sumner, Charles Francis Adams, Enoch Honeywell, Bishop Hamline, Charles G. Finney, Howard Crosby, Dr. C. F. W. Walther, and Alexander Hamilton. These portraits have been accompanied with sketches which have presented facts of profoundest interest to our discussion, collated after diligent and often exhaustive search.

Letters from foreign lands we expect to be more frequent and valuable in 1888 than ever. Correspondents in England, Germany, Greece, Turkey, India, West and South Africa, China and Mexico will through our columns be in personal connection with our readers.

The Sabbath School department will contain the notes of Miss E. E. Flagg as last year. Sabbath-school workers are to be congratulated in the continuance of this arrangement. For readers of the Cynosure there are no more helpful and suggestive notes published than these, in the whole range of S. S. literature.

Best of all is the noble company of contributors and correspondents in our own land. We hardly need mention them. To keep in their company a season were —"worth ten years of common life."

We invite all friends of the past to honor themselves by remaining in this company. The Cynosure gives you a noble fellowship. You can hardly afford to forsake it. Let your name then be found on the list. Do your neighbor a good turn and get his subscription also.

IN ADVANCE $1.50 PER YEAR. Address, the "CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE" Chicago.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, JANUARY 12, 1888

THE NEW ORLEANS CONVENTION FEBRUARY 17 TO 20, 1888.

THE LOUISIANA BAPTIST CONVENTION.

The action of this representative body of over 70,000 church members was first referred to in the Cynosure of September 22nd last. Rev. Mr. Hall, of New Orleans, who first gave us this joyful news, said that in the discussion a number of the pastors spoke of the great value the Cynosure had been to them. From it they had first learned of the iniquity of lodgery, and had been convinced by reading that their vows to Christ obliged them to speak out and warn their people. From a copy of the Minutes of the "Louisiana Baptist State Convention," held in Little Zion church, Opelousas, July 13 to 17, 1887, we take this verbatim extract:

PREACHERS AND SECRET SOCIETIES.

The following resolutions were offered with signatures attached:

WHEREAS, It has come to the knowledge of this Convention that some of our ministers are traveling the various districts establishing secret societies in the churches, thus working great injury to the churches and disgrace to the ministry of Jesus, be it

Resolved, That this Convention does not endorse the course of any ministers who will leave the work of the Lord for such work, thus telling the world that these perishing institutions of men, often wicked in their constitutions, are of more importance than the church of Jesus, with her glory, which will stand forever. Be it further

Resolved, That this Convention advise the churches and pastors not to allow these societies to be set up in their houses of worship, and to refrain from membership in them, where it is discovered that there is conflict between them and their covenant with God.

Signed, REVS. B. DORSEY, H. C. GREEN, WM. PENDLETON, A. L. REESE, C. L. ROBERTS, JOHN BROWN, I. THOMAS, J. DAGGS, A. HUBBS, C. SMITH, A. S. JACKSON, J. BAPTISTE, J. D. WHALEY, and many others.

The resolutions led to a heated discussion. The Convention was highly in favor of the paper. There were four or five brethren who were greatly opposed. Finally the resolutions were adopted with great enthusiasm. The Convention, as a body, is opposed to secretism.

What expense would we not spare to persuade the Baptists of Illinois, Ohio or New York to take such action. It is possible, by putting the Cynosure into the hands of a thousand colored pastors, that several other State Conventions may follow Louisiana. Let us pray for it—give for it—and never give over until we see this victory for Christ. See the report of the fund on page 16.

The suspension of Rev. Wm. Dillon, editor of The Conservator, for preaching and administering the Lord's Supper to United Brethren, who had withdrawn from lodge-ridden churches and formed congregations of their own, is, we are glad to see, attracting attention and comment. It seems that Luttrell who suspended him was not his presiding elder, and if not, the suspension was void, as it is violent and vindictive.

"THE ANCIENT AND ACCEPTED SCOTTISH RITE."—The first volume of this book is now out, and being delivered to those who have ordered it. As the Cynosure editor has aided in the production of the work it would be scarcely modest for us to express the strength of our convictions as to its value and importance. We hope every reader will take it up profoundly impressed with two facts: 1. That it is the ruling rite of the Masonic world; and, 2. That it now extends around our globe. Of course, it must be a leading, if not the leading element in the final struggle between light and darkness, right and wrong, in our afflicted world. The publisher, Ezra A. Cook, well known as an earnest and successful toiler for truth, and the country, in whose armies he has fought, has bestowed immense labor, and evinced rare judgment in the production of this book. And we hope its readers, if they approve of it, will give their personal efforts to make it a national work.

THE INTERIOR sharply criticizes the committees appointed by the Presbyterian Assemblies, North and South, for holding their late meeting in Louisville in secret, and keeping their deliberations close from the press and public. The editor aptly and forcibly says:—"'In secret have I done nothing,' saith Christ. Anything that is done by the conference committees that is not best to be published, is not best to be done. * * * Star Chamber proceedings may be just and wise, but the taint of secrecy excites distrust and hostile prejudice." This is sound as it is sharp. But in its arraignment of Judge McAllister, of Chicago, the Interior outdoes itself. A saloon-keeper drugged a young girl of previous good character and ruined her. The brute was brought before McAllister, who cleared him on the quibble that the law provided punishment for drugging minors, and this child was but one minor, and therefore the law did not apply to her case. The Interior thus handles this Judge, who, a few years since, browbeat the jury and, against all rules of law and decency, cleared a murderer who shot his neighbor before witnesses in open daylight:

"There is only one minor in this case, said McAllister, while the law says minors." The criminal must drug two young girls at one time before he can be held to be guilty of an offense against the law. The statute on the construction of statutory language expressly provides that the plural number in such cases includes the singular—hence we say that a lawyer guessing for technical quibbles would never guess this one. The decision of Judge McAllister ought to be replied to by the prompt institution of proceedings for his impeachment. This will give him an opportunity to show cause, if he have any, why he should not be degraded from the bench."

TROUBLE WITH THE SECRET SOCIETIES.—THE G. A. R.

We learn from the Pittsburgh Commercial Gazette that the Presbytery of Allegheny, United Presbyterian, has voted unanimously that being a member of the Grand Army of the Republic is no bar to uniting with the church. The Gazette editorial reads: "They voted unanimously that the G. A. R. was not a secret organization; and that, therefore, the men belonging to it had a right to membership in the church." The Gazette thinks that vote of the Presbytery "will swell the G. A. R. to a considerable extent." This, of course, will make trouble for that interesting body of Christians which has a standing rule excluding members of secret societies; for if the G. A. R. is not "a secret organization," there are none.

The ritual adopted at Philadelphia, Jan. 17, 1868, required a pledge of honor before, and an oath during initiation to conceal the proceedings of the encampment. The candidates were led in blindfolded; took the oath kneeling at an altar, one hand on crossed swords laid on the Bible, the other lifted to heaven. The blinders were taken off and the candidates saw before them an open coffin, spade, and a file of men ready to shoot; and were reminded that such was and would be the doom of traitors. And the whole encampment responded, "The penalty of treason is death."

Their secrets are, in that ritual, termed "mysteries;" and the secrets were further guarded by passwords, grips, etc., etc.; and the candidate was pledged to sustain his country's cause by his "vote," and swore outright to sustain a "citizen soldier" for office, "other things being equal."

This ritual was adopted twenty years ago. Of course it was unpopular. It was a sworn caucus in perpetual session the year round. This was too bold. Such secret oaths, being now nearly as common as ordinary profane swearing, are heeded as little by the swearers, and the secrets were out at once and soon published. And, like the Odd-fellows, and the Masons of Morgan's day, the mock Grand Army revised their ritual, as thieves change their name and dress for the purpose of concealment; and they omitted those parts most objected to, and which kept men from joining. This was covering knavery by fraud.

It is still an "unfruitful work of darkness." And, as the Union soldiers were dying off, to make this secret order perpetual, like the false worships of Asia and Africa, they have started an annex called "The Sons of the Veterans," whose constitution declares its object to be "to aid the G. A. R," whose book of rules or by-laws they have adopted. These "Sons" are not only sons of soldiers, but the sons of soldiers' sons, down to the close of time!—a secret order to pay dues to those who run it; to nurse a taste for war by keeping up its uniform, titles and sham drills in time of peace. And if war should ever again come to the country in earnest, these soldiers of night and secrecy will enter it, as they have got up these military counterfeits, not to fight, but for what they can make by it; as human buzzards, not to share the action but the prey. Every child of God, once fairly enlightened, will shrink from such an order with loathing. But as the majority of men have the minds of followers, many good men will be beguiled by them for a time.

"Loud of freedom as their trumpets,
And as hollow as their drums."

The question is, What shall the churches do with these frauds?

Excommunication is, in the Scriptures, consecrated to the highest crimes and worst vices. Paul, by inspiration, ordered the man who had his father's wife to be promptly expelled; and it is about the only similar case in the New Testament. Christ required expulsion to be preceded by earnest, loving labor. The editor of the Cynosure has had near fifty years' experience in dealing with secret orders by church discipline, and has come to the following practical conclusions:

1. To hold church testimonies, laws or rules, subordinate to the command of Christ.

2. To declare a secret order an insult to, and trampling on the example of Christ. (See John 18: 20.)

3. To ask candidates if they belong to secret societies; and if they do, to give their case to a committee to labor with them in love, while the church pray for them.

4. To inform them, if they insist on joining and appear to be Christians, that they can be received, but that they will be held under discipline while they hold a lodge connection; because a secret oath is worship, and not the worship of Christ.

5. If, through blindness or influence of bad men, they cling to the lodge, post, or division, exclude them; not merely for belonging to a secret society, but for not quitting one when labored with, for grieving their brethren with their secret "meat," for contumacy; in short, "causing divisions." Such Paul commanded to "reject" after two admonitions.

In an experience of fifty years, we have never known a member lost by their adherence to secret orders. Forty-five years ago the Sons of Temperance first appeared in Cincinnati, and their hostile nature to Christ and Christianity was explained to the church at our communion season. Yet in a pleasant pastorate of eight years and over, five hundred members were received to the church; a heavy debt incurred before the pastorate began, was paid off, and the church continued united in their pastor to the last; while every other Protestant church in the city exchanged pastors, some of them three or four times.

We are one in Christ. But if both Christ and Satan are worshiped by its members, a church will be divided and eventually wrecked.

A HUMAN MONSTER.

Ex-Senator Pomeroy is laying the readers of the Cynosure, the American people, and history itself, under obligation by the article from his pen which begins in this number. The records of the Charleston Masonic Supreme Council, the child of Jesuits and Jews, were destroyed, doubtless, by Pike himself. This covered fifty-nine years before the war.

This article, by Senator Pomeroy, shows sufficient reason for their destruction. But when Richmond, the rebel capital, fell into our hands, the haste of the rebels to leave left them no time to burn their records and correspondence; and Senator Pomeroy has taken from authentic Congressional documents, and these annals of the rebellion, the facts given us in this great article, for which posterity will owe him thanks.

There is but one drawback. Men, having human feelings are reluctant to believe such pictures true. If Pike's record was but half as bad it would be twice as easy to believe it. If he were a drunken bankrupt like Arnold; if he had suffered cruelty in his youth; if his boyhood had been cramped by ignorance, starved, over-worked, whipped by miser guardians and haughty officials under aristocratic laws, his picture were less repulsive and abhorent. But there was none of all this. The son of a poor shoemaker, benign laws took him by the hand and led him to school where tuition was free. He early became a teacher in Newburyport, and a student in the first university in the land, whose president was an Anti-mason; and by the procuring of John Quincy Adams and Edward Everett, secret societies were driven from Cambridge, Yale and the leading colleges of the land. He was seventeen years old when Morgan was murdered; and when Daniel Webster gave his opinion that Masonic oaths should be prohibited by law. He went South where there were no free schools to educate poor boys like him. He went from freedom and joined in with slavery! He left the town where Whitefield's ashes sleep, and where his remains are still visited by crowds who profess his religion, a religion which has placed England and the United States at the head of nations—and he has used the learning which Christianity gave him to translate two thousand pages of Asiatic religion from the Vedas and Zendavesta, and to attempt the over-throw of the religion which teaches that God has made men of one blood; and swears its witnesses on the Bible. And knowing, from a youth of seventeen, the damning turpitude of the lodge, he swore its multitude of oaths; and, perjured to everything that is good, he is faithful to the oaths of the lodge. In the hour of his country's great agony, he took slave-holding Indians to Washington and swore them to cut the throats and tear off the scalps of the sons of New England and the North who were fighting for humanity and free government.

There is but one explanation of depravity so heartless and fearful as that detailed in the Senator's article. It is that apostates ever go to extremes; and especially apostates in religion. Cold, clear, capable, and utterly corrupt, this supreme Mason has the cruelty of an inquisitor, the hardihood of a stoic, and the blindness of false priests. And if the Masonic masses can be persuaded to read this record of cruelty and crime, alike against Indians and the whites, every Mason who has not gone down the Niagara of corruption with their leader, will shrink back from a leadership so opposite to all good.

THE READING STRIKE IN PROPHECY.

"And I saw three unclean spirits, like frogs, come out of the mouth of the dragon, and out of the mouth of the beast, and out of the mouth of the false prophet. For they are the spirits of devils working miracles, which go forth unto the kings of the earth, and of the whole world, to gather them to the battle of that great day of God Almighty."—Rev. 16: 13, 14.

The Revelation is a kalcidoscope of history, giving tableaus of events, in which the instrument has twenty-one turns, viz., seven seals opening; seven trumpets sounding, and seven vials poured out. The frogs appear under the sixth vial. One more vial and the cry comes: "It is done." Frogs are creatures which live equally at ease in air, water or mud. These are teaching forces from the mouths of the devils, by responses (also false religions or mysteries), and priests or the Mormons of all ages. These unclean teachers are equally at home in the church, the world, and the lodge; like Bishop Fallows, who was an acceptable Methodist preacher, a successful civil politician, and went from Oriental Hall Lodge, where he was brother to Dr. Thomas, to Jews and infidels in Chicago, to Mr. Moody's meeting, and was equally at home in all. We are evidently nearing the battleday of God under the sixth seal.

A few weeks since the Reading railway company had five faithful servants who would not join a secret union. The company was ordered to turn those men out: "that none might buy or sell" who had not the beast-mark of secret oath worship of Satan. The company said the men were faithful, and they would not turn them off. Thirty thousand men were ordered by their sorcerers to strike, and they quit work. The company filled their places and kept on hauling coal. The sorcerers went to the miners' union, and twenty or thirty thousand more men struck, and the city of Philadelphia is threatened with a coal famine, by a handful of secret society leaders. Iron makers and others must stop their work, and cold and hunger generates wrath. In this way the frogs are bringing war!

N. C. A. BOARD MEETING.

At the call of the chairman a meeting of the Board was held on Saturday. After prayer by Secretary Stoddard, a program for the New Orleans meeting was reported and approved. The report of Rev. Dr. W. H. French of Cincinnati, who was requested to represent the N. C. A. in the meeting of the Evangelical Alliance at Washington, was given, and the following resolution adopted:

Resolved, That this Board requests Messrs. J. Blanchard, J. E. Roy and J. P. Stoddard to prepare a petition to be circulated among the officers and prominent members of the Evangelical Alliance of the United States: first, setting forth the relation of the church to secret societies of every character; 2nd, the Lodge as a chief cause of estrangement from the church; 3d, the Lodge as a source of peril to the family. The purpose of this effort being to obtain a place on the program of the next meeting of the Alliance for presenting our cause.

The engagement of Miss Flagg for New England and the W. C. T. U. work was considered in connection with an able letter from Miss Flagg, and a note just received by Secretary Stoddard with the serious news of the accident just befallen her. After as full a discussion as possible of the case, the Board resolved "that the General Secretary be requested to proceed at his earliest convenience to New England to raise money for the support of a New England agent of the National Christian Association, and that we employ Miss Flagg as such agent until the next annual meeting of the National Christian Association."

It was also resolved, "that this Board learn with painful regret of the recent accident which has befallen Miss E. E. Flagg, and with this expression of our sympathy we unite our prayers for her speedy recovery."

It was also voted "that the General Agent be authorized to employ Miss E. E. Flagg as soon as possible to work in the city of Worcester, Mass., as long as her compensation can be provided for from the Worcester fund and the friends of our cause in Worcester approve." Another attempt to establish a New England work was indicated by adopting the following:

Resolved, That we favor the establishment of a district headquarters for the National Christian Association in the city of Boston and the location of an agent there.

The General Agent reported the work done during the National Prohibition Conference, Dec. 1, 1887; also concerning his late visit to Kansas at the request of Miss C. Derbyshire, and her proposed donation to the N. C. A. The finances, the Missouri work, and the matter of a Washington agent were discussed, and a committee directed to report on a suitable person for the latter.

—The Central Congregational church in New Orleans in which the National Convention is to be held Feb. 17, is the property of the American Missionary Association. It was the old Fourth Presbyterian church at the close of the war, a large fine building. The Association purchased it for $20,000, and has entirely or in part supported pastor, unless quite lately the church has become self-sustaining, as has the Memphis church in charge of Rev. B. A. Imes.

—General Husted who has served several terms as speaker of the New York State Assembly has been defeated in his desire for re-election by a vote of 51 to 19. Husted will be remembered as the speaker who introduced the Masonic three raps to call up the House, and for a time the lodge gloried in the domination it held in the legislature. The overwhelming defeat of Husted and his Masonic gavel indicates a rebellion against the pretended authority of the lodge.

—Bro. Hawley writes from Baxter, Iowa, that the protracted meetings generally prevailing in the place so engage the evenings that no opportunity seems to be open for lectures. He rejoices that the churches are moved to engage heartily in the work appointed them of God, but doubtless prays for the day when they shall so cast off the man-fearing spirit when it shall not seem out of place to point out the relation of any great iniquity, like the lodge or liquor, the dance or the theater to the cause of Christ at any time in a revival meeting. It does not hurt Sam Jones's meetings when he denounces gambling and the saloon, nor Munhall's when he testifies against the secret orders. This should be the rule.

RAILROAD FARES TO NEW ORLEANS.

Tickets are now on sale in Chicago at $30 for the round trip, good to return until June 1, 1888. Stopovers at any point south of Cairo can be had when desired, but the trip must be made in fifteen days. The distance covered by this ticket via Illinois Central is 1,824 miles. It is probable that reduced rates can be obtained at points along the lines of different roads and a better route even be secured from Chicago. If so they will be announced in due time. This is certainly a grand opportunity for the friends to visit the sunny South and aid a good work by their prayers and presence at the convention in New Orleans, Feb. 17 to 20. Who is planning to go? Please send me your names.

THE N. C. A. NATIONAL CONVENTION.

OFFICIAL CALL.

The Seventeenth Convention of the National Christian Association is hereby called to meet in the Central Congregationalist church in the city of New Orleans, Louisiana, at 7:30 P. M., February 17th, 1888. An interesting programme has been arranged, able speakers have been secured, and three sessions will be held daily, closing with the evening of Feb. 20th. Seats are free and the public are most cordially invited to attend.

REV. J. S. MCCULLOCH, D.D., Pres.

REV. LEWIS JOHNSTON, Sec'y.

PERSONAL MENTION.

—Rev. Dr. Wm. Wishart was chosen moderator for the United Presbyterian Presbytery of Monmouth at its meeting Dec. 27. Rev. T. H. Hanna of the First United Presbyterian church is Superintendent of Missions in this presbytery.

—Rev. Mr. Hoyt and wife of Ware, Mass., celebrate the twenty-fifth anniversary of their marriage on the 22d inst., and invite their friends to spend the day with them, and enjoy a Christian visit. Mrs. L. M. Hoyt is an occasional contributor to the Cynosure. She and her husband have suffered much because of their convictions against secretism.

—Rev. David Thompson, of Monmouth Presbytery, now eighty-two years of age, a sometime contributor to the Cynosure, fell down the stairs at his home a few days ago from which he sustained a broken arm and strained back and limbs. At the time of the fall he was carrying a lighted lamp, which was broken and extinguished. This aged minister is the father of Miss Annie Y. Thompson, of the United Presbyterian Egyptian mission.

—A letter from Wellesley, Mass., was received Saturday morning bringing the unwelcome news that Miss E. E. Flagg, author of "Between Two Opinions," was by a hard fall suffering from a fractured hip. All the Cynosure readers will join heartily with the resolution adopted by the N. C. A. Board, soon after the news was received, expressing sincere sympathy for our afflicted and suffering friend.

—A letter from Bro. Leadbetter received Monday informs us more particularly of the accident that has befallen Miss Flagg. While returning home Wednesday afternoon from Wellesley Hills she slipped on the ice and fell heavily. The serious injury which resulted will confine her closely for perhaps two months. Secretary Stoddard will probably go East in a few days, as directed by the N. C. A. Board, to arrange if possible so that Miss Flagg can begin a good work in Boston for New England and the W. C. T. Union, so soon as her recovery is assured, and for that end our readers will join us in fervent prayer.

—Dr. E. P. Goodwin of the First Congregational church, Chicago, preached last Sabbath a discourse on the twentieth anniversary of his pastorate. He referred to the 197 members who had died during this period and paid the following tribute to the memory of Mr. Carpenter: "I will name a few of them, not in the order of their death, but in the order of their age in the church. First of all is one whose name is more intimately interwoven with the early history of the church than that of any other; one without whom this church could not have been founded when it was under so favorable circumstances. I mention the name of Philo Carpenter, which is enshrined in all our hearts."

—Among the good deeds for which the memory of Dr. J. B. Walker will be loved and blessed is a donation to the Humane Society of Illinois. The organ of the Society, the Humane Journal, acknowledges this gift thus happily: "The Illinois Humane Society desires to tender its respect to the memory of the late Rev. J. B. Walker, D. D., who died March 6th last, in the eighty-second year of his age. In his will he bequeathed a legacy of $250 to this Society. In looking over his labors through sixty years of public life, and noticing the important positions he has filled as editor, writer, teacher, lecturer and pastor, we find he was a man of active brain and natural energy of character, and lived a great and useful life. He was an intellectual giant among men; he possessed a benevolent nature; he had no children, but adopted many needy ones; thirteen of these bless his memory. For fifteen years he was a resident of Wheaton, Illinois, and a professor and lecturer in both the College and Theological Seminary, and pastor in the [College] church at that place. Prominent among his virtues was his humane desire for the suppression of cruelty to animals. This sentiment of humanity pervaded his whole life and shed its benign influence on all occasions of opportunity to do in this behalf, and in this, 'he being dead yet speaketh,' for we notice in his will that he made a munificent bequest to the Wheaton College, with the condition that its President should preach, or cause to be preached, once a year, a humane sermon for the benefit of humane societies and their work. This Society confidently hopes that all preachers now in the full tide of influence and work will take thought by this example. If each should preach, only once a year, a sermon to benefit humane societies, a vast amount of good would emanate from the pulpit to strengthen the cause of humanity."

THE HOME.

HUGUENOT HYMN.

[Sung at the first Protestant worship held in Versailles Palace, November 2, 1879.]

Great God, to thee my heart upsprings,
And joyful sings,
Thy glory raising;
Unawed by kings,
With hands and voice
I will rejoice
In grateful praising!

I'll worship toward thy holy hill,
And love thy will,
Thy mercy singing;
Thy truth shall fill
My soul with joy;
My powers employ,
Sweet tributes bringing.

From every foe thy hand shall save,
And from the grave
Thy power shall take me.
Let Satan rave;
Thy Word is sure,
And shall endure;
Do not forsake me!

Thy Word, O God, my joy and pride!
There's none beside Love's wondrous story;
'Tis magnified
Above thy name;
With loud acclaim
I'll spread its glory.

In paths of trouble when I walk,
With thee I'll talk;
Thou wilt revive me.
Though lions stalk
With dread alarms,
To thy strong arms
Their roar shall drive me.

Rev. Dr. A. T. Pierson of Philadelphia, in sending the above hymn, writes: "I translated this 138th Psalm, keeping as near as I could to the meter and style of the French Huguenot version. It seemed to me you would be interested to publish it from its historic associations. I subjoin the first verse from the French, that you may see the original. Dr. L. W. Bacon translated this verse, I believe, originally:

"'Il faut, grand Dieu, que de mon cœur
La Sainte ardeur,
Te glorifie,
Qu' a toi, des mains et de la voix
Devant les rois,
Te psalmodie.'"

THE MARKED BIBLE.

We will introduce our reader into the drawing-room of a well-furnished house in London. A priest is in conversation with a lady, whose desponding aspect and downcast looks may well have suggested the words that he has just uttered, "You are depressed; you have allowed your mind to become morbid; do not let this continue, but try to shake it off."

The lady looks up a little less hopelessly, and seeing that his words are taking effect, Father B. continues in a soothing tone, "There is to be a concert to-day; go to it, you need rousing."

Following the advice of her counselor, Mrs. A. found herself on the afternoon of the same day in the St. James' Hall, where the concert was to be held. She had not been seated long in the rapidly filling hall before she noticed the absence of all musical instruments, and, greatly surprised, she inquired the cause.

"There is to be a concert here this evening," replied the lady whom she had addressed, "but this afternoon Mr. C. is going to give a Gospel address."

"Oh, then I have made a very great mistake!" exclaimed Mrs. A., "I cannot stay for this, I must go at once." She rose hurriedly, hoping to be able to leave before the speaker, who had just stepped upon the platform, should begin, but at that moment a number of umbrellas behind her seat fell down. Confused at the slight disturbance of which she was the cause, and not willing to become the center of observation, she quietly sat down.

"This is exceedingly unpleasant," she thought, "but it is too late now, and after all I need not listen." Soon, however, her whole attention was absorbed. The evangelist was declaring, as an ambassador for Christ, a message of love and forgiveness from God, a present and immediate salvation, "for he that believeth on the Son hath everlasting life; and he that believeth not the Son shall not see life, but the wrath of God abideth on him." (Jno. iii, 36.) There were ears that remained dull, and hearts untouched; for the same story has been repeated many hundreds of times, and to some it was so familiar that they wearied of it; but to Mrs. A. the Gospel came in all its freshness—to her it was good news indeed. The Holy Spirit was opening her understanding that she should believe the Scriptures, and find the Gospel what it really is—"the power of God unto salvation."

The address over, the lady went up to the speaker and anxiously asked—

"How may I be sure that all you have been saying is really true?"

"Have you a Bible," inquired Mr. C. "Never mind," he added kindly, "look over this one, and you will see for yourself." Turning to John v. 24, he made the inquirer read the words which had been underlined, "Verily, verily, I say unto you, He that heareth My word, and believeth on Him that sent Me, hath everlasting life, and shall not come into condemnation; but is passed from death unto life." And again, "These things have I written unto you that believe on the name of the Son of God, that ye may know that ye have eternal life." (1 Jno. v. 13)

Mrs. A. did not possess a Bible, but as they parted a Christian present at the meeting pressed his own into her hands, begging her to read over and over again those passages which were marked, adding, "May God bless it to your soul." And He who "is able to do exceeding abundantly above all that we ask or think," fully answered the prayer.

It was not long before Mrs. A. was visited by the priest. "Well," he said, as he glanced at the changed expression of the face before him, "I need not ask how you are; I can see how well my remedy has succeeded!"

Very quietly and gladly Mrs. A. told her visitor of the afternoon's mistake and how it had ended.

"Ah," exclaimed Father B. with vehemence, "I see how it is—you have been among heretics! I will not stay to argue," he added, rising, "but I will send one well able to refute the errors into which you have fallen." And he angrily withdrew.

"The entrance to Thy words giveth light; it giveth understanding unto the 'simple' (Ps. cxix, 130.) It was by the Word of God that Mrs. A. had learned that she was lost; it was by the Word of God that she had found Christ, in whom her heart's desire had been satisfied. Of what avail, then, the arguments of even the most able, unless supported by that Word?

"True to his promise, Father B. sent one who was considered to be very well up in all matters of controversy, and a long time was spent by him in trying to convince his hearer that she was blinded by heresies. But while he was endeavoring to try to win her back by every subtle persuasion within his reach, she was seeking, in prayer, for strength and wisdom to speak to him of eternal life; for from the moment that he had entered her room, and she had remarked his pale, emaciated face and evidently failing strength, she had been convinced that as the flower of the grass his life was passing away, and "the grace of the fashion."

The conversation ended, the young priest rose to go; but as he did so, Mrs. A. laid her hand upon his arm, and, "Now," she said, "will you listen to me? You are ill—dying."

But though he listened, there was no response. "Faith cometh by hearing, and hearing by the Word of God." She would give him that Word, she thought, and taking her Bible, with its marked pages, and telling him how God had blessed it to her soul, she said, "Take it, and should there ever be a time when you would like to speak with me again on these things, send and I will go to you, wherever I may be."

Some months passed, when one morning, as Mrs. A. was preparing to leave London for Eton, in order to bring her son back for his holidays, a messge arrived, begging her to come to the young priest, who was very ill.

"What can I do? What ought I do?" she thought. "My child is expecting me." It was difficult to decide between the love of a mother's heart and the sense that she ought to obey the summons. But nature prevailed. "A day can make no difference," she mentally reasoned, "and I can go the first thing to-morrow." And so the doubtful question was settled.

Mrs. A. lost no time in starting the following morning for the monastery, where the young priest lived. But one glance, as she stood at the half-opened door of his room—the stillness too unmistakable and the figure of a sister of mercy kneeling in prayer was enough; he was gone, for death had waited not for the opportunity which she had lost; and looking upon the mute lips, which but yesterday could have answered the question which now she was obliged to put to a stranger, her whole soul bowed itself in anguish. "His soul! oh, tell me about his soul!"

The sister of mercy rose, her cold composure contrasting with the earnestness of the visitor. "I will tell you," she replied; "he died cursing you, and cursing your Bible."

Could this be so? Was it possible?—was it to curse her, and let her hear his dying breath curse her marked Bible, that he had sent for her yesterday? But this was all the sister of mercy had to say; there was nothing more she would tell, and she withdrew.

And now amid her newly-found happiness, a shadow as of death fell upon Mrs. A., who could not escape from the remorse which overtook her as she mourned over her delay in answering the request of the dying man.

Some time afterward she left England for the continent. When there, she was one day surprised by the announcement of a visitor with whom she was unacquainted. "You will not know me," the lady hastened to explain—"you will not recognize me?"

Not as she was then dressed, was the sister of mercy recognized. She had long sought, but until that moment fruitlessly, for Mrs. A., for her conscience was burdened under the sense of guilt in having taken part in the lie which was framed respecting the death of the young priest. He had not died as she had said—cursing the Word of God. No, indeed, but rejoicing in Christ as his Saviour, and resting in his finished work. Dying, he had pleaded that those around him would give the Bible back to the one who had given it to him, with the message that he blessed it and blessed her. In obeying her superiors, the sister of mercy had kept all these particulars from the lady's knowledge. But she had lived only to obey the voice of the Church of Rome, and she herself had sought to win salvation by works of charity and human righteousness, little knowing the utter ruin of man and the hopelessness of presenting works, however fair, wrought by a sinner, before a holy and sin-condemning God. (See. Is. lxiv, 6.) She knew neither God's love in giving Jesus to atone for sin, nor eternal life as God's free gift. (Jno. x, 28,) consequent upon the finished work of Christ. (Jno. xix, 30.) She knew nothing of "the love of Christ which passeth all knowledge." (Eph. iii, 19.) And how could she? The words of God were to her a strange and unknown language! But when the marked Bible fell into her hands, led by God's Holy Spirit, she studied it. Like light, its divine truths shone in upon her heart, dispelling its darkness, till by faith she, too, learned to rest in the salvation wrought out by the Son of God, "whom God had set forth to be a propitiation through faith in his blood" (Rom. iii, 25,) and to see herself "accepted in the beloved" (Eph. i, 6).

One who was thus sensibly brought nigh to God could not long remain amid ignorance and superstition of the system which keeps the sinner far from God, or teaches him to trust in rites and ceremonies, ordinances and works, as means of salvation and approach to Christ. In laying aside the robes of her sisterhood, the ex-sister of mercy is desiring to serve God acceptably, and this not in the vain hope of winning the salvation of her soul, but because God has given salvation to her, and to him she would yield her body a living sacrifice, which is her "reasonable service." Thus man's wisdom ended in foolishness, for "there are many devices in a man's heart, nevertheless the counsel of the Lord shall stand." (Prov. xix, 21.)

Reader, having read this true account, which is of recent occurrence, now take the Word of God, and see if there be not, even to-day, a salvation for lost sinners as perfect as it is divine, and "may God bless it your soul."—Words and Weapons.

ONE OF MY HEROES.

"Even a child is known by his doings." It was years ago, and I was in a New England country town, called there to speak for the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society. Resting at a farmhouse, a little fellow, in the glory of first pants, came into the room, and, after looking me over, announced, "I've got the heathen woman's friend, I have." Of course I thought at once of the paper of that name, so I replied, "Do you like the little paper, the Heathen Woman's Friend?"

"Of course I like her; she 'longs to me, and she ain't paper, neither."

"What is she, then? come and tell me about her."

"Well, you jus' come out o'doors, and I'll show her to you;" and he led the way. Through a long yard, a gateway, and another yard he hurried me, till, pausing beside a stake to which a cord was tied, he pointed, "There, don't you see her, 'the heathen woman's friend?'"

My eyes followed the cord, and the other end was tied around the leg of a silver-gray hen, which was clucking and scratching in a most motherly fashion for the chickens around her.

"Don't she look like the heathen woman's friend?" asked my little entertainer.

"I don't think I quite understand; you will have to explain this to me," I said.

"Well, you know 'bout mission bands, don't you? You see I'm one of 'em, and we are going to get a lot of money. Jimmy Lake and John Jones have got a missionary hen, and papa gave me one. My Aunt Fanny, she said I'd better call mine 'The Heathen Woman's Friend,' and so I did. We set her on some eggs, and how many chickens do you think she hatched?"

It seemed impossible to count the restless little things, but looking at Benny's beaming face, I said, "Oh, a dozen, I hope."

"Oh, she did better than that! We set her on thirteen eggs, and she hatched every one. Don't you think she's 'the heathen woman's friend?'" he asked triumphantly.

Further questioning drew out the statement that, "Papa is to buy all the chickens that grow up, and I'm going to put all the money into mamma's mite box. Don't you guess 'twill burst the top out, and may be the bottom, too?"

In talking with the mother, I learned that considerable influence would be brought to bear, by older brothers, to test Benny's missionary zeal, and she promised to write to me the result, which I give in brief. The "friend" brought up the brood, with only the loss of one chicken, and when the dozen were sold they made a nice sum, and Benny was told that he was under no obligations to give more than the price of one to the missions. However, Benny was firm; "I promised 'em to the Lord, and I won't be mean enough to cheat him;" and though he was teased and taunted, he held on. "I can't lie to the Lord," and every cent was given as promised. —Selected.

THE WHITE DAYS OF WINTER.

The white days of winter, darling,
When softly the snowflakes fall,
Till a royal garment of ermine
Folds tenderly over all.
Field and hillock and valley,
Hushed in the sweetest sleep,
For the snow comes down from our Father,
His loving charge to keep.

Under the snow-robe, darling,
There is wonderful brooding heat,
That is taking care of the daisies,
And saving the next year's wheat.
And we'd have no flowers, dearest,
When the spring's green days come back,
If the white days did not bring us
The feathery flakes in their track.

The swift, white day, my darling,
When the sleigh bells' merry chime
Is echoing o'er the roadway,
Is the fun and frolic time.
But the still white eve, my dearest,
Is sweeter to you and me,
When we have the song and story,
And the prayer at the mother's knee.

Our little home, my darling,
Oh! whatever wind may blow,
The south with its quiver of sunbeams,
The north with its flakes of snow.
Our little home, my dearest,
Is under the dear Lord's care,
And we fear no ill nor sorrow,
Lovingly sheltered there.

GOOD COUNSEL FOR BOYS AND GIRLS.

To one of his daughters at school Bishop McIlvaine gave the following counsel:

"Don't cultivate, dear N——, with any companion, that sort of violent friendship which leads to a sort of confidential communication which cannot be made known to your parents. Be very particular as to whom you allow to be very familiar with you, as your near companions and friends. First, know well the person, before you allow a close intimacy; and the moment you see anything wrong in a companion, think what effect it should have on your intimacy. Learn to say No, decisively to any request or proposal which your judgment tells you is not right. It is a great thing in a child to learn to say No, when it is right to do so. Make it a rule to hear nothing from any girl which you may not be allowed, and would not be willing, to tell your dear mother. Be careful to let nothing interfere with your regular private prayers and reading of the Scriptures and labor to give your whole heart and life to God.—Sel.

TEMPERANCE.

WHY DON'T THE CHRISTIANS HELP?

BY MRS. ESTHER T. HOUSH, NATIONAL SUPT. PRESS DEPT. W. C. T. U.

The words were intense with pleading. I shall never forget how all else paled into insignificance before that cry of a soul just on the border of the Heavenly Land. The pleading of a sister, beloved. She thought a great pit lay in the paths of men, and they were constantly falling in. The green grass grew up to its edge, the flowers drooped over. It had no barriers, or lights of warning. "There," she would call, "the dearest friend I had slipped in, and you never tried to stop him. And a boy went over, and you never told him there was a pit there. Can't you save that girl?" she cried. "Oh! the world goes by, the great thoughtless world, and it jostles people in. Where are the Christians? Where are the Christians? Why don't the Christians help?"

"If I could live," she said in calmer tones, "if I could live, I would spend every day of my life keeping people out of that pit. I would build a wall so high no little child could climb over, or I would cover it so deep that none could fall in." Then looking at me with eyes luminous with the light of the world beyond, she clasped my hands and said, "Sister, sister, won't you try and keep people out of that pit?"

It has come to me far over the years, and a power I cannot resist impels the sending out of her warning cry, with the hope that some one may be saved from the pit by the friendly hand of the one who reads it. Brothers, sisters, we know the pit is there, right in the way of life. What are we going to do about it?

Is it a pit grassed over, flower-decked? Do birds sing in the archways, and beautiful visions tempt beyond? The pools that offended the sight are bridged over. The great pit is made respectable by law. It is the High-License saloon. Christians, have you uttered no warning cry? Where are the danger signals? Must the young men, the pride of our lives, go unwarned? Will it be less a death of manhood if buried beneath the costly Moloch? Will the home be less shadowed because the tax that made the saloon lawful, swelled the State's resources?

But the danger lies not only here. Look, opening on every side, quicksands of impurity! Nay, we see not, we cannot believe there are pits there. Yet who that reaches them, comes up the same? Perhaps the steps were impure pictures and stories, hidden books, idle conversation, foolish company, sinful amusements. They were such little steps, just down a plane outside of mother's or father's care, where the Sunday-school did not reach, and away from the teacher's guidance. Such little deviations from the right way. But the boy "went over, and you never told him there was a pit there," and you never tried to "save the girl."

What can be done to make safe paths for our children? is the great question of to-day. The friends of education are building a wall of knowledge so high that a little child will not climb over to the pit of ignorance. Warning lights are burning all along the way that science treads. Are the Christians as aroused to see that the Sunday-schools and the churches stand shoulder to shoulder with the teachers on this question?

In some States the people are to decide whether or not their boundaries shall be freed from the curse of the saloon, the distillery and the brewery, whether a wall shall be built between the home and the enemy of home, or the pits of temptation still be open to lure unwary feet. In this hour of decision, "where are the Christians?" The battle will be sharp, and victory must depend much upon the acts and influence of the Christian men and women.

Does the fact of only 200,000 Christian women banded together in the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, to defend the home from the saloon by organized effort—which means right home training, right education of head, heart and hand, and righteous laws enforced, that shall both warn the young feet away from the pits of temptation, and in time take away the temptation itself—touch not your heart, oh, Christian woman not yet enrolled in the glorious army? Where are the millions of mothers and home-keepers who can arise in the majesty of womanhood and say, "The saloon shall no more tempt our sons and destroy our daughters?"

The emergency of the hour, the knowledge of our national and social danger, call for action. To-day we can help; to-morrow it may be too late.

Dear Christian brother and sister, "won't you try and keep people out of that pit?"

TEMPERANCE IN SOUTH AFRICA.

A late copy of the Cape Mercury, published at King William's Town, Cape of Good Hope, contains an interesting narration showing the progress of the temperance reformation among the natives of that colony. It appears, according to the Inter Ocean, that the people of Chief Siwani's tribe were the first to agitate for the removal of the canteens (sutling houses licensed to sell liquors) from their locations. In this they were successful, and it was found by experience that the restrictions placed upon the traffic, though falling short of total prohibition, were highly advantageous to the tribe.

It was recently reported among them that the government, as a revenue measure, was about to abrogate the restrictions placed upon the traffic within the proclaimed areas. This caused much excitement among them, and was the occasion of the assemblage of a large meeting of Siwani's people, June 22, in front of the court house in the town, to represent their views to the magistrate, and through him to the government.

That orderly meeting of dusky natives, but recently emancipated from the thraldom of barbarism, eloquently pleaded for the protection of their homes from the destroying influence of the drink, which is the curse of civilized man, formed a scene of pathetic interest to all who feel the pulse-beat of philanthropic sentiment. If the government does not heed such earnest appeals as were there made, then the white people who rule the colony should first of all be made the subjects of future missionary labors.

An old chief, named Mabope, was first to speak. They asked the government to take the liquor from their homes, and it had done so. He trusted it would now listen to their plea and not bring it back again. He wanted liquor kept as far away from the black people as possible. Sevise, a son of Siwani, said they looked to the government for protection. They were all agreed as to the good that had followed since the canteens had been closed, and they did did want the white man's liquor brought near their locations again. He was not speaking, he said, as a total abstainer, but he spoke for the good of his people.

The statement of Mema, son of a principal councilor, was to the effect that the women as well as the men were addicted to the drink habit. "When the canteens were among them," he said, "their wives spent all their time at them, and they had no wives." If the wives of civilized white people should fall into like habits of dissipation, the men would speedily organize W. C. T. U. societies for the suppression of the evil. The dark colored sisters, however, turned the tables on the men when they were given opportunity to speak. Nopodi, wife of a notable, said the women were losing their husbands and being ill-treated through drink; but since the canteens had been closed they had been happier, and had become prosperous and contented. Another woman bore testimony to the evil effects of drink, and concluded by saying that she "had almost become tired of being thrashed when the canteens were near them." That sort of experience would make even a white woman "almost tired!" A number of women spoke to about the same effect.

Mr. Dick, the local magistrate, closed the conference by saying that he would present the matter to the government, and that he believed it would be a good day for the natives when strong drink could no longer be sold to the black man. This was greeted by signs of earnest approval by the assemblage. Altogether the incident may be noted as an indication that the tidal wave of temperance is reaching all shores.—Sel.

It is easy to be nobody, and the Watchman tells how to do it: Go to the drinking-saloon to spend your leisure time. You need not drink much now, just a little beer or some other drink. In the meantime, play dominoes, checkers, or something else to kill time, so that you will be sure not to read any useful books. If you read anything, let it be the dime novel of the day. Thus go on keeping your stomach full and your head empty, and yourself playing time-killing games, and in a few years you will be a first-class nobody, unless you should turn out a drunkard or a professional gambler, either of which is worse than nobody. There are any number of young men hanging about saloons just ready to graduate and be nobodies.—Scientific American.

John Bright, while believing absolute prohibition, for the present at least, impracticable, says in a recent letter: "I suppose all men will admit that it would be a great blessing if the manufacture, sale, and use of drinks which intoxicate were abolished."

Massachusetts' drink bill last year was $37,000,000.

RELIGIOUS NEWS.

WORK FOR THE SWEDISH CHURCHES OF CALIFORNIA.

MINNA ST., SAN FRANCISCO, Cal.

EDITOR CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE:—In reply to your kind note, I only wish to say: Our work is increasing; would we had more laborers; may God send them. We have in California only four ministers; we ought to have many more. The Swedes, as well as other nationalities, are moving into the State in large numbers.

What we need, and what we propose to do, I dare not mention. I am now trying to start, in every community of Swedes, a Society of Christian Endeavor. Its members are to give the Lord one-tenth of all their earnings, weekly. Each month payments are to be made to such objects as: Foreign Missions; Home Missions; Our Colleges and Seminaries; Our Parochial School; Paying for good papers and periodicals for gratuitous distribution; Tracts for same; Church Extension; Liquidating church debt where most needed.

Its members are to visit all the sick and needy, bring the blind to church at least once a week, etc.

Pray for us. Work with us. We need to be up and be doing. I fear I am not more than one-tenth awake. Pray the Lord to make me fully awake. Fraternally, J. TELLEEN.

CALL OF THE EVANGELICAL ALLIANCE.

The Conference lately held in Washington made a deep impression on the country. It was remarkable for its numbers, character and earnestness.

There was an extended discussion of the dangers to our national life. The great resources of the Christian church—so largely unused—were fully considered. All present felt that new and remarkable opportunities existed for bringing the practical teachings of Christ to bear upon the social problems of the times.

It was shown that active co-operation of all Christians was absolutely needed and easily possible, not only without interfering with the work of any church, but distinctly helping forward that of each.

A deep impression of personal responsibility grew out of these discussions, and the members left with the conviction that wise and prompt action should be taken.

We, therefore, venture to suggest that in each city, town and neighborhood, pastors of all denominations, and such laymen as they may select, be invited to meet and carefully study the needs and problems of their special locality. This may include such organized visitation as shall give a certain knowledge of those who do not attend religious services, and as far as possible the reasons which keep them away. It is especially desirable to devise plans for winning the confidence of working people. Such visitation can readily include a knowledge of the sick and deserving poor, the number and location of saloons and places of ill repute, and all the evil influences that affect the moral character of the community. Such study will draw Christians into closer sympathy, and will so reveal needs as to stimulate earnest and united action, by which alone the desired work can be effectively done. As the value of the work will depend chiefly on its continuance, we suggest that permanent organizations be formed, and, in order that they may be mutually helpful and that they may co-operate in the prosecution of moral reforms and in the defence of cherished and endangered institutions, we invite such organizations to become branches of the National Alliance.

Documents will be furnished on application to the General Secretary.

47 Bible House.

—Evangelist Moody began his work in Louisville, Ky., Jan. 8, with four meetings Sabbath day. The aggregate attendance was fully 12,000. Mr. Moody expressed himself greatly pleased with the careful preparations made for him, and said he had never spoken in so large a building as that erected for him, in a city the size of Louisville. The capacity of the Tabernacle is between 5,000 and 6,000 people.

—Much dissatisfaction is reported among the colored churches of Louisville because special services have been arranged for their race apart from the whites during the Moody meetings to be held here this month. Revs. W. H. Chambers and W. H. Venable, prominent colored ministers, have begun agitating the matter, and the executive board has decided to refer the matter to Mr. Moody.

—The revival services at Chicago Avenue church will be continued this week, with E. W. Bliss to preach every night. Mr. Charles Tatman, a young evangelist from the East, has been assisting pastor Goss with great success in this revival.

—Rev. John G. Fee rejoices over sixty-one additions to the company of the disciples at Camp Nelson, Kentucky, fifty-one of them upon confession of faith, mostly out of the school; also ten conversions at West Union, with some moving of the waters at Berea.

—There are 100,000 more inhabitants and eleven fewer churches below Fourteenth street, New York, than there were ten years ago.

—In the Theological Seminary at Richmond, Va., there are sixty students, colored men, one-fourth of whom are preparing for missionary work in Africa.

—London has a population of 5,416,006, and the sittings in the churches afford accommodations for 1,903,509, which perhaps is about one-half of the adult population. Of these sittings the Established Church furnishes 49.5 per cent. and the free churches 50.5 per cent.

—The Church of England Committee on Intemperance, on motion of Archdeacon Farrar, in convocation, was recently instructed "to take into special consideration the demoralization and destruction of various native races in the British Empire and its dependencies by the introduction and sale of intoxicating drink."

—At the late celebration of the Lord's Supper by the Second Washington, Iowa, United Presbyterian congregation, Rev. W. C. Williamson assisted the pastor, Rev. J. R. Logue, and twelve new members were received.

—Ira B. Sankey, the singing evangelist, has returned from England. He will rest in New York for three weeks, and then start on a trip through the Southern States, holding revival meetings in all the principal towns. He will not return to England until next May, when he will inaugurate an important evangelical movement throughout England, Scotland and Ireland.

—In regard to the statement that the Unitarians and Universalists are looking toward Japan as a mission-field, the New York Observer quietly comments: "These two bodies have made so little progress at home that we presume they sigh for more encouraging fields."

—About twenty of the richest residents of the City of Mexico have been fined under the law forbidding religious ceremonies and observances in the streets, they having placed small altars with lighted candles on the balconies of their houses, on the occasion of the feast of Our Lady of Gaudalupe.

—In Kochi, Japan, the city occupied by the missionaries of the United States Southern Presbyterian church, work was begun only two years ago. Now there is a Presbyterian church of over two hundred members. The gain in the whole of Japan for the last two years has been seventy-five per cent.

—Bishop Parker, who succeeded the martyred Bishop Hannington in the East African mission, has opened the new Church of St. Paul, Kisututine. Some English missionaries and several hundred native Christians were present. The Rev. A. D. Shaw, in describing the service, says that the people not only brought corn and other products as offerings, but so much money that the bags and plates were too small to contain it, and so it was poured into the font, which was half filled with coins. The collection amounted to 565 rupees, equal to $229. On the next day sixty-three candidates were confirmed in the church, and there were 150 communicants. Two days afterward Bishop Parker started with the Rev. J. Blackburn for Mambria by an intirely new route through a yet unknown country.

—A press dispatch from New Brunswick, N. J., says that a meeting of the ministers of that city has been held, and the plan advocated by the Evangelical Alliance recently held in Washington for more thorough work in bringing people into the churches and purifying the city spiritually and politically adopted. The churches will appoint committees, who will canvass the entire city after the manner of political canvassers, and afterward will devote their attention to those who attend no churches, to the end that they may be brought under Christian influences, believing this will effect great reform and be the means of electing better men to local offices.

—The following bequests to religious and educational institutions are contained in the will of the late David Whitcomb, of Worcester, Mass.: American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions, $25,000; Massachusetts Home Missionary Society, $25,000; American College and Education Society, $5,000; Congregational Mission of New York, $5,000; Doane College of Nebraska, $13,000; Carleton College, Northfield, Minn., $14,000; American Home Missionary Society of New York, $10,000; American Home Missionary Society of New York, $5,000, to be used in the South and among the Indians and Chinese of this country; Worcester City Missionary Society, $1,641.50; Amherst College, $10,000, to establish a Whitcomb scholarship fund.

—One by one the Roman Catholic religious orders which were driven out by the May laws are being readmitted or recalled into Prussia. At Breslau the Ursulines have received from government permission to open a boarding school and high school for girls. At Fulda the Ministers of the Interior and of Cult have jointly permitted a renewed settlement of the Franciscans of the stricter observance on the Frauenberg. At Dusseldorf the Clares have been permitted to return to their old convent. Similar permission has been given to the Ursulines to return to Fritzlar, whence they had to fly to France in 1874. The Benedictine nuns, of Fulda, have sold their property in France and returned to occupy their former convent and church.

LITERATURE.

There is a large and attractive variety in the table of contents of the Century for January. Its subjects embrace an authoritative account of the formation of Lincoln's Cabinet in the history by the President's private secretaries, with many unpublished letters; Mr. Kennan's startling record of personal investigations of "Russian Provincial Prisons"; Professor Atwater's valuable and practical paper on the "Pecuniary Economy of Food"; an illustrated article on "The Catacombs of Rome" by Rev. Dr. Phillip Schaff; in the drama a biographical sketch of John Gilbert, with portraits by J. W. Alexander; in art and literature a critique and personal sketch of John Ruskin by Mr. Stillman, with an excellent portrait for the frontispiece of the number; in sport "An Elk Hunt on the Plains" by Schwatka, with drawings by the younger Inness; in travel "The Upper Missouri and the Great Falls" by E. V. Smalley, illustrated; in fiction contributions by Cable, Eggleston, Stockton, and by the author of "Sister Todhunter's Heart," by H. S. Edwards; four pages of war aftermath; letters on Industrial Education in the Public Schools from superintendents who have tried it; in sheer fun, a play by Mark Twain entitled "Meisterschaft"; shorter articles on "The American Book"—a plea for international copyright by Mr. Cleland of Indianapolis; on "A Southern Man ahead of his Time" (J. R Pettigru); on the Piedmont Exposition; on "Hawthorne's Loyalty," etc., etc.; and a large variety of poems from different parts of the country. It is a superb number.

Whittier's beautiful poem telling the legend of "The Brown Dwarf of Rugen," will delight all the readers of St. Nicholas for January. We are glad to note that the conscientious poet explains his use of an old legend. It is illustrated by the frontispiece and other drawings by E. H. Blashfield. An interesting character-sketch by Richard M. Johnston is called "Poor Mr. Brown," and a cleverly suggested lesson is enforced. There is a novel article telling of "The Amusements of Arab Children, by Henry W. Jessup, with life-like pictures by Harry Fenn. "How the Yankees came to Blackwood," by Louise Herrick, amusingly represents the panic caused by the capture of a Southern village, and has characteristic sketches by Kemble. Nora Perry has a poem, "Balboa," which is well illustrated by Frank Day. "What did the Butcher Boy Say?" is the first of a series of "Housekeeping Songs," set to music.

Some years ago a company of infidels began the publication of a periodical called "Man," in which they attempted to propagate their baleful sentiments. In December a fine monthly began to be issued from New York, called "Woman." It is a handsome magazine with an attractive and artistic cover, and among its illustrations has portraits of Dinah Mulock Craik and Jenny Lind Goldschmidt. "The Astor Library," "The Swedish Nightingale," "Home Decoration," and "Woman in the Brahmo Somaj" are articles well deserving attention. The departments for mothers, daughters, the household, societies for Christian work, etc., are helpful and suggestive, but some of the stories are too trashy to be redeemed even by a good moral.

The English Illustrated Magazine gives us some bright pictures of the old Exeter road out of London, a highway full of history in the days of the coach. The illustrations picture old English buildings and scenery in such free and happy style that we seem set back a century or two in them. The old city of Antwerp has some choice portions of its private history sketched by Katherine S. Macquoid, and a no less pleasing article tells of the attractions of Southern Tyrol.

Interesting articles in the Library Magazine of December 31 are: Secret Societies in the Two Sicilies, by E. Strachan Morgan; M. Pasteur and Hydrophobia, from Chamber's Journal; In the Land of Beer, from Cornhill Magazine; Courses of Reading, by James Payne; The Hanging of Pictures, by Charles L. Eastlake. The Library Magazine is clubbed with the Cynosure for $2 10 per year for the two.

The first Annual Report of the New York State Board of Arbitration is a valuable document for which the Cynosure is indebted to Mr. B. Tunnicliff. It is valuable as a history of some New York strikes in 1886.

LODGE NOTES.

District Assembly 49, K. of L., New York city, has re-elected James E. Quinn Master Workman. Mr. Quinn was one of the delegation of four that was sent to make argument before Governor Oglesby in behalf of mercy for the anarchists.

Mr. Powderly denies the reports that he is opposed to the Reading strike, and has directed that the entire matter be presented to the general executive board of the Knights of Labor, who as yet have received no official notification of the trouble.

The printers on all the French papers in Quebec are on a strike for nine hours' work and increased pay, which was refuscd. The papers denounce Cardinal Gibbons for supporting the Knights of Labor, and approve Cardinal Taschereau's views.

Mrs. Leonora Barry, the general investigator of the Knights of Labor, has issued a circular letter to the female members of the order wherever found. It deals with the subject of the condition of working women and girls, and strongly advocates the expenditure of money for education instead of strikes.

A letter of Cardinal Taschereau was read in all the Roman Catholic churches of Quebec Sunday strongly advising all Catholics not to enroll themselves in the society of the Knights of Labor, and, if enrolled, to withdraw as soon as possible. At the French Cathedral, after the reading of the letter, the official clergyman strongly charged the congregation to obey the letter, and classifying those who belonged to the Knights of Labor as imbeciles.

Intelligence comes from Madisonville, Madison county, Texas, that a body of armed citizens calling themselves "Reformers," shot and killed Bill Bolo and then hanged Red Paige and another man, whose name is not known. Alf Whitten, a friend of Bolo, was attacked and driven from the town. Bolo and his friends were in favor of maintaing the saloons. Shcriff Black has applied to Governor Ross for troops. A state of terror prevails.

And now there is a row over the bronze commemorative medals of Mr. Beecher [Henry W], ordered by the "Memorial and Executive Committee of the Grand Army of the Republic of King's county." The medals were to be sold at a dollar and a half each, or something such. They fell flat, metaphorically speaking. The caster of the medals applicd for the balance of his bill. The response of Mr. Phillips, the treaaurer of the committee, was that the committee had sunk $250 in "the devilish things" and had no more money. They could get no one to touch them — that is to say, "the devilish things."—Catholic Review.

Old Age and How to Enjoy It.

A most appropriate gift book for "The Old Folks at Home."

Compiled by REV. S. G. LATHROP.

Introduction by
REV. ARTHUR EDWARDS, D. D.,
(Editor N. W. Christian Advocate.)

The object of this volume is to give to that great army who are fast hastening toward the "great beyond" some practical hints and helps as to the best way to make the most of the remainder of that now is, and to give comfort and help life that is to come.

"It is a tribute to the Christianity that honors the gray head and refuses to consider the oldish man a burden or an obstacle. The book will aid and comfort every reader."—Northwestern Christian Advocate.

"The selections are very precious. Springing from such numerous and pure fountains, they can but afford a refreshing and healthful draught for every aged traveller to the great beyond."—Witness.

PERSECUTION

By the Roman Catholic Church.

A Moral Mystery how any Friend of Religious Liberty could Consent to "Hand over Ireland to Parnellite Rule."

By Rev. John Lee, A. M., B. D.

General Viscount Wolseley: "Interesting."
Chicago Inter-Ocean: "A searching review."
Christian Cynosure: "It deserves a wide circulation at the present time."
Bishop Coze, Protestant Episcopal, of Western New York: "Most useful publication; a logical sequel to 'Our Country,' by Josiah Strong."
Emile De Laveleye of Belgium, the great publicist: "I have read with the greatest interest your answer to Cardinal Manning. I think Rome's encroachments in the United States ought to be carefully watched and resisted."
Rev. C. C. McCabe, D. D.: "It is a useful book and ought to have a wide sale. You are dealing with a question which will soon dominate every other in American politics. The Assassin of Nations is in our midst and is approaching the Temple of Liberty with stealthy tread. The people of this country will understand the Belfast frenzy some day better than they do now."
The Right Hon. Lord Robert Montague: "I have read it with the greatest pleasure, and with amazement at the intimate acquaintance with the acts of Romanism in our midst which you have evinced. I only wish that, instead of publishing your pamphlet in Chicago, you had sown it broadcast over England, Scotland and Ireland."

HOME AND HEALTH.

THE EXHAUSTIVENESS OF CITY LIFE.—There are advantages in city life, but there are results that lessen the gains. It is not merely that there are risks from sewage gas and from crowded rooms, but from numbers that hinder interest. City life brings out the ingenuity of man, but there is a great exhaustion of vital power. There is constant wear and tear of the system by the multiplicity of things claiming attention. Think of the committee meetings to be attended, of the multiplied agencies demanding attention; of the fierce competition for existence; of the strain put on men of small capital by the existence and advertising power of large houses; of the many sights compelling thought; of the paralysis sometimes produced by the mightier work to be overtaken; and the difficulty of making oneself felt amid the moving crowds of the city. Then add the lateness of the hours the shops remain open; the amount of gas used and bad air breathed; the rapidity with which every customer has to be attended to; the distances it is necessary to travel, on trivial business frequently, in a city; the hurrying to catch trains; the complex engagements to be met, and it must be confessed that city life is most exhaustive. The drafts on nervous energy are constant. There is great excitement, and the loss caused is not so readily repaired as in the country. The air is not so pure. It has been vitiated by bad odors from every source breathed and re-breathed; there is no ozone in it. This accounts for the sense of lassitude so many experience. The superintendence of country toil or actual work has a more restorative influence than city work. Agriculture has been thought beneath many, and it has thus been left to lower minds, as though the best cultivator of the land would be one who had least cultivation of brain. To what, however, do men of leisure and competency so readily turn as to farming? It is evidently the normal state in which pleasure and profit are best combined. Man was not intended to be a mere machine to get money. The growth of cities means that men live rather to gain wealth than to produce it. Men may make money there, but at what a cost it is! How much is lost! Some say, "No. There are these advantages in town: that lectures, services, and amusements can be more readily reached." Nearly all could be gained in the country under better management.—Sel.

GOOD LOOKS AND WALKING.—We are often twitted as a nation with the fact that our women, beautiful as they are in the first years of womanhood, have not sufficient stamina to keep their good looks when the cares of matrimony arrive. One reason given is that American women never take walking exercises, and here is a lady writing to the Savannah News that there is no reason why the average woman should not add tenfold to her enjoyment of life and of out-of-door living by cultivating the noble art of walking. "A delicate woman, properly dressed, and who knows how to walk, can do ten miles of a summer afternoon without injury, when an equivalent amount of other exercise might produce serious injury. Walking is the natural and normal exercise, and hurts no woman who sets rightly about it. A woman who is unaccustomed to vigorous walking in order to become a good pedestrian should look first to her shoes. These should be broad across the forward part of the foot, offering not the least obstruction to the free movement of the toes. The heels should be low and broad, and the shoe should fit rather snugly about the heel and instep. The full dress equipment should weigh upon honest scales no more than two and a half or three pounds and should hang from the shoulders without any band pinned or buttoned or laced about the waist. No woman can walk in a corset. The walker must be comfortable enough to be unconscious of her attire. A hat that shades the eyes is in order. So prepared, try any distance that does not prove fatiguing as an initial experiment. It will probably be from a mile and a half to two miles, and must be walked at a brisk pace, three miles and a half an hour being a good limit. When this can be done without backache or foot weariness, and a well woman ought to have no difficulty at her first trial, increase the distance during the leisure days of the summer vacation daily, maintaining the same gait, and fifteen miles a day for a week or fortnight in succession, twenty-five miles a day on any occasion that demands it, will be found within any ordinary capacity with a month or six week's training."

A TERRIBLE DEATH.—Mrs. Marie Katlier, a German woman, of Topeka, Kan., was horribly burned Dec. 15, and died from her injuries. Mrs. Katlier discovered that the oil in her lamp needed replenishing. She blew out the flame, as she supposed, unscrewed the top of the lamp, and proceeded to fill the lamp from the oil can. An explosion followed, she was instantly enveloped in flames, and died a terrible death.

MONTANA HEARD FROM.—Recent railroad extensions have developed exceptionally fine mineral, stock and farming districts. Maps and full particulars, free, upon application to C. H. WARREN, Gen. Pass. Agt., St. Paul, Minn

STOCK IN MINNESOTA.—From an exclusive grain country, Minnesota is being rapidly tranformed into the finest stock and dairy State in the Union. Cheap lands still obtainable, convenient to railroad. Particulars, free, upon application to C. H. WARREN, Gen. Pass. Agt., St. Paul, Minn.

NEW BUSINESS CENTERS.—The building of railroads in a new and fertile country creates many new towns, affording excellent business opportunities. Particulars regarding such opportunities in Montana, Minnesota and Dakota will be sent upon application to C. H. WARREN, Gen. Pass. Agt., St. Paul, Minn.

PROSPEROUS. North Dakota never had better crops than those just harvested. Many opportunities to secure fine Government lands recently surveyed, near excellent coal fields and adjacent to railroads. Maps and full particulars, free, upon application to C. H. WARREN, Gen. Pass. Agt. St. Paul, Minn.

SUCCESS. Are you mortgaged, paying heaving rents, or running behind? Can you move to new location? Excellant lands, cheap, which will increase in value several fold in five years. No other such opportunities existing. Full particulars, free, upon application to C. H. WARREN, Gen. Pass. Agt., St. Paul, Minn.

FAILURE OF CROPS is an unknown experience in Central and Northern Dakota and Minnesota. Maps and full particulars regarding lands, prices, etc., sent free. Address C. H. WARREN, Gen. Pass. Agt., St. Paul, Minn.

WHY WORK FOR ANOTHER, or on small salary? Why continue working on a worn-outfarm? Why try to secure a living from such high-priced or heavily mortgaged farms? Why work on rented land? WHY not start for yourself? Why not secure at once some of the low-priced but very fertile and well located lands adjacent to railroads now to be obtained by those going to Northern Dakota and Minnesota, where you can make a larger net profit per acre than on the high priced or worn-out land you now occupy? Why not go and look the situation over and see for yourself, or at least obtain further information, which will be sent free, if you will Address C. H. WARREN, Gen. Pass. Agt., St. Paul, Minn. ?

The Master's Carpet.

ESTABLISHED 1846 MUNN & Co. PATENTS NEW YORK

After Forty years' experience in the preparation of more than One Hundred Thousand applications for patents in the United States and Foreign countries, the publishers of the Scientific American continue to act as solicitors for patents, caveats, trade-marks, copyrights, etc., for the United States, and to obtain patents in Canada, England, France, Germany, and all other countries. Their experience is unequaled and their facilities are unsurpassed.

Drawings and specifications prepared and filed in the Patent Office on short notice. Terms very reasonable. No charge for examination of models or drawings. Advice by mail free.

Patents obtained through Munn & Co. are noticed in the SCIENTIFIC AMERICAN, which has the largest circulation and is the most influential newspaper of its kind published in the world. The advantages of such a notice every patentee understands.

This large and splendidly illustrated newspaper is published WEEKLY at $3.00 a year, and is admitted to be the best paper devoted to science, mechanics, inventions, engineering works, and other departments of industrial progress, published in any country. It contains the names of all patentees and title of every invention patented each week. Try it four months for one dollar. Sold by all newsdealers.

If you have an invention to patent write to Munn & Co., publishers of Scientific American, 361 Broadway, New York.

Handbook about patents mailed free.

New Edition, Jan. 1, 1888,—16 Pages of New Maps.

"A Beautiful Atlas."

ALDEN'S HOME ATLAS of the WORLD. In one large quarto vol., 11x14 inches in size, containing more handsomely engraved and colored maps, and of a better quality than ever before found in an Atlas selling at less than $10.00. Also an index of over 5000 cities, rivers, mountains, etc., throughout the world, showing exact location. Cloth binding, price, $2.00; post. 28c.

"A beautiful Atlas. It leaves nothing to be desired in the way of maps."—Christian Standard, Cincinnati, O.

"Five dollars would be cheap for it. At two dollars it is half a gift."—Herald of Gospel Liberty, Dayton, O.

"A most comprehensive and useful work, and at a price one-fifth of that usually charged."—The Mail, Chicago.

"Alden's Home Atlas of the World is equal, if not superior, to atlases published heretofore for $10."—Post, Pittsburgh.

"Is superior in all important respects to any Atlas heretofore published at a less price than $10.00."—The Guardian, Philadelphia.

"This handsome, convenient, and attractive Atlas contains all the latest additions to geographical knowledge."—Press, Albany, N. Y.

"The volume is handsome in appearance and so marvelously cheap that it will doubtless find an immense sale."—Messenger, Philadelphia, Pa.

"A marvel of art, of information, and of price. The wonder is how so much and of such a character can be sold at so low a price."—Church Press, New York City.

"Is just the kind of atlas for which there is a real need. A complete one, tastily and handily bound, and surprisingly moderate in price."—Press, Philadelphia, Pa.

"For the excellence of its preparation and handsome binding, it is one of the marvels of cheapness for which American readers are already much indebted to this publisher."—Christian Cynosure, Chicago.

"We have deferred a notice of Alden's Home Atlas of the World, but meantime have had much occasion to refer to it. We find that as a rule it serves us better than the older ones. It is one of the mammoth ten dollar works that Alden expects to make money by selling for two dollars."—Christian Leader, Boston, Mass.

"Besides giving a map for every country of any importance—and many of these maps are well executed and contain the latest geographical data—every considerable town is included in an alphabetical list, with the country where situated, and the latitude and longitude."—The Bulletin, San Francisco, Cal.

"Up to the present the best atlases have cost from $25 to $40, while $12 was the very lowest that a decent one could be obtained at. Now John B. Alden has published a work that for the remarkably low price of $2 is a fair substitute for these expensive atlases."—Morning Herald, Rochester, N. Y.

The Literary Revolution Catalogue (84 pages) sent free on application. ALDEN'S publications are NOT sold by book-sellers—no discounts allowed except as advertised. Books sent for examination before payment, satisfactory reference being given.

FARM NOTES.

COAL AND WOOD ASHES.

Wood ashes are excellent for the hens to scratch in and pick over, as they contain bits of charcoal and other materials, but for the dust bath the coal ashes, sifted fine, are best. The coarser portions, however, may be thrown where the hens can get at them, so as to provide gritty material in cold weather. On the hen house floor, or under the roost, fine coal ashes provide an excellent absorbent and prevent loss of the droppings. Wood ashes being alkaline sometimes cause sores on the hens when used for dusting.

When you sell your produce by sample show a sample that the goods will equal.

A mistake made by many farmers is wintering more fowls than the quarters will accommodate. Nothing so soon engenders disease.

Ohio will hold one hundred farmers' institutes the coming winter, and Wisconsin has arranged for eighty-two.

Don't force your hens to lay themselves out by giving too much stimulating, egg-producing food, especially if your birds are worth anything.

Dr. Hoskins says that the discovery of the Wealthy apple has extended profitable apple culture at least one hundred miles farther to the north.

Few farmers give that attention to their horses' feet that they should give. Most men rub and curry well enough, perhaps, and many take great pride and plenty of time in smoothing the horse's hide; but seldom is it that they think of that most indispensable part, the horse's feet, and stop to give them that little attention and inspection that is almost daily necessary.

There may be some old building standing about your premises or a corner in your barn or some out-house which could be fixed up without much trouble or expense to answer the purpose of an ice house, if you have not such a convenience already upon your farm. Those who have tried it only know what a convenience a good supply of ice is during the hot months of summer.

WARM WATER FOR STOCK.

The subject of warming water for stock during the cold weather is just now occupying the attention of farmers. The experiments made are interesting, and the results are almost universally reported in favor of the use of the warm water. A correspondent of the American Cultivator sums up the evidence on the subject thus:

Stock kept in warm stables require warmer water than if they are kept in cold stables, so that this subject is doubling in importance. A cow kept in a warm stable and turned out to drink ice-cold water, 32°, being a temperature of over 60° lower than that of the system, makes a great contrast, which must give discomfort to the animal and loss to its owner. The profits of farming are so small that it becomes necessary that all leaks should be looked after, even the small ones, and especially the larger ones, like the one under discussion.

In the reading of five agricultural papers and in conversing with many farmers I find all are unanimous in the opinion that our stock should be provided with tepid or warm water, but the degree of temperature to which it should be raised becomes a question upon which writers do not agree, though none seem to know or are positive, varying in their opinions from 50 to 113 degrees. An average opinion seems to be from 60 to 80 degrees. It is also agreed by all that in warming the water a saving is made in the feed if nothing more. Nearly all believe there is a saving in flesh, milk, and the manure pile, in addition to the feed.

I have seen but one estimate of the value of feed saved daily per cow, and that was eight cents, which would amount to several millions of dollars in every State yearly, a sum worth saving; and this sum, be it remembered, is net gain, after the expense of warming the water is taken out. One writer says that he drew all the water that forty cows drank for one winter one mile from a spring, rather than have them drink from a river near by, and he thought it paid him well.

The result of an experiment at an agricultural school in France showed an increase in milk of one-third, the water being warmed to 113 degrees. Other parties claim an increase of from 20 to 30 per cent. At the Agricultural College in Kansas an experiment resulted in the increase of milk 8½ per cent the water being warmed to 65 degrees. Another experiment in France showed an increase in milk of three pints daily per cow by warming the water instead of using pump water.

Professor J. P. Roberts, of Cornell University, says: "The water consumed by two sets of cows, containing three animals each, was weighed for a period of thirteen days. One set drank an average of 110 pounds of cold water each day per cow, and the other set an average of 120 pounds of warm water per cow each day." I have another statement that cows will drink one-third more when water is warmed to 80 degrees than they will at 32 degrees, and that the milk will increase one-fifth to one-fourth and without deterioration. Another statement. "A cow that makes six pounds of butter a week on cold water will make seven pounds if the water is warmed." As milk is from 80 to 90 per cent water, it is well to look after the quantity, quality and temperature of the water consumed.

A few years since a Mr. Dancel communicated to the French Academy of Sciences an experiment to show the increase of milk by the increase of water consumed. He found when the same kind and amount of food was liberally moistened it produced more milk than when fed dry, and the milk was adjudged to be of as good quality. Again, Mr. Dancel asserts that the yield of milk from cows is in direct proportion to the quantity of water taken. He also says that cows which habitually drink less than twenty-seven quarts of water per day are necessarily poor cows. Such cows will give from five to seven quarts of milk daily, while cows that drink fifty quarts prove to be excellent milkers. This experiment was tried in the summer.

This subject is fraught with much importance to farmers, and it should receive due consideration. Here is an open field for some inventive genius to devise some apparatus for the warming of water for stock which shall combine four qualities, cheapness, durability, practicability, and safety. There are a few devices for this purpose already before the public which no doubt have merits.

AN UNDISCOVERED COUNTRY.

For many years traditions and occasional reports obtained from traders and ranchmen have been repeated, regarding the wonderful mineral and agricultural resources of central and northern Montana, which has been terra incognito. Statements from prospectors who occasionally ventured into this country verified to the fullest extent the reports regarding the unbounded wealth of the Territory, but the great uncertainty and expense of transportation has heretofore prevented any development of this district. Recently a great change has taken place. The extension of the line of the St. Paul, Minneapolis & Manitoba Railway through this Territory and the announced policy of the Company to, in every way, aid in developing its resources, mineral and agricultural, will cause a great transformation in the next few months, from which those who get in first will derive the greatest benefit. An elaborate detailed map, with description of the country, can be secured upon application to C. H. WARREN, General Passenger Agent, St. Paul, Minn.

and to help break down everything that hinders its spread.

It teaches that men need to be converted to the personal Christ, and not simply to a system of truth, and that there must be implanted in them a divine life as well as a correct belief. The seeks to show that the division of Christians into sects is a great wrong, and a very serious obstacle to the advancement of the Redeemer's kingdom, and it seeks to show Christians how they may be one in Christ, and to persuade and help them thus to unite. The

MASON & HAMLIN ORGANS.

The cabinet organ was introduced in its present form by Mason & Hamlin in 1861. Other makers followed in the manufacture of these instruments, but the Mason & Hamlin Organs have always maintained their supremacy as the best in the world.

Mason & Hamlin offer, as demonstration of the unequaled excellence of their organs, the fact that at all of the great World's Exhibitions, since that of Paris, 1867, in competition with best makers of all countries, they have invariably taken the highest honors. Illustrated catalogues free.

PIANOS.

Mason & Hamlin's Piano Stringer was introduced by them in 1882, and has been pronounced by experts the "greatest improvement in pianos in half a century."

A circular, containing testimonials from three hundred purchasers, musicians, and tuners, sent, together with descriptive catalogue, to any applicant.

Pianos and Organs sold for cash or easy payments; also rented.

POPULAR COMMENTARIES

In the critical biblical literature of the century few books have been so unqualifiedly endorsed as

Jamieson, Fausset & Brown's Commentary

On the Old and New Testaments. It has been tried, tested and proven, during one of the most active periods ever known in biblical research. That it has not been found wanting is evident in the still unabated demand. At considerable outlay we have issued a new edition of this valuable work in clear type, attractively bound, and at a price much lower than any complete commentary ever before issued.

In Extra Fine English Cloth, sprinkled edge, the full set, (4 vols.).....$ 8.00
In Half Morocco, the full set, (4 vols.).....10 00

"The BEST condensed Commentary on the whole Bible is the Commentary on the Old and New Testaments, by Jamieson, Fausset & Brown. It contains notes of the choicest and richest character on all parts of the Holy Bible. It is the cream of the commentaries carefully collected by three eminent scholars. Its critical introduction to each book of Scripture, its eminently practical notes, its numerous pictorial illustrations, commend it strongly to the Sunday-school worker and to the clergyman. Then it is such a marvel of cheapness."—Rev. J. H. Vincent, D. D., in "Aids to Bible Study."

The leading clergymen and college professors of the country unite with Dr. Vincent in placing this commentary in the first rank of all biblical aids.

The Facts Stated.

HON. THURLOW WEED ON THE MORGAN ABDUCTION.

This is a sixteen page pamphlet comprising a letter written by Mr. Weed, and read at the unveiling of the monument erected to the memory of Capt. William Morgan. The frontispiece is an engraving of the monument. It is a history of the unlawful seizure and confinement of Morgan in the Canandaigua jail, his subsequent conveyance by Freemason to Fort Niagara, and drowning in Lake Ontario. He not only subscribes his NAME to the letter, but ATTACHES HIS AFFIDAVIT to it.

In closing his letter he writes: I now look back through an interval of fifty-six years with a conscious sense of having been governed through the "Anti-Masonic excitement" by a sincere desire, first, to vindicate the violated laws of my country, and next, to arrest the great power and dangerous influences of "secret societies."

The pamphlet is well worth perusing, and is doubtless the last historical article which this great journalist and politician wrote. [Chicago, National Christian Association.] Single copy, 5 cents.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

WASHINGTON.

Congressman M. A. Foran said Wednesday that he and all other Randall Democrats would unite with the Republicans in Congress for the defeat of any bill framed in accordance with President Cleveland's anti-tariff message.

It is understood that General Bragg, of Wisconsin, will receive the appointment of minister to Mexico, and that ex-Congressman Stockslager will succeed Mr. Sparks as commisioner of the general land office.

The Corean Embassy, Pa Chun Lun, Minister Plenipotentiary, and his several secretaries and interpreters, arrived in Washington Monday night and are staying at the Ebbitt House, where they have engaged a large suite of rooms.

COUNTRY.

The draft-horse war in Illinois has ter minated in a victory for the Percheron breeders. The State Board of Agriculture voted to retain a separate classification in the premium list for that breed, as distinguished from the general grouping of French draft horses, which will not be permitted to exhibit in direct competition with Percherons.

The first satisfactory observation through the Lick telescope was made Saturday evening at San Jose, Cal. The sky was clear, the weather cool and no rain. The big telescope was first pointed at nebula in the constellation of Orion and the observation was very satisfactory.

A dispatch from Helena, M.T., Jan. 7th, says in some sections of the territory the cold during the past twenty-four hours has been almost unprecedented. At Belgrade yesterday the spirit thermometer was 52 degrees below zero, the coldest night since 1865. All freight trains are abandoned. Passenger trains going West are from twenty-four to thirty six hours late. No reliable returns have been received as to the condition of stock throughout Eastern Montana. Before the present storm cattle were in excellent condition and well prepared for winter, but stock men are uneasy, and a fortnight of inclement weather would result in serious losses. The thermometer ranges from 14 to 41 below zero, with an average of a foot of snow on the ground.

A conference was held Saturday night in Jersey City between representatives of the various trades involved in the Reading strike, and it was decided that the men should be ordered out of the Wyoming mine. This action, it was said, would practically stop work in the anthracite coal region. A prominent member of District Assembly 49 said yesterday that the Knights had fully made up their minds to fight this strike to the end, and would make no attempt now to secure arbitration. Closing the Wyoming mines, he added, would result in thousands of men being thrown out of work from want of fuel to run factories and mills.

Attention has been called by Judge Spear, United States district judge at Savannah, Georgia, in his charge to the grand jury, to the conflict between the federal and State laws on the subject of the liquor traffic, the State prohibiting and the federal government granting licenses for the sale of liquor. It is suggested that a memorial be addressed to Congress on the subject.

For the season of 1887 the total production of corn in the United States was 1,456,000,000 bushels, value $640,000,000; of wheat 456,000,000 bushels, value $309,000,000; of oats 659,000,000 bushels, value $200,000,000.

An unsuccessful attempt was made near Ottumwa, Iowa, Friday night, to rob the express car of the west bound train on the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy railroad.

The Pennsylvania Railroad miners' train, carrying 500 men returning from work, was wrecked at Shamokin, Pa., Jan. 4. A sill was wedged on the roadbed. This is the third attempt to wreck the train. The miners are very angry and threaten vengeance. No person was seriously injured. The miners riding on the train are all Knights of Labor working at mines paying their price. They do not understand the animus of the wreckers, but believe they are some dissatisfied parties who desire a stoppage of mining in the whole region.

An embryo volcano is said to have been discovered near Zollarsville, Pa. Dense smoke is reported to be issuing from the ground, and hot lumps of clay have been thrown up.

A premature blast on the new railroad near Laurel Run, Pa., Thursday, killed four Italians and badly injured seven others.

A span in the new central viaduct, now being constructed at Cleveland, fell Thursday. It was ninety feet long and eighty-five feet above the ground. A large car on which there were supplies was pushed off the end of the span by accident, and in falling it knocked braces and beams out of place, and the span went also. There were eight workmen on the span when it fell, two of whom were killed and all injured.

The navigation building at the Brooklyn Navy Yard was destroyed by fire early Friday morning, entailing a loss of $200,000. Many valuable maps, plans, and designs were burned.

The Board of Trade of Wichita, Kas., has passed resolutions announcing that it has caused a searching investigation to be made throughout Southwestern Kansas for the purpose of ascertaining the extent of the suffering there during the cold weather this winter with the result that not one case of death by freezing or starvation has occurred. The resolutions strongly denounce the authors of the false and sensational reports, which were given such wide circulation in the East.

It is stated that no Reading collieries are being worked and that the strike is more serious than acknowledged by the officials. The shipments of coal are scanty, and reports are current of furnaces shutting down for want of fuel. The demand for coke has materially increased. Albert Stevens, chairman of the miners' joint organization at Pottsville, has, by request, telegraphed Bradstreet's that 20,000 Reading mine workers and 18,000 railway employes are out on the strike. There are no indications of a speedy settlement.

FOREIGN.

This has so far been one of the severest winters on record in Austria. Cases of death from the effects of exposure are reported daily in Vienna. The water supply is beginning to fail. The ice in the Danube has reached Vienna. The Platten-See is frozen over for the first time in many years.

The sentence of two months' imprisonment passed upon Wilfrid Blunt for having addressed a proclaimed meeting at Woodford has been confirmed by the court to which an appeal was taken.

The Pope's speech to the pilgrims is regarded as distinctly putting an end to the idea of conciliation with the Italian government:

An 1,800 ton bark, believed to be an American vessel, has been wrecked at the entrance of Waterford (Ireland) harbor. Her crew, consisting of twenty-five persons, were all drowned. The vessel is supposed to be the ship Eureka, Captain Southard, which sailed from San Francisco Aug. 10 for Queenstown, with a cargo of wheat, and which ran by Queenstown in a gale.

THE CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE,

The CYNOSURE represents the Christian movement against the Secret Lodge System; discusses fairly and fearlessly the various movements of the lodge as they appear to public view, and reveals the secret machinery of corruption in politics, courts, and social and religious circles.
There are in the United States
Some 200 different Lodges,
With 2,000 000 members,
Costing $20,000,000 yearly.
This mighty world power confronts the church and seeks to rule and ruin every Christian Reform.
No Christian Reform Movement of the day is so necessary, yet so unpopular and beset with difficulties, as that which would remove the dark pall of oaths, dark-lantern meetings, secret signs, mysterious and pagan worship about altars condemned by the Word of the Living God.
No other paper gives the best of its correspondence and editorial strength to this vitally important reform. The CYNOSURE should be your paper in addition to any other you may take.
Because it is the representative of the reform against the Lodge, with ablest arguments, biographical and historical sketches, letters from lecturers, seceders and sufferers from lodge persecution. The ablest writers on this subject from all denominations and all parts of the country contribute. Special departments for letters from our metropolitan centers, on the relation of secret orders to current events.
The CYNOSURE began its twentieth volume September 22, 1887, with features of special and popular interest.

The confirmation of Mr. Lamar of Mississippi as Justice of the Supreme Court last Monday was not unexpected. The vote was close—32 to 28—but the party lines were not so closely drawn as is usual on such test votes. The three Republicans who voted for the confirmation had it in their power to defeat it. The reports of the debate in executive session show that the Democrats were either so confident of their case that they did not care to discuss it, or else they "feared the people" should they attempt a defense of Mr. Lamar's rebellion record. That record was made the ground of Republican objection. It was enough; for, if every other public office may be given up, to the Supreme Bench should be admitted only those whose lives have been clear of so great a transgression.

"It is the unexpected that always happens" is as good for a political proverb, as for the Chicago police when anarchists are to be executed. Our Washington letter notices the character of Carlisle's committee on the liquor traffic. The anti-prohibitionists all regard it "safe," a good committee to smother any troublesome bill. But their very confidence may help to defeat their object; and a special to the Inter Ocean the other day shows how uncertain are the predictions based on these hopes: "The anti-prohibitionists are a good deal concerned at the prospect of legislation this winter, and they have some ground to fear that Congress may pass a law which shall either provide for an experiment for the prohibition law in the District of Columbia, or for an extreme high-license bill. The apprehension on their part exists not because it is believed that there is a majority of either house which absolutely favors prohibition in itself, but because it is believed, with considerable reason, that in view of the temperance agitation which now prevails in many sections of the country, there will not be enough opponents of prohibition who have the courage of their convictions to defeat such a measure. It seems impossible to one acquainted with the opinions and habits of public men here to think that a prohibition law, even for the District of Columbia, could be enacted; but queer things have happened in politics, and the timidity of Congressmen on the subject of temperance agitation is just now one of the most striking pecularities of public life."

Now that the paternal side of our government is being invoked to furnish the people with a postal telegraph, we should not fail to understand the subject as thoroughly as possible. Can the government furnish us so efficient a service as private corporations? The post office department is always appealed to in reply. Our mail service is verily a wonder, whether we view the amount of work performed or its accuracy and promptness. But in the transmission of money through the mails, the various methods of registry, postal notes or money orders, are quite behind the express companies, who furnish a cheaper means, one just as safe, easier of collection, and in case of loss in transit much more convenient to replace. The efficieney of the express companies in this particular must not be overlooked in the argument for increase of the government service.

The spirit of union is yet moving among the churches. Not only are the North and South branches of the General Assembly Presbyterians sending out committees of conference to shake hands over the ineffaceable color line, but the United Presbyterians and the Associate Reformed Presbyterians, whose headquarters are at Due West, North Carolina, have also been exchanging proposals of union. On the last Thursday of 1887 committees from the United Presbyterian General Assembly and the Reformed Presbyterian Synod met in Allegheny City. There were among the number Rev. Drs. Harper, Reid, D. W. Carson, McAllister, McFeeters, and J. R. Wylie. No bar to the union of the denominations was met until the question of civil government arose. The committees adopted a joint report stating the general harmony of the churches, and the divergence of opinion respecting the authority of Christ in the State. These tentative proposals of union seem to foretell ultimate union, which ought to be accomplished without in any way relaxing the tension of doctrinal statement or daily practice respecting flagrant evils.

The terrible storm of last week may have been often equalled in severity; but years have passed since its like was known, and thousands are exposed now in a region where scores were ten years ago. As the region of blizzards and cyclones becomes more thickly settled these tremendous energies of nature will have more victims. But in Minnesota where these storms were so fatal years ago the growth of settlements seems to have produced favorable changes. The thermometer indicated a lower temperature in that State than in Dakota, but there are few fatalities reported. Out of this storm, dreadful as are its results, have come such accounts of heroism and devotion that we can see how brave and faithful a people are filling up these Dakota prairies. No clime of perpetual summer has the natural advantages which help produce such a race.

Our northern storms may help us sympathize with the hapless Chinese, stunned by their immense losses, of life, lands and goods, by the overflow of the Yellow River. One-sixth of the province of Honan, "the garden of China" is now a vast lake; the rest of the district is overrun with wretched refugees who escaped with nothing but their lives. In two other districts no less than three thousand large villages were engulfed in so short a space that scarcely any of their miserable inhabitants could escape. An extent of country as large as New Hampshire or Vermont is covered, and the sluggish government is bestirring itself to dig two immense canals to draw off the waters. This will give occupation to thousands, but what shall be done for the starving millions, who are utterly beggared and depending for subsistence upon charity? Must the death list of the flood, which already numbers, it is believed, hundreds of thousands, be equalled by that of the famine?

Sullivan, the Boston bruiser and wife-beater, having been accorded a professional interview with the Grand Master of English Masons, which was intended to be profoundly secret, the Grand Master is in a petty rage, because, like his other profound secrets, it got out. Some of the papers have as little regard for his feelings as if he were not Grand Master and Prince of Wales, and it is even said his queenly mother has written him a reproving letter for encouraging a brutal man and a brutal sport. The London Truth says of the affair: "The Prince of Wales and his set are furious that publicity should have been given to the visit which he paid to Sullivan's boxing exhibition. It was expressly stipulated that this private show-off, before Royalty, should be kept quite secret, and fervent promises were made by the pugilist's associates that they would not let the function transpire." And the Herald of Peace adds with great significance: "It may be easily believed that the Prince and his entourage are annoyed—not at what they have done—but at the unintended and unexpected publicity, and consequent public indignation which have resulted. And this raises the query—whether other questionable exhibitions may have received the successfully secret patronage of Royalty, unknown to the public and the press."

AMBIGUITY IN RELIGION UNPARDONABLE.

BY PRES. H. H. GEORGE.

Ambiguity means the use of a term or phrase in two different senses. There is always danger of confusion when it is used. But if a person were writing a treatise on science or philosophy and should use a term, such as "idea," or "reason," susceptible of two distinct meanings, he might avoid confusion by clearly explaining that such words were used in one meaning in Part I, and in the other in Part II. I say, such might be done and no damage result.

Business men might use the words, "money," "capital," "stock," etc., in two distinct senses, provided they always explained in what sense they used them. But in matters of religion no such double terms can ever be allowed. There is only one sense to genuine religion; everything else under the name is a falsehood and a deception. Double-dealing is but the practical carrying out of double meaning.

The worst objection that can be laid against the Masonic fraternity is its varied and changing and ever-accommodating use of the term "religion." To one man the system is presented as a religion that will purify him, even make him free from sin, and prepare him for the "grand lodge above;" to another whose liberality is unbounded, as a religion that will take into its embrace "Chinese, Arab, savage and brother Briton;" and to another, who says that he is a Christian, as no religion at all—only a benevolent institution. One member of the order can say it is all the church I want; another, it is no church at all.

It is no more than will be admitted to say that the system was designed to be for the accommodation of all shades of belief. It was framed to be a sufficient religion to all those who have no other and want no other; and no religion to those who would scruple to give up their accepted forms of belief.

In order to catch upon that religious consciousness that exists in all men, the founders have represented it as a religion. Mackey says "it is a religious institution." Again he says, "The religion of Masonry is theism." They have made prayer a prominent service in all their meetings. They give great prominence to the Bible; hold funeral services for the dead, and give a religious meaning to all the symbols they use. To suit a class of men who are the enemies of religion, who are haters of it and are prejudiced against it, they leave the essence of religion out; drop out the name and person and character of Christ, assuring such that it is just as good for the Mohammedan and Jew as for the Christian; and to a third class who have some conscience about religion they explain their allusions as only symbols; they don't mean religion at all: to such the ceremonies of Masonry are only "ancient and accepted" rites.

If such a varied use of terms and accommodating practice could be allowed anywhere else, in the sacred realm of religion they ought not to be and must not be tolerated. More than all the other evils of the order put together I view that the greatest, yes, a a hundred times the greatest, that makes it a pretense for religion when it is not a religion at all; that attempts to put a false religion in the place of the true one, to satisfy men with a so-called religion that cannot save! "There is no other name given under heaven nor among men whereby we can be saved," but by the name of Jesus.

If that fraternity will take off its religious mask, quit praying, quit parading the Bible, quit holding funeral services, and plant itself wholly on charity and benevolence, it will have removed one of its greatest dangers to the world. If men should be deceived in a proposed benevolent scheme it might be bad enough—yet many have been in insurance companies and various confidence games, and it was only a loss of money—but to be deceived religiously is fatal; it is a soul deception; it has an eternity of consequences. Men ought to tremble at the thought of playing religion, of pretending to give light to a poor, lost, ruined sinner, and of making a farce of the solemn scene of death, and the more dreadful reality of the resurrection.

There cannot possibly be more soul safety to a member of the Masonic order than to a man who is a member of a bridge company or a railroad or insurance company. But these latter associations never pretend to provide salvation for the soul. They do offer to men chances to make money, to provide for the body; but they never presume to prepare them for the life beyond. They can do just as much for a man's future as a secret society can, and that is, nothing! Then let the society say so, pretend so, act so, and declare itself as only a benefit to men in this life.

I do not say that this pretence of religion, this everybody-accommodating method and aim in religious rites and services is all the objection I have to these orders. I could enumerate their useless, unauthorized, heartless and horrid oaths; also their misnamed, mistaken and misdirected benevolences; also the obstructions they put before the progress wheels of both church and state. But I do say, for the sake of immortal souls who are going down to death and to the awful judgment of God thinking and believing that they are saved by its pretended religion, they ought to give up this hollow pretence. If it sends souls to an endless hell, will they not quit shamming, quit playing religion? The awful realities of death and the resurrection will tear the mask from such farce-like scenes as Hiram Abiff, and sober, thoughtful wise men ought to consider such facts now and retrace their steps.

Deception is bad enough anywhere; but at no point has it such awful consequences as in religion.

Then I close as I began, that double meaning and double dealing in religion are absolutely unpardonable.

THE INDIANS AND THEIR LEADERS IN THE REBELLION.

BY HON. S. C. POMEROY.

[Concluded from last week.]

The frauds perpetrated upon the civilized Indians have been shown. Let us now see what Albert Pike did for himself while claiming to act for the Indians. In the House Document, No. 98, containing the report of the Congressional investigation, 1873, I quote from page 495 the following:

Question.—Were you acquainted with John T. Cochran?

Answer.—Yes, sir.

Q.—Were you acquainted with the contract he made with the Choctaws? [This relates to a 30 per cent contract for collecting their claim for ceded lands.]

A.—Yes, sir. It was first made by me.

Q.—What interest had you in it?

A.—Five per cent. I had that in the beginning and claim it still.

Q.—Please state to the Committee what you know about the "net proceeds" claim, and the Cochran contract under it?

A.—In 1854 I made a contract to prosecute the Choctaws' claims, as well as other claims, and they were to pay me 25 per cent. Afterward a new contract was made with Cochran for 30 per cent. In my absence this was taken in Cochran's own name. Afterwards I associated Cochran and myself on equal terms, and others were associated.

Q.—Was money paid to attorneys for negotiating these treaties?

A.—I think they got $100,000!

Q.—Are you aware that $100,000 was paid by the Choctaws, and $100,000 by the Chickasaws also?

A.—I did not learn anything about that except by odds and ends at different times afterwards.

Q.—Do you know anything about the $250,000 in bonds, appropriated by Congress?

A.—Those bonds were a part of the "net proceeds." I succeeded in getting an appropriation for, and I claimed my fee for services out of those bonds.

It must be borne in mind this appropriation was made March 2d, two days before the close of Mr. Buchanan's administration, and after Pike had decided to rebel. Five hundred thousand dollars were appropriated: $250,000 in bonds, $250,000 in gold.

Q.—Do you claim a fee in the whole $500,000?

A.—Yes, sir. I received in coin $5,000, in Confederate money $30,000. I paid out $9,000, leaving of that money $21,000 for myself; but there was more money than that paid.

Q.—To whom was it paid?

A.—Five thousand dollars to Colonel Cooper; $2,000 to J. B. Lewis. The $250,000 was paid by the Treasury, and part of it put into a bank in New York. There was a house out there with whom I made the arrangement to pay me one half in coin, the other half in Confederate notes. Col. Cooper wanted some money and Williams paid him on my order. I never had a receipt, but have papers to show he got it.

Q.—Was Cooper, while acting as agent, interested in the Cochran claim?

A.—Yes, sir. He always claimed an interest in it.

(Document, page 497.)

Q.—Was you counsel for the Choctaws?

A.—Yes, I was counsel for the Choctaws, and I argued their case before the Committee of the Senate.

(See same Document, page 557.)

Allen Wright, sworn and examined.

Q.—State your age, residence and occupation?

A.—My age is 45; residence at Boggy depot. I am a minister of the Gospel.

Q.—Have you occupied any official position in the Choctaw nation?

A.—Yes, member of the Council, national treasurer, and principal chief.

(See page 559.)

Q.—What proportion of the $500,000 appropriated has been paid?

A.—Two hundred and fifty thousand dollars was paid: $250,000 in bonds were withheld.

Q.—Was one half paid to agents and attorneys who acted for you?

A.—Yes, sir.

Q.—Was Albert Pike one of the attorneys?

A.—He was. We did not know it. The first contract was made with Pike, but on account of his negligence he was shoved aside, and Cochran was employed.

Q.—Who paid the $100,000 over for the Choctaw nation?

A.—I did it.

Q.—To whom did you pay it?

A.—To John T. Cochran; according to the contract; we were to pay him $100,000.

Q.—By what right did you have the money?

A.—I was the national treasurer.

Q.—Where did you get the money?

A.—From the treasury of the United States.

Q.—Was that $100,000 ever paid back to your nation?

A.—It never was.

In bringing to notice the conduct of men who were engaged in the late rebellion, it may be observed that they were as good as the cause they were engaged in; and that, bad as that was, only a few men, comparatively, brought it about. Among the very worst acts I find these herein delineated, whereby an innocent and unprotected people confided to their agent and attorney all their interests, and were then deliberately swindled, impoverished, desolated.

This testimony is upon their own showing, under the solemnity of oaths; if indeed such men are at all affected by oaths. They have such a familiarity with oaths, taken in public and in secret, I cannot suppose they are controlled by any. These men, employed to help the Indian, defrauded him; pretending to be collecting a claim, they only prevented the payment; and for more than thirty years their conduct has kept the money from going to the Indian nation. Not until all their contracts were repudiated and new men employed, have they been benefited. In November, 1886, the Choctaws had their old claim adjudicated by the Supreme Court of the United States, and the claim for over two and one-half million dollars was allowed. Justice, long delayed, came at last. More than two full generations have died since they ceded their lands, and since the Government became indebted to them; but Congress has not yet appropriated the money.

Such being the record of Albert Pike and his Colonel Cooper up to the rebellion, it may not be amiss to follow them into the Confederacy, to see how they kept their faith with the new government. I shall quote the balance of my proof from "Records of the Rebellion, Vol. 8, and of series one," page 690, where appears this special order of the Secretary of War by John Withers, A. A. General, dated Richmond, Va., Nov. 22, 1861: "The Indians of the country west of Arkansas and north of Texas are constituted the Department of Indian Territory, and Brigadier General Pike is assigned to the command of the same." This shows that all of these Indians were under his command.

On page 697 we read:

RICHMOND, Va., Nov 27, 1861.

HON. J. P. BENJAMIN, Secretary of War, SIR:—It will be unwise to refuse any Indian who may offer to come into our service. We now have 3,500, besides the Seminoles and others, increasing the number to over 4,000. And the Comanches and Osages I would employ in case of invasion. The Indian country demands to be defended against the Indians on the prairies west, and against the more villainous marauders of Kansas on the north. Provisions are cheap in the Indian country, so is forage and fuel. I wish for authority to organize not less than 7,500 of the troops. I am, very truly, your obedient servant,

ALBERT PIKE,
Gen. Com. Army of the C. S. A.

Judah P. Benjamin, Secretary of War, replied from Richmond, Dec. 2d, 1861: "The Department makes no objection, but on the contrary cheerfully assents to your mustering into the service as many companies of Indians as you can find arms for."

Under this order Pike proceeded to organize such Indians as he could get to enlist. Some stoutly resisted the effort to destroy their relations with the United States. Tribes became divided, and fought each other, not only, but made war upon other tribes. Pike thus destroyed the peace and prosperity of all the civilized tribes, and led them to forfeit all their annuities under promise to renew them with the Confederate government. He did go through the farce of making such treaties, Pike himself being, as heretofore, their legal adviser.

Before the great battle Van Dorn and Pike had with General Samuel R. Curtis at Pea Ridge, Ark., the most decisive of all the battles of that division of our army, Pike enlisted the Comanches, and other wild Indians from the plains, who, mingling with the worst of the other tribes, made an infuriated gang of savages, disgraceful to civilized warfare.

I quote, to sustain this, the following official note of General Curtis, dated Bentonville, Ark., March 13, 1862: "I visited Bentonville yesterday. Everything is quiet in the vicinity. During the battle we lost six guns, but we recovered all back and took five from the enemy. I have also taken a large number of small arms, which the rebels threw away. My loss of killed and wounded will exceed my first estimate of 1,000 men. General Pike commanded the Indian forces. They shot arrows as well as rifles, and tomahawked and scalped the prisoners."

This official statement must fasten upon Albert Pike the disgrace of organizing a force to scalp prisoners and tomahawk the dead! Old Ben Wade heard of this, and his indignation kindled. He wrote to General Curtis to know if the account he had seen was true.

General Curtis, under date of May 21, 1862, wrote to Senator Wade. His letter was captured by the rebels, and is now found in "Captured Rebel Archives," Vol. 8, page 206:

BATESVILLE, Ark., May 21, 1862.

HON. MR. WADE:—I have the honor to lay before you the enclosed affidavits, from which it appears that large forces of Indian savages were engaged against this army at the battle of Pea Ridge. The warfare was conducted by savages with all the barbarity their savage natures are capable of. * * * Signed, SAMUEL R. CURTIS.

Then follow the affidavits. John M. Noble, 3d Iowa Cavalry testifies: "From an inspection of the bodies of the men of the 3d Iowa Cavalry, who fell in battle, I discovered that eight of the men had been scalped!"

Also one from Daniel Bradbury, 3d Iowa Cavalry: "I saw over 300 Indians scattered over the battle field, doing as they pleased; also about 3,000 Indians marching under General Pike!"

Colonel Cyrus Bussey of the 3d Iowa Cavalry states also, under oath: "After the battle I attended in person to the burial of the dead of my command. Of the twenty-five men killed of my regiment, eight were scalped, and the bodies of others horribly mutilated. These atrocities, I believe, were committed by General Pike's Indians!"

Nothing more need be added. I should not have produced this, but the facts set forth are at this day denied in all the lodges of the land.

In the rebel service General Pike had the same eye to money he had shown in the United States service. The following are portions of his letter to Hon. J. P. Benjamin, Secretary of War (See Vol. 8, Rebellion Record, p. 719.):

RICHMOND, Dec. 25, 1861.

I call your attention to the inclosed slip containing important news from the Indian country. I do not believe Hopocithlayohola has more than 2,000 or 3,000 men. [These were loyal Union Indians.] I want a force to disperse them.... When there last, I incurred debts, and left them unpaid. I received $20,000 in money notes. Our Congress has now ratified the treaties, and appropriated money. I have the money to pay the troops, and $25,000 to purchase arms. This I think will keep the Indians in our service....The $445,000 placed in my hands was in large notes....I must go via New Orleans to exchange them and get small notes.

Signed, ALBERT PIKE.

I cannot pursue this subject farther at this time. To give all phases of this great rebellion and all instrumentalities, I have alluded to the part General Pike took in the contest. He left the Union service in the Indian Department with soiled hands; he came out of the rebel service with soiled garments.

When Milton saw the devil go out of Paradise, he spoke of a "Lower deep—still opening to devour."

No man or devil can find "a lower deep," for him who defrauds the innocent, seduces the living, dishonors the dead, and adds perjury to treason! Such a soul must go down, with the weight of pyramids in everlasting piles of pressure on him, to darkness that has no morning beyond it, and not a star to relieve its night of human loathing and divine abhorrence.

A HOPEFUL REVIEW.

As we review the past year in every field of reform the march has been forward and not backward. Relations have been constantly changing. The public has been learning, and that very fast. The two great questions, Prohibition and Labor, have come to stay. Both are forcing the lodge question to the front. The capitalistic press is daily denouncing secret labor lodges and that is a knife that will cut two ways. It is poor logic that will not work both ways. The anarchic adjunct to these labor lodges is opening the eyes of honest patriots. The resolutions of sympathy for condemned anarchism could only emanate from kindred organizations. The Chicago Central Labor Union must needs purchase a burying place in Waldheim cemetery for the worst enemies American labor ever had. Why should John Bandisch, a representative of the New York Federation of Trades, come all the way to Chicago to spread a floral wreath on the graves of the men who run up the red flag of anarchy against the old "Stars and Stripes?" Men still talk of Chicago boodlerism and of McGarigle's Masonic escape. If lodgery will do that in Chicago, will it not do so anywhere else? If the states attorney of Cook county can challenge a man off a jury because he belongs to the same lodge as boodler Varnell, may not an Anti-mason challenge a juryman in any other county for a like cause?

These and many other things are before the whole country. The line is also being drawn closer and closer on the lodge in the prohibition work. In every neighborhood Americans are showing up the affinity of the lodge and the saloon. Their sympathy and co-operation is so plain that no man or set of men can successfully gainsay it. The demonstration is seen wherever the liquor question is in politics or in the courts. The Lake Bluff meeting, where John B. Finch so bitterly assailed Rev. J. P. Stoddard was the beginning of a new chapter in anti-lodge agitation. Miss Willard's effort to shake hands with lodgery only adds fuel to the flame kindled at Lake Bluff. Our Belvidere resolutions against a coalition of temperance and lodgery found their way into the Union Signal, and lately the editor of the Signal felt called upon to interpret Miss Willard's annual address, assuring its readers "that the W. C. T. U. has no intention of affiliating with secret societies."

The tide is setting in. The people are more willing to listen to anti-lodgery than ever before. Nay, they are anxious that secretism should be discussed. The lodge is straining every nerve to side-track the agitation. Many of us are anxious to know what is to be done in the coming campaign? Does the death of John B. Finch divorce the Prohibition party and the lodge? But it is a great deal easier to ask questions than to answer them. One thing is certain; the lodge system in the United States is on trial. It may get a political postponement or a change of venue, but by and by it will go to the jury and be settled at the ballot-box.

A READER.

THE W. C. T. U. AND THE KNIGHTS OF LABOR.

Rev. Joel Martin, an eloquent Wesleyan evangelist of Hillsdale, Michigan, writes a kind note of remonstrance to the Union Signal. In his labors in hundreds of localities he finds a strong sentiment of protest and regret that some of the W. C. T. U. leaders "make so much of an organization from which so many excellent people hope so little." He says:

"Please allow me to express through the columns of your able paper my honest conviction on an important subject. I deeply regret the effort being made on the part of some of the leaders of the W. C. T. U. to commit that organization in favor of the Knights of Labor. Many of the friends and enthusiastic supporters of the W. C. T. U. have for months feared that this effort was being made, but have hoped they were mistaken. There is now no longer any room to doubt, as the words of Mrs. Hobart, who recently addressed the convention of the Knights of Labor at Minneapolis, are too plain and positive to be misunderstood. It must be remembered that this lady was commissioned by the National W. C. T. U. to bear greetings to the Knights of Labor. She spoke as a representative of the W. C. T. U. women of the land. These are her words: 'I bear you greetings and words of cheer from 250,000 white-ribbon women, who have faith in you, and in your organization.' This effort to thus commit this large number of loyal Christian women in favor of this secret labor organization, I regard as a serious mistake. It will result in evil in various ways. It will have a tendency to dishearten and alienate from the organization a large number of noble, intelligent Christian women of strong convictions who are religiously opposed to secret societies on general principles, and to the Knights of Labor for specific reasons. These women will not consent to have said of them, and for them, what they cannot indorse. They have no faith in the Knights of Labor organization, and are unwilling to be presented to the world in a false light. Then there are thousands outside the W. C. T. U. organization who believe in it, and support it, and have hoped for much from it, but who cannot and will not approve any movement to commit it in favor of the Knights of Labor. The W. C. T. U. organization is a strong body of loyal women, but it cannot afford to divide its members and alienate its friends and supporters by encouraging what many of these members and supporters, from religious and conscientious principles, oppose."

Miss West, editor of the Signal, refers Bro. Martin to Miss Willard's annual address at Nashville, as an assurance that "the W. C. T. U. has no intention of affiliating with secret societies." We all rejoice in the condemnation of secretism, bravely spoken by Miss Willard. May she and other noble women repeat the testimony again. Prohibition cannot succeed part open and part secret.

REFORMERS AND PRAYER.

BY W. T. ELLIS.

A message was sent to Luther that Melancthon was dying; he found him presenting the usual premonitory symptoms of death. Melancthon aroused, looked Luther in the face, and said, "O Luther, is this you? Why don't you let me depart in peace?" "We can't spare you yet, Philip," was the reply; and, turning round, he threw himself upon his knees and wrestled with God for his recovery for an hour. He went from his knees to the bed and took his friend by the hand. Again he said, "Dear Luther, why don't you let me depart in peace?" "No, no, Philip, we cannot spare you yet," was the reply. He then ordered some soup, and when pressed to take it, Melancthon declined again, saying, "Dear Luther, why will you not let me go home and be at rest?" "We cannot spare you yet," was the reply. He then added, "Take this soup, Philip, or I will excommunicate you." He took the soup, soon regained his wonted health, and labored for years afterward in the cause of the reformation; and when Luther returned home he said to his wife, with joy, "God gave me my brother Melancthon back in direct answer to prayer." The walls of Luther's study were said to be "stained with the breath of prayer." All Bible reformers have been marked men of prayer. The Bible says more on the subject of prayer than most any other single subject, and it is our only way of approach to God. Our source of spiritual wisdom, the only infallible sign of being right with God, is communion with him and power to prevail with him in prayer; and yet you may look through all of the holiness literature and religious papers of the day and you will find but little said about prayer. There is no end to theory about holiness, church organizations, the way to raise money, the coming of the Lord, the Sabbath question, the saloon question, etc., etc., and little or nothing about prayer. Here we have common ground with all Christians to begin upon (except a few hair-brained fanatics that think their inanities of more account than God's power); and we venture that a spirit of prayer is the greatest need of the church and this sin-cursed earth to-day. There are thousands of vaporing talkers about salvation to-day that cannot watch with the Gethsemane Jesus one hour; but they are ever ready to give the "sacrifice of fools" in "vain talk," and fill their belly with the east wind while they "cast off fear and restrain prayer." The strength of a cause is to be measured only by the power it has with God in prayer, no more and no less. God's promises are valueless unless worked out in the soul by fervent, effectual prayer. Christ never taught to simply believe, and rest in a dead faith for our souls, our children, or the world; but by precept and example he ever taught not only to ask, and believe, but to seek and TO KNOCK. The latter is taking the kingdom of heaven by violence. Thus did Abraham, David, Jeremiah, Daniel, Jesus, and all New Testament saints, and every man of deep spiritual power in the world. It is only the faith that comes through the effectual, fervent prayer that avails much, or anything, with God and man. If one-half had been written and exhorted on the subject of prayer, that has been on the theory of a dead faith for purity and power; if instead of jumping around and singing religious ditties, and claiming the fullness of God when little fruit could be seen, the church had been taught to tarry at Jerusalem until they were endued with power from on high, God's Holy Ghost power would have fallen to shake the world and bring in everlasting righteousness. "Sow to yourselves in righteousness, reap in mercy." It is time to seek the Lord till he comes and rain righteousness upon you." The whole church needs driving to their knees, and keeping there until God, by a cyclone of spirit power, "stands them upon their feet," to be swift witnesses against all sin, casting down all the powers of hell, and crowning Jesus Lord of all, who baptizes with the Holy Ghost and fire, in answer to Pentecost prayer alone.

THE SECRET EMPIRE.

THE PATRONS OF HUSBANDRY.

Students of politics who are studying the decline and fall of the labor party may find the story of the career of the National Grange, Patrons of Husbandry, lately in session at Grand Rapids, Mich., an instructive one. An interesting account of the rise and decadence of the grange was given not long since to the Inter Ocean's Washington correspondent by the man who organized it. The story was told our readers years ago, but in this new form many will see it for the first time.

In December, 1867, William Saunders, a Freemason, then and now connected with the United States Department of Agriculture, and six other men interested in husbandry, met in a small building in Washington and formed the National Grange, Patrons of Husbandry. They perfected a regular organization and prepared to extend the grange to every State in the Union. Its growth during the first five years was unprecedented in the history of any secret society. In 1875 there were granges in nearly every State and Territory in the Union, and about 25,000 local granges were in good standing when the annual meeting was called to order in Charleston in the fall of that year.

Mr. Saunders, who had been the Master during the first five years of the life of the society, declined a re-election in 1872, but was chosen chairman of the executive committee. This committee had control of the finances, and they were well managed. For the information of the Charleston meeting, Mr. Saunders prepared a financial statement, which showed that the grange had on deposit with the Farmers' Loan and Trust Company, of New York, $95,000 in United States registered 6 per cent. bonds, besides something like $45,000 in other funds. This money came from the collection of per capita taxes and the charge of $15 which was made to every grange when a charter was granted. The headquarters at Washington were conducted upon business principles. The secretary was paid an annual salary of $2,000. Thirty-two clerks were kept constantly busy, and they were paid salaries which insured competent men. Besides this, a monthly journal was published, which was the organ of communication between the National headquarters. Every subordinate grange in the country received a copy of the paper each month, so that every member of the order might be kept posted upon the work and the prospects of the organization.

When the annual meeting of 1875 was called to order it soon became evident that financial prosperity was distasteful to many of the delegates. Some one thought that there was danger in the amount of the fund reported to be in the hands of the executive committee. A resolution was introduced stating that, as there could be no possible use for this large sum in the hands of the officers of the National Grange, it should be reduced by distributing $3 to each of the subordinate granges in the country.

This resolution was adopted, and the result was that the fund was depleted to the amount of $75,000. Then in order that there might be still less danger of the accumulation of a treasury surplus, one intelligent granger moved that the per capita tax be reduced from 10 to 5 cents. This seemed to be in the nature of retrenchment and reform and it was adopted after a struggle. Next some one else proposed that there was really very little necessity for the continued publication of the monthly journal. It was suggested that it was a great expense and that the State grange ought to be the medium of communication between the head of the organization and the subordinates. The suggestion assumed the form of a motion, was adopted, and the paper soon was a thing of the past.

When the meeting of 1875 adjourned it, in Mr. Saunders' opinion, had accomplished as much as was possible toward the disintegration of the order. The policy that had been laid out and followed by the Charleston meeting soon bore its fruit. The salary of the secretary was reduced to a nominal figure; the grange organizers who had previously been paid an annual salary, were put upon a per diem allowance; and within a year the applications for new charters almost ceased in consequence. The headquarters in Washington were soon abandoned, and there was no medium of communication between the head officers of the order and the individual granges. Instead of sticking to the original idea of meeting to discuss the wants and needs of the agriculturist, some of the leaders in the State organizations suggested that the granges themselves take the place of the manufacturer and the merchant. Ploughs and other farming implements were to be made without the aid of the greedy manufacturers. The $3 allowance to each grange which was paid after the divvy resolution was passed, was used as a nucleus by several of the State granges as a manufacturing fund. The venture was not successful, and it is believed that there is not now a single grange in the country which is trying to usurp the functions of the manufacturer or the foundryman.

Within two years after the Charleston meeting the number of granges began to diminish. There was a correspondingly heavy falling off in the amount of the per capita tax. This continued until last year. Hardly a single new grange was established for several years. On the contrary, the number in good standing steadily diminished. Besides this the cutting down of the tax reduced the receipts of the headquarters to such an extent that it became necessary to draw upon the capital which had been saved up for the purpose of erecting a building for the headquarters. It soon became evident to those who had taken the greatest interest in the organization that the order of Patrons of Husbandry would soon be doomed.

In the meantime rival societies, calling themselves "The Wheel" in some places and "Farmers' Alliance" in others, began to spring up in different parts of the country, and an effort was made to place the grange on its feet again. Within the past year there have been organized between 200 and 300 new granges, and several of those which had forfeited their charters have been resuscitated. But the grangers still lack a great deal of their former power. Mr. Saunders was asked to what he attributed the decadence of the order. He replied that the resolution which brought about the discontinuance of the monthly publication was the first step, as it cut off the communication between the head of the order and the individual granges. Secondly, the distribution of the fund and the reduction of the tax. This prevented the carrying out of the plans by which it was intended to make the order a power for the good of the farmers. He explained that it was the intention of the organizers to establish permanent headquarters in Washington, in a building which should have been owned by the grange. He thought that the management had been bad, and pointed out the organization of "The Wheel" and "Alliances" as indicating that with proper management the agriculturists can be organized for their own good.

It is reported that the Baptist church in Ocala, Florida, has expelled all members whose names have appeared on petitions for liquor license. This may seem to some like severe discipline. But since the liquor business is the open and avowed enemy of the church and all that for which the church stands, why should not the friends of the iniquitious business be made to come out of the church and stand among their real friends and allies? The sooner every man drops into his real place on this question the better; and surely the place of the petitioner for the soul-destroying liquor business is not in the church of Christ, whose first and only business is the salvation of souls.—Sabbath Recorder.

PRESS COMMENT.

But some of the so-called labor organizations of the country are essentially despotic. Their methods with their own members are no less objectionable than their attempts at boycotting. Their assumption that they are THE labor element of the country is ridiculous when viewed in connection with the facts. Workers with the brain are counted for nothing, though they are no less wage-workers and often put in more hours than ten. The farmers and farm hands seem to be forgotten. The Inter Ocean, in an editorial giving a sketch of the labor movements, beginning back as early as 1803, and reckoning the principal labor organizations of the present time at sixteen in number, states that nearly four-fifths of the working men and women of our country belong to no union. The presumption of the one-fifth, therefore, in representing themselves as THE labor party of the United States, would be actually laughable, did they not succeed so well in hoodwinking the public, and even in frightening the Government, State and Nation. Let it be understood we want all wage-workers to have all their rights, but one of these is not to restrict liberty, either among themselves or in the form of boycott.—Farm, Field and Stockman.

We do not see how anything could more clearly demonstrate the folly and crime of an anarchical movement in America than the papers by Mr. Kennan, on the condition of affairs in the Russian Empire, now being published in the Century. These criticisims proceed from a country whose relations with Russia are particularly cordial. They are printed in a periodical where "The Life of Peter the Great," published as a two-years' serial, did much to increase the amicable interest of Americans in the the affairs of Russia, and they are from a hand that has shown conspicously its friendliness toward the Russian Government. Without favoring or defending the methods of the Russian revolutionists, Mr. Kennan shows that the violence which individuals, or groups of individuals, are guilty of in Russia, is a natural result of the absence of civil liberty. The Russian Liberals (not revolutionists) demand freedom of speech, freedom of the press, security for personal rights, and a constitutional form of government. America, above all nations of the world, means these very things. Anarchy, and the dastardly methods of the anarchist, have no slightest color of excuse to exist in a free country. And, thank heaven! America is continually making it evident that a free country is abundantly adapted to the defense of its own freedom; that is to say, of its own existence.—January Century.

The "Boss" dictation to which the Knights of Labor organization has chosen to subject itself appears to have managed things badly. They first attempt to boycott a particular coal company, and then to compel the Reading railroad to refuse to carry cars for that company, was as foolish as it was wrong, and the subsequent strike of the employes to enforce the boycott was a blunder so gross as to be wicked. The case of the miners, however, is different. That more than 60,000 railroad workers and coal miners should, in the midst of winter, be thrust out of work and into this condition of organized idleness and disaster, and the great mass of honest laborers, whose lot is hard enough at best, be ground against the upper and the nether millstones of the grasping and heartless corporations on the one hand, and the few "master workmen" dictators on the other, is pitiful indeed.—Advance.

The colored people have gone into organizations to an extraordinary extent. One of our colored ministers in Texas informed a General Conference officer that he belonged to seven different secret societies. They have not been content with imitating those formed by their Caucasian fellow-citizens, but have instituted a large number of their own. Not long ago a case was tried in Baltimore which is recorded on the docket as follows: "William H. Perkins, Worthy Ruler of St. Thomas Lodge, vs. Augustus Thomas, Grand Royal King of the United and Consolidated Order of Brothers and Sisters and Sons and Daughters of the Knights of Four Men, and the members of the Supreme Grand Royal House." The suit in this case arose because the Grand Royal Knight became disgusted with the workings of St. Thomas Lodge, placed it under the ban of excommunication, and said he would not take back one word of that decree, not even if President Cleveland, or even if Grant would come out of his grave, to appeal to him. St. Thomas Lodge brought suit to make the Grand Royal Knight take it back. Ludicorous as this may appear, it is not much more so than the proceedings and titles of many societies that are now formed among the Caucasian race.—Christian Voice.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 13, 1888.

Just before Congress adjourned for the holidays some comments were made by the city papers on the non-attendance of Senators at morning prayer. As a rule the Senate Chaplain delivered his invocation in the presence of almost empty benches. It was a very rare thing that the presiding officer could call a quorum together, and frequently not more than half a dozen Senators were present. Since the recess it is noticed that they are a little more respectful toward the only religious service in connection with the proceedings. Yesterday morning twenty-four Senators, seventeen Democrats and seven Republicans, were at their desks during the opening prayer. The Senators generally admit that it is a reproach to the body to thus ignore morning devotion, and several efforts have been made from time to time to effect a reform. For instance, Senator Hoar offered a resolution during the last Congress to require a quorum at the prayer, but the second day after, the Massachusetts reformer failed to be there in time himself. He entered the chamber just after the prayer had closed, wearing an air of embarrassment. His delinquency was observed, and the resolution became a dead letter.

There are Senators who hold that it would be better to do away with the prayer altogether than to treat it with apparent disrespect. But then, again, a proposition to dispense with the Chaplain would not be seriously considered, and the question is how to prevail upon Senators to be in attendance for prayer. Good people say there must be a thorough moral reformation among our lawmakers, that no number of resolutions can make prompt attendance binding on them.

This habit of ignoring the opening prayer is a habit of very long standing in the United States Senate. When Judge David Davis of Illinois was president pro tempore of that body, he entered the chamber with the Chaplain one morning and the only Senator in sight was Mr. Butler of South Carolina. Mr. Davis walked up into the stand with the Chaplain, and with all the dignity and solemnity usually observed by him on such occasions, gave a stroke with his gavel and said: "The Senator from South Carolina will come to order." The summons was treated as a joke by the galleries and the pages on the floor, but it was not so meant by the presiding officer. He simply took that method of rebuking the Senate and of having his rebuke go into the Record.

The House of Representatives has at last made a beginning of the session's work. A number of bills have been reported from committees, and are now ready for discussion. The Senate being a permanently organized body, is always in working condition, and consequently always far ahead of the House. It works in a quiet, leisurely, dignified way, too, and never permits itself to be induced to hurry. During the present week it has given most of its time to debate upon the Blair Educational bill, and the bill to Refund the Direct War Taxes.

It is feared by Prohibitionists that Speaker Carlisle's committee on the liquor traffic is purposely arranged to defeat any legislation in the House in the direction of prohibition. The ten members of the committee are J. E. Campbell of Ohio, Bland of Missouri, Merriman and Moffett of New York, McRae of Arkansas, Anderson of Illinois, McClanny of North Carolina, Hunter of Kentucky, Cheadle of Indiana, and Yost of Virginia. Most of these members are pronounced opponents of temperance legislation in its latest and best form. Carlisle is further charged with having constructed the Committee on Education with special reference to the defeat of the Blair Educational bill which was discussed at length in the Senate last week.

Mr. Lamar's letter to the President resigning the office of Secretary of the Interior, and thus relieving the situation as affected by the pending nominations of Mr. Vilas for Secretary of the Interior and Mr. Dickinson for Postmaster-General, from all further embarrassment, is commented upon by his friends as doing honor to his head and heart. The expectation is quite general that Mr. Lamar will be confirmed as a Justice of the Supreme Court. Still there are uncertainties surrounding the matter which may eventuate in his rejection, and until he is confirmed he is merely a private citizen. The President, in his letter accepting Mr. Lamar's resignation, escaped from himself, or from the usual reserve with which he surrounds himself. His expressions of appreciation, esteem and fondness for Mr. Lamar read more like a love letter than anything Mr. Cleveland has ever been known to write, insomuch that some have been nearly ready to charge him with insincerity; but they are doubtless mistaken. *

REFORM NEWS.

ON THE SOUTHWESTERN BORDERS.

ARKANSAS CLIMATE AND WATERING PLACES—REFORM WORK AT HOT SPRINGS—ANOTHER STATE ENTERED.

HOT SPRINGS, Ark.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—It is January 6th and the thermometer is 70° in the shade. The temperature has continued much the same for several days. Verily is not this the "Sunny South?" If I did not know that the mercury sometimes sinks below zero I might believe it. But with all its irregularities of climate Arkansas is a fine State, and my stay in its capital city was most pleasant and profitable.

On Wednesday, the 4th, I addressed the Baptist Educational Convention at the First Baptist church on the objects and work of the N. C. A. I had excellent attention and the hearty endorsement of most of those present, including the students of the Baptist College. At night I preached again in the First Congregational church,and on Thursday morning I spoke for half an hour to the students of Philander Smith College, and was endorsed by the president, Rev. Dr. Mason.

This excellent institution is under the patronage of the Freedman's Aid Society of the M. E. church and has in attendance about 160 students. They have nearly completed a new ladies' hall and propose farther enlargements.

On Friday at 10 A. M. I left by the St. Louis & Iron Mountain railroad for Hot Springs. The country is uninteresting until Malvern is reached, where we changed to the narrow-guage for this city. Soon we reached a country of rocks and hills, the first I had seen since I left Northern Alabama. A strict regulation prohibits solicitation for hotels, boarding-houses, or physicians, and circulars of warning are handed to passengers. There must have been a fearful state of things to necessitate all this precaution. At 2 P. M. we reached the far-famed little city. It numbers not far from 10,000 permanent inhabitants, and has more than 40,000 visitors a year, who remain here from one to twelve weeks. But for one thing it would be a most unlikely place to build a town. A small stream receives several branches which run between high rocky hills, which approximate mountains. In this narrow valley, and only occasionally climbing up the sides of the hills, the streets are laid out, great hotels are erected, and boarding-houses and restaurants are innumerable.

The potent influence is the innumerable springs of hot water that come out of the hills and are charged with various saline products, which cause the rocks over which they sometimes flow to look as though they were covered with hoar frost. The temperature of those springs varies from 93° to 160°, or hot enough to cook eggs. Like the people in ancient times, there come here "a great multitude of impotent folk, blind, halt and withered, waiting for the moving of the waters." Whether "an angel has troubled the waters" here, or from whence the healing comes,one thing is evident,that many are healed and the reputation of the springs is great and increasing. The number of baths given in these waters, according to report to the United States government for the year ending Nov. 30th, 1885, was 19,846. The number since then has largely inereased. Almost all varieties of disease are treated; the most numerous, however, are rheumatism and syphilitic affections.

Some of the hotels are very fine buildings, with accommodations for over 400 guests. Others are more moderate in both pretensions and prices, yet equally comfortable. I want to recommend the "Chautauquan,"Rev. S. W. Gamble,proprietor. Quiet and pleasant aecommodations ean be had for $7 to $10 per week, less than half of some of the larger hotels. The United States Hospital for Soldiers and Sailors is a very fine building on the side of the mountain and affords a commanding view of the city.

On my way here I became acquainted with one of the leading pastors, who told me he was a Mason and belonged to several other orders. To my dissent from his views he replied that during the war he was a prisoner at Camp Douglas, Chieago, and that while other prisoners had insufficient food,clothing and attendance, he, because he was a Mason, was comfortably provided for. I told him that was an excellent reason why a Christian should not belong to the order. For if it conferred special advantages on some soldiers to which they were not entitled by either civil or military law, it was unjust and cruel to others. He replied that his Masonic privileges had been purchased and paid for, and he was entitled to them. This was the slaveholders',and is now the liquor-dealers' argument, and is as good for any one of the trio as for the others. He has asked me to preach for his people,which I hope to do.

MONDAY, JAN. 9.—A sudden fall of the thermometer of 45°, preceded by a deluging rain and followed by snow, takes out all the poetry of the climate. I preached yesterday three times—in the First Presbyterian church (Southern) to a good-sized and cultured congregation. A good many were Congregationalists from the North. At 3 P. M. I preached in the Second Colored Baptist church; and at night in the First Baptist church. My discourses in the afternoon and evening were on the lodge system. The first was heartily endorsed by the pastor; the other fell, in the main, on unwilling ears, and yet I hope some good was done. This is one of the strongest lodge centers in the place. I became acquainted with the presiding elder and preacher in charge of the M. E. church (white). They were both lodge men but thought anti-secreey,like prohibition, might be a good thing for the Negro. There are none of the pastors but either are or have been lodge men. I start this morning for Texas.

HEARNE, TEXAS,JAN. 12.—The belated and slow-moving trains on the International and Northern R. R. brought me here at 2 P. M. on the 10th. Trains on this road run about 12 miles an hour. In the present condition of the road it would be unsafe for them to go faster. I left Hot Springs, Ark., on the 9th at 9 A. M. When I reached here I found the snow deeper than when I left Arkansas. I found the country more elevated, better wooded and less cultivated than I had supposed. I am told that this is not the best part of the State. The broad valley of the Brazos river is here cut up into large plantations on which cotton is raised, mostly by convict labor, to the great detriment of the interests of the town. The result is that this little city is not growing, and some of the fine brick stores are vacant. The drought of three years has had a depressing effect on all departments of business. The present heavy rains have for the first time in many months thoroughly wetted the ground. The colored people are doing better than in the older States. Besides two publie schools with respectable school buildings there is here the Hearne Aeademy, under the care of Prof. Smith, assisted by several teachers (all eolored) and under the patronage of the colored Baptist State Convention. They have a fine building, a farm and an industrial department for instruction in mechanical labor. I visited the school and addressed the students and teachers. I was much pleased with the management and want to commend it to the attention of benevolent people in the North. At present it gets no aid from outside of the State and very little from its friends here.

Among the commendable enterprises here is that of a prohibition paper, undertaken by a company of colored men, and aiming to represent the Prohibition party in Texas. But two numbers have been issued and so far it seems well conducted. Its present singular name, Seven Mansions, it is proposed to change, and other plans are suggested for its improvement. Its editor is in sympathy with our anti-secrecy reform, and Elder L. G. Jordan is foreman of the office. Its conductors think that they have means enough to sustain the paper one year in any case, and hope it may live after that time.

Prohibition would be an inestimable blessing to the Negroes of Texas. Their greatest enemies are drinking habits and the whisky traffic. But next to this, it would do more to break up the color line in politics than all other things combined. The white Prohibitionists of the South are the most intelligent and cultured of the people. These people see the necessity of educating the colored race, and are anxious to secure their co-operation in reforms. Neither of the old parties are either able or willing to do so. The colored people are beginning to see this, and there is a decided drift toward the Prohibition party. I want to commend this newspaper enterprise to Prohibitionists of the North. I expect to speak here several times and then visit Austin before I return east.

FROM THE OHIO AGENT.

CEDARVILLE, O., Jan. 12th, 1888.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—This town has been ceded largely to the Seoteh and Scoteh Irish,a colony from South Carolina having settled here as early as 1808. I need not say to those acquainted with the industrious habits and grit of the people who formed this colony, namely the Reformed and United Presbyterians, that they are thrifty. Cedarville has a population of about eleven hundred and is surrounded by a rich and produetive country, as may be seen in the fine residences, pikes and general survey. Its growth has been slow but substantial. This may be accounted for by the faet that the three churches whieh largely mold its religious sentiments do not drift with the popular current. Dark lantern shows are not popular.

There is perhaps no town in the State where reformers are more welcome. I ean speak from experience. This is where I found Mrs. Stoddard. The elub of Cynosure readers here last year was twenty-three, and I hope to be able to report it larger this. It is my purpose to spend a little time working for the Cynosure in this section prior to returning to Columbus. From there I shall, D. V., go to assist Bro. Moody with meetings in Morgan county. I have written him to bill me for lectures on and after the 24th of this month. Knowing somewhat of his enthusiasm I predict interesting meetings.

To those owing me for their subscriptions to the Cynosure, who should have paid ere this, I would say, If you do not settle before long I shall ask Mrs. Stoddard to send a reminder. Some have given pledges to the State work that are due but not paid. You will please notice the change in State officers. Rev. C. W. Hiatt, Columbus, was elected State Secretary and Treasurer at the last State convention in place of Rev. S. A. George. All contributions to State work should be sent to him. We need scarcely add that funds will be needed to carry forward the work and we are confident friends will respond liberally. If you cannot spend your time in shedding light on the darkness of the lodge you may assist those who can.

W. B. STODDARD.

REFORM NOTES.

PROHIBITION POLITICS—ED. GALE THUNDERSTRUCK—THE GOOD TEMPLARS THROTTLING THE W. C. T. U.

Prof. J. R. Dill of Burdett, Kan., brother of Rev. J. W. Dill of Selma, Ala., is a young Covenanter who has had considerable experience in public teaching, and has recently taken the lecture field for prohibition. He addressed a large audience in the Covenanter church at Blanchard, Jan. 3d, which pleased the people as well as any lecture they have heard for a long time. He has much of that grit which makes an effective speaker, viz., enthusiasm, and he has rare dramatic power. We predict for him a successful platform career if he has the gift to hold on. He showed that the Republicans were going back on prohibition in Kansas, and there was a growing sentiment in favor of third party action. In the coming conflict, which would shake the nations, he believed the communistic secret societies would begin the battle, by destroying life and property with their fearful dynamite. The higher or monopolistic orders, in which capital is entrenched, would then resort to dynamite as a means of defense. A terrible shell had recently been invented in Boston, which had one hundred times the explosive force of dynamite, and which would destroy a regiment in a moment. This collision between the higher and lower orders would be the fulfillment of the prophecy that the potsherds would be dashed together and shivered to pieces.

Bro. Dill's reasoning was forcible and convincing. He and Bro. J. S. T. Milligan did good work at a Prohibition Convention last week in the Senate Chamber at Topeka, in which Gov. St. John made a telling speech, arraigning the g–o–p as the secret ally of the liquor power. It does seem that in Kansas, as well as all over the land, the handwriting of doom against the Republican party is on the wall, and more Daniels every day are reading it.

It was a cold day and in a driving storm that my train pulled into the little town of Grand River, Iowa, last winter. I had heard that the notorious ruffian and ex-saloon-keeper, Ed. Gale, who was the tool of the lodges in inflicting almost fatal injuries upon Elder D. P. Rathbun, in the Kellerton mob, lived here. While the train only stopped two minutes, I got off, and putting my hand on the shoulder of a big, burly fellow standing on the platform, I said, "Do you know Ed. Gale?"

"I do," he replied.

"Does he live here?"

"He does."

"Where?"

"My name is Ed. Gale," he replied.

"Then," said I, "you are a man I have long read about. Your name has been published from one end of the land to the other, as the man who, in the Kellerton mob, assaulted Elder Rathbun, one of the most widely known and highly esteemed ministers in the Wesleyan Methodist church. Your name will go down in history as the perpetrator of one of the most daring outrages on free speech that the annals of our country afford. And unless you repent you may rest assured the avenging doom of Divine retribution must strike you." Just then the bell tapped, the train moved, and I swung upon the platform; but looking back as we rounded a curve, I still saw the astonished Ed. Gale gazing after that train.

A few weeks ago I lectured in the Presbyterian church at Grand River. I found the W. C. T. U. had a mere nominal existence. The Good Templars had a large lodge which was absorbing the interest. I have invariably observed that where the Good Templars are strong the W. C. T. U. is weak. These plants do not both flourish in the same soil. At Grand River there is one church and three or four lodges. The leading church members wear the links. My collection here lacked twenty-five cents of paying the janitor's fee, and my hotel bill, yet I had a crowded house. The members of the W. C. T. U. were taking no Union papers. They said they could not afford it, because it took so much to run their lodge. When will the W. C. T. U. learn that secret societies of all kinds are exotics and parasites, and exert a blighting influence upon every Christian institution?

Bro. B. M. Sharp, pastor of the Covenanter church at Blanchard, kindly invited me to preach a National Reform sermon in my home church. The day was quite cold, yet it is characteristic of these people to materialize on a stormy Sabbath; and then, when the collection box went around, they materialized to the amount of $34.25. This was more than I had received at a dozen collections in other churches. Brethren sometimes say to me, "You Covenanters are great on agitation, but your failing is you do not materialize at the ballot box." My reply is, that no people materialize so well at the collection box as the Covenanters; so that no one church has a monopoly of all the good. M. A. GAULT.

FROM A TRUE-HEARTED COVENANTER.

SPARTA, ILL.

I live among a people who were trained to testify against the lodge, but who have by degrees become degenerate, and are willing to bear the lodge members in their churches against their better knowledge. The Grand Army finds its way into all the churches except our own, and I fear that by its attachment, the "Relief Corps," it spreads its subtle poison even in ours. By it the women are corrupted from the simplicity of Christ. I do not know how much of secrecy may be required in members of that order, but I know that it will serve as a prop to the G. A. R., and this again to the other orders. It is our duty to "hate even the garments spotted with the flesh."

I am discouraged as to the prospect in this community. It is a lodge-ridden community, and bitterly hates the Prohibition party. They are Republicans wedded to their party idol, and seem to care for nothing else. Give me a dark community coming up rather than an intelligent one going downward. Pastors and elders seem animated by the common desire to increase the membership at the expense of their testimony; and I fear that the old Covenanters themselves are entering that lukewarm state that precedes toleration.

I am still free, however, in my own pulpit to preach and pray, though I am not able to see the express answer to prayer. Every Sabbath, in the principal prayer, I entreat the Lord for the downfall of Satan's empire with all its strongholds of saloons, lodges, free love, Sabbath-desecrating corporations, secular politics, etc. No doubt the answer is in store, though not yet manifested.

I cannot say now that I can attend at New Orleans. If I do so it must be at my own expense. If a considerable reduction could be obtained, I might be able perhaps to strain a point and go. But you may certainly count on my prayers.

A lady of the W. C. T. U., whose husband and father are Freemasons, gave me a word of encouragement in the spring. Said she: "My father, [a Baptist preacher] and husband do not differ as much from you as you suppose; but they are under obligation, and cannot say anything." Is it so then that many good people are imprisoned in the lodge and are waiting for those that have the courage to open the prison doors? But it is sad to think that men of good standing should thus allow their conscience to be paralyzed. I suppose, now, that as the batteries of the lodge are turned by the Anarchists directly against the very existence of organized society, that many men will open their eyes to the dangerous character of secrecy. We have foreseen the crisis and predicted it, but now the crisis is upon us and all but the blind must see. I only wish that I had pecuniary and physical strength to continue a public factor in the struggle. But the lack of these, I hope, will never stifle the voice of prayer.

I rejoice that the Lord has raised up your association to keep the lodge matter continually before the public. You deserve the commendation of the churches that testify against the lodge. I suppose you know by our minutes that it was by my motion that the lodge evil has a special standing committee in our Synod; and that I have written the report with my own hand the last two meetings? You may be sure that whether I am at the meetings of the N. C. A. or not, "my heart is right with thy heart," on the matter of secrecy. I am opposed to the least compromise. If my church should become tolerant, yet may God grant that I may never bear the lodge villainy. Yours very truly, D. S. FARIS.

HEROD'S OATH.

WINTHROP, Ind., Jan. 3rd, 1888.

EDITOR OF THE CYNOSURE:—I am here visiting my aged parents. They are Christian people, waiting to go over to the other side. Yesterday I went to the church I attended when a young man under the parental roof. I saw no face that I recognized, nor were there any that attended thirty-five years ago.

The minister took the Sabbath-school "golden text" as his subject, and gave a splendid sermon about the beheading of John the Baptist. He talked long and eloquently and gave much sensible advice; he reproved the sin of dancing, but failed to notice the real sin that caused Herod to sin in taking that oath and swearing to do something, he knew not what. Because he failed to notice this his subject was somewhat spoiled. Herod's oath was substantially a Masonic oath.

Let us be faithful in our movement against the lodge, enlightening the people. It is possible this minister did not dodge this Masonic part of the oath purposely, but we are mistaken in the man if he don't make his mark in the world, and it is to be hoped he and other ministers may be educated to see this Masonic sin, and not fail to declare the whole counsel of God. J. S. HICKMAN.

PITH AND POINT.

GREETING FROM GETTYSBURG.

God speed you and bless you in your good work in this New Year! Great has been your service for truth. Your light has penetrated many dark places and exposed their sinful secrets. May it be permitted long and still more widely and brightly to shine. Peace and benediction.—JOEL SWARTZ.

A MACEDONIAN CRY FROM MASSACHUSETTS.

I see in the Cynosure that Dr. Blanchard is going with a co-worker to talk to the Vermont people on secretism All that is well, as also the movements of agents of the N. C. A. all over the West and South. But why cannot our dear old Bay State, the birthplace and cradle of missionary, Bible and other Christian enterprises receive at least some share of that missionary attention from her Western brethren of which she is now in suffering need? Between the upper and the nether millstones of "Progressive Orthodoxy," and every form of modern secretism, the moral and spiritual life of the churches in our grand old Puritan Commonwealth is surely waning, and no other State in our land is in greater need of the kindly ministrations of the "missionary of the Cross." May we not hope that ere Dr. B. sets his face homeward, he will come and give us at least a few blasts from that Gospel trumpet which he knows so well how to wield!—C. A. S. TEMPLE.

THE GRANGE REVIVED IN VERMONT.

Even the grange is of more importance in this part of Vermont than the church, and I have known professing Christians to go several miles in a dark night to a grange lodge when a prayer-meeting was held near by their homes. This is no uncommon thing. I like the Cynosure because unlike Masonic ministers it gives no uncertain sound.—C. P. P., Guilford Center, Vt.

LODGERY IN JAMAICA.

It is wonderful how that great cancer of darkness and heathenism has sent its rootlets out from Christian lands into the little islands of the sea. It is withering, blighting and soul-destroying wherever it goes. May God more abundantly bless the influence of the Cynosure.—JOSIAH DILLON, Missionary of the Friends.

THE VETERAN SUBSCRIBERS.

I notice a request for the names of all that have taken the Cynosure from its first publication. I have taken it ever since its second or third issue, and regard its senior editor as being one among the most noble of this earth. Long may he live to wield his pen and tongue in defense of a pure Christianity.—GEO. W. CHAMP.

I am one of the first subscribers.—G. CUTLER.

Rev. J. A. Gibson, Browington Center, Vt., has passed beyond the need or reading of the Cynosure or other papers. He died nearly a year ago. He took it from the first and enjoyed it much.—MRS. J. A. GIBSON.

I have been a reader of the Cynosure from its starting, and sold reports of the Aurora meeting the preceding year—1867.—R. D. NICHOLS.

I was one that signed for the Cynosure soon after it was started and the editor sent me all its back numbers so that I had the paper from its first issue. When I see what has been done, I can but exclaim, "What hath God wrought." To him be all the glory.—JOSEPH POWERS.

I sent my money for the Cynosure two weeks before the first number went to press and have enjoyed it every year since. I send all my papers to friends and made fifteen others yearly subscribers. Probably this is my last year. I am 86 and dropping down, but while in this tabernacle shall pray for our cause.—JOSIAH SHAW.

BIBLE LESSON.

STUDIES IN THE NEW TESTAMENT.

LESSON V.—Jan. 29.—Peter Confessing Christ.—Matt. 16: 13-28.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Whosoever, therefore, shall confess me before men, him will I confess also before my Father which is in heaven.—Matt. 10: 32.

[Open the Bible and read the lesson.]

COMMENTS ON THE LESSON BY E. E. FLAGG.

1. Peter's Confession. vs. 13-20. "What think ye of Christ?" is the great question of the ages which all must answer. Was he a man gifted with supernatural powers, or a divine Saviour? Was he merely the world's perfect example, or the world's atoning sacrifice? "Whom do ye say that I am?" is Christ's personal question to every individual soul, and he is as much interested in the answer as if it was the only soul in the universe. Happy they who can say with Peter, "Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God." Such an answer comes only by divine revelation from the Holy Spirit. "Thou art Peter"—petros, a stone from the living Rock of Ages, on which the church is built like an impregnable fortress against which the most furious assaults of hell are made in vain. This is the Protestant interpretation of this much contested passage, but there are many Protestants who read it as blindly as the blindest Romanist, with never a thought that it applies to them; that to every Christian, pastor or layman, Christ ought to be able to say, "Thou art Peter, a fragment of me, a living stone hewn out of the living Rock on which my church is built." Every one who takes the vows of Christ upon him is bound to be a Peter, a Rock-apostle, unmoved alike by popular applause or the wildest clamor of the mob. A rock is firm, changeless; you always know where to find it. How many Christians of to-day are Rock-Christians, always on the side of Right whichever way the winds of popular opinion may blow? The minister who says, "The lodge is an evil, but I don't want to say anything about it for fear it will split my church and ruin my influence;" and the Christian voter "who prays, 'Thy kingdom come' and votes for rum," are not Peters. It may be only on one point that they seem weak, but it is a fatal weakness. How can such expect to be built into that spiritual temple which is to stand forever? The men who stood up boldly against the slave power are now standing up as boldly against the lodge power, while those who weakly apologized for slavery will be found as regards popular evils of the present time, apologists still. The sacrifice of a single principle for popularity always shows a radical inherent weakness running through the whole character, and unfitting it to make a bold, decided stand for God whatever the question at stake.

2. The Necessity of Entire Self-Consecration. vs. 21-28. Our Lord was tempted in all points like as we are, and when one of his followers, for conscience' sake, enters on a course that involves self-denial and loss of popularity, he will generally find a Peter, some mistaken Christian friend, who endeavors to turn him back. Satan finds in such far better instruments to discourage than all the scoffs and sneers of the worldly and the profligate. Self-denial is a part of every Christian's life. True happiness follows only in the steps of duty. Many a disciple of Christ has enjoyed the truest liberty behind prison bars. By stultifying conscience and paying homage to the god of this world men have added to the years of their existence while the worm of remorse made their lives a living death. "Time wasted is existence, used is life." All time is wasted, however full of work, that leaves God and eternity out of sight. The present age is full of appeals to the material part of man. It is a democratic age when the golden prizes of wealth and fame glitter for the children of the poorest; when youthful ambition sees every avenue open and hears the cry, "Go in and win." But what profits it to be a Vanderbilt if he lose the eternal riches? What matters it to the politician who reaches the goal of his ambition, the Presidential chair, if he has betrayed the cause of the poor, has sold the truth for a lie, and been false alike to God and humanity? When he stands at that tribunal where heaven and earth are weighed in impartial scales, he will front too late the solemn question, "What shall it profit a man if he gain the whole world and lose his own soul?"

THE CHURCHES VS. LODGERY.

The following denominations are committed by vote of their legislative assemblies or by constitution to a separation from secret lodge worship:

Adventists (Seventh-day.)

Baptists—Primitive, Seventh-day and Scandinavian.

Brethren (Dunkers or German Baptists.)

Christian Reformed Church.

Church of God (Northern Indiana Eldership.)

Congregational—The State Associations of Illinois and Iowa have adopted resolutions against the lodge.

Disciples (in part.)

Friends.

Lutherans—Norwegian, Danish, Swedish and Synodical Conferences.

Mennonites.

Methodists—Free and Wesleyan.

Methodist Protestant (Minnesota Conference.)

Moravians.

Plymouth Brethren.

Presbyterian—Associate, Reformed and United.

Reformed Church (Holland Branch.)

United Brethren in Christ.

Individual churches in some of these denominations should be excepted, in part of them even a considerable portion.

The following local churches have, as a pledge to disfellowship and oppose lodge worship, given their names to the following list as

THE ASSOCIATED CHURCHES OF CHRIST.

New Ruhamah Cong. Hamilton, Miss.
Pleasant Ridge Cong. Sandford Co. Ala.
New Hope Methodist, Lowndes Co., Miss.
Congregational, College Springs, Iowa.
College Church of Christ, Wheaton, Ill.
First Congregational, Leland, Mich.
Sugar Grove Church, Green county, Pa.
Military Chapel, M. E., Lowndes county, Miss.
Hopewell Missionary Baptist, Lowndes Co., Miss.
Cedar Grove Miss. Baptist, Lowndes Co., Miss.
Simon's Chapel, M. E., Lowndes Co., Miss.
Pleasant Ridge Miss. Baptist, Lowndes Co., Miss.
Brownlee Church, Caledonia, Miss.
Salem Church, Lowndes Co., Miss.
West Preston Baptist Church, Wayne Co., Pa.

OTHER LOCAL CHURCHES

adopting the same principle are—

Baptist churches: N. Abington, Pa.; Menomonie, Mondovi, Waubeck and Spring Prairie, Wis.; Wheaton, Ill.; Perry, N. Y.; Spring Creek, near Burlington, Iowa; Lima, Ind.; Constableville, N. Y. The "Good Will Association" of Mobile, Ala., comprising some twenty-five colored Baptist churches; Bridgewater Baptist Association, Pa.; Old Tebo Baptist, near Leesville, Henry Co., Mo.; Hoopeston, Ill; Esmen, Ill.; Strykersville, N. Y.

Congregational churches: 1st of Oberlin, O.; Tonica, Crystal Lake, Union and Big Woods, Ill.; Solsbury, Ind.; Congregational Methodist Maplewood, Mass.

Independent churches in Lowell, Countryman school house near Lindenwood, Marengo and Streator, Ill.; Berea and Camp Nelson, Ky; Ustick, Ill.; Clarksburg, Kansas; State Association of Ministers and Churches of Christ in Kentucky.

THE CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE.

PROSPECTUS FOR THE TWENTIETH YEAR.

As we turn over the leaf for another year the Cynosure would again write at the top of the new page: "Christ always; Christ only." It will more than ever be the purpose of all connected with the paper to make it a power for the coming kingdom of our Lord, before which all the systems of secret worship, mystery and iniquity of the great Babylon must fall. We would be on the CONQUEROR'S side in that day—we will stand for him now in the days of testimony and of tribulation.

THE CYNOSURE during 1888 will give the most earnest attention to the South. The National Convention at New Orleans, Feb. 17th, and the effort, which promises so much success, to put

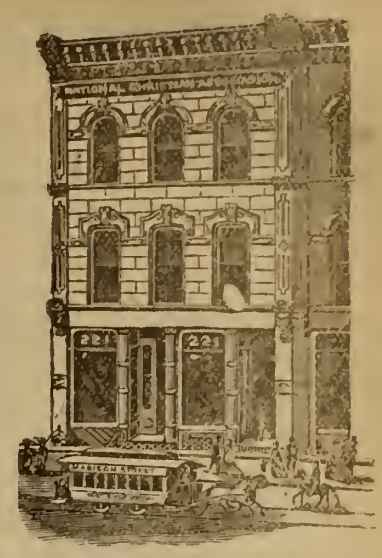
of the paper into the hands of colored pastors gives a direction to our interests. We also hope that the National Christian Association will be able to put other workers into the Southern field.

The Minor Secret Orders, so-called, will have more respect given to their insinuating and benumbing influence. If Masonry and Odd-fellowship have felt severely the attacks upon their strongholds, they are making good all losses by training up an army of young men whose convictions are paralyzed in respect to secretism by the swarms of orders which cover their modicum of lodgery with a bait of temperance, insurance, patriotism, good fellowship, business aid, etc., etc. The Cynosure will endeavor to rouse our careless churches to see that this evil is likely to be worse than the first.

We have nearly completed arrangements for special Correspondence from the metropolitan cities in different parts of the country. Our readers may expect letters once a month, or oftener, from Boston, New York, Philadelphia, Washington, Cincinnati, New Orleans, Denver, San Francisco and Los Angeles. These letters will give graphic pictures of the earnest American life which throbs in our great cities, with especial reference to the news of the lodges in each.

The very popular Biographical Work of the Cynosure during the three years past will be continued with some features which will be especially attractive. During the last year there have appeared portraits of George B. Cheever, William H. Seward, Daniel Webster, John Brown, Charles Sumner, Charles Francis Adams, Enoch Honeywell, Bishop Hamline, Charles G. Finney, Howard Crosby, Dr. C. F. W. Walther, and Alexander Hamilton. These portraits have been accompanied with sketches which have presented facts of profoundest interest to our discussion, collated after diligent and often exhaustive search.

Letters from foreign lands we expect to be more frequent and valuable in 1888 than ever. Correspondents in England, Germany, Greece, Turkey, India, West and South Africa, China and Mexico will through our columns be in personal connection with our readers.



The Sabbath School department will contain the notes of Miss E. E. Flagg as last year. Sabbath-school workers are to be congratulated in the continuance of this arrangement. For readers of the Cynosure there are no more helpful and suggestive notes published than these, in the whole range of S. S. literature.

Best of all is the noble company of contributors and correspondents in our own land. We hardly need mention them. To keep in their company a season were —"worth ten years of common life."

We invite all friends of the past to honor themselves by remaining in this company. The Cynosure gives you a noble fellowship. You can hardly afford to forsake it. Let your name then be found on the list. Do your neighbor a good turn and get his subscription also.

The Christian Cynosure.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, JANUARY 19, 1888.

THE NEW ORLEANS CONVENTION FEBRUARY 17 TO 20, 1888.

MORE THAN TWO YEARS AGO

Prof. Woodsmall wrote urging that the work of sending the Cynosure to the colored pastors be pushed to the front as we have for a few weeks been trying to do. He wrote from Iuka, Miss., Sept. 30, 1885, in these words: "Many other reasons could be given why the Cynosure by the thousand, and tracts by the million, should be sent into the South at this time. If only the leaders of the 800,000 colored Baptists were supplied, the whole South would be leavened. The effect would be nearly as great if the leaders of the various Methodist bodies were supplied. One hundred dollars now would do more good than thousands will do ten years from now, or even five." After two years he repeated this urgent request in his letter lately printed on this page. If the Cynosure readers could see with his eyes the necessity for this work they would hasten to make up the fund for the desired one thousand copies of the Cynosure to Southern pastors.

DONATIONS TO THE CYNOSURE MINISTERS' FUND have been received at this office from nineteen States and Territories. The number of donations from Florida 1, Indiana 4, Maryland 1, Massachusetts 3, Michigan 8, Ohio 5, Pennsylvania 5, Vermont 1, California 3, Dakota 2, Illinois 34, Iowa 3, Kansas 2, Missouri 3, Nebraska 2, Wisconsin 10, Washington Territory 2, Minnesota 2, New York 9. The place from which seven donations came is not known. Total number of donations one hundred and seven.

CASTING OUT DEVILS.

That evil spirits can inflict diseases even on good men is proved by the case of Job. That they can occupy persons in health is proved by their entering Judas Iscariot. When the Saviour sent forth his twelve apostles he commissioned them to heal the sick, cleanse lepers, raise the dead,and as the climax of their commission, "Cast out devils." We are still told to "resist the devil and he will flee" from us. But when the disciples asked Jesus why they could not cast out the spirit from the lunatic son, he said, "This kind goeth not out but prayer and fasting."—Matt. 17:21.

As church-founding miracles are no longer needed, the mode and manner of our resisting Satan varies, but the duty remains, and it seems to us that if ever fasting was required to make prayer effectual it is now when we are moving directly to "cast out devils" from the worships of mankind. Judging by his first application and offer to Christ to give up all the kingdoms and glory of the world if he might retain its worship, no movement so stirs Satan's activity and stimulates his wrath as such meetings as that proposed to be held at New Orleans, Feb. 17th next. The piety and prayers of Northern Christians were never turned toward the South as they are now. This meeting fully recognizes the manhood of the colored people before God. White men and black are to speak on the same platform. The church building is owned by the American Missionary Association, a great national organization which spurns caste. Secretary Strieby's very able paper at the late meeting at Portland,Me., insisted with great force that neither nationality or complexion shall be punished by ostracism in their churches in the South. In this they are antagonized by the largest national church organizations; and they assail the last entrenchment of Satan in the Southern sentiment. If the Gospel is strong enough to pull down caste, which now keeps Asia and Africa pagan,it can and will soon conquer the world. And we read, "Woe to the inhabiters of the earth and of the sea, for the devil is come down unto you having great wrath, for he knoweth he hath but a short time." Rev. 12:12.

Now in the present state of the churches we can not observe a united and general fast. Shall we agree on a day before the New Orleans meeting and fast and pray as Moses, Christ and Paul fasted when seeking great moral changes on our globe. We believe the Board of Directors are to meet a week or two before Feb. 17th. If they are not to meet in season will brethren send in their minds immediately on reading this article? Moses and Christ were, as we are, in a very small minority, but theirs and the early Christians' fasting and prayer shaped the destiny of the world.

SONS OF VETERANS PRAY FOR THE DEAD.

The resemblance between the oaths and prayers in the Freemason and Sons of Veteran lodges, is so marked as to leave no room to doubt their intimate relationship. In each the oath imposes secrecy, succor and implicit obedience to unknown laws; and the fact that both Masons and Sons of Veterans, in using the forms prescribed pray for their dead members, indicates that the theology of both came from Rome rather than the New Testament. Rome requires her adherents to say: "I profess, likewise, that in the mass there is offered to God, a true, proper and propitiatory sacrifice for the living and the dead." Again: "I constantly hold that there is a purgatory, and that the souls therein detained are helped by the sufferages of the faithful."

In the burial service of a deceased brother Mason, given by Thos. Smith Webb, (page 111, Freemasons' Monitor) he says: "Unto the grave we resign the body of our deceased friend * * * and may Almighty God, of his infinite goodness, and the grand tribunal of unbiased justice, extend his mercy towards him and all of us, and crown our hope with everlasting bliss, in the expanded realm of boundless eternity."

The prayer offered at the opening of a lodge of Sons of Veterans contains this sentiment: "Keep green in our minds the memory of those both living and DEAD, who sacrificed so much that the life of our nation might be preserved; and deal with them [the living and the DEAD] in all things with thy special mercy." Here is a prayer authorized and appointed in which "special mercy" is asked for all the dead soldiers as much as for the living. The covert way in which it is introduced would perhaps escape the notice of many, but it is no less a fact, however, that when a Christian young man officiates, using the prescribed form, he invokes God's mercy on all dead soldiers, as the Mason at a brothers' funeral, or devout Catholic at mass,prays for the Divine favor upon the departed.

It is sad to see some of our Christian young men swearing away their manhood by oaths of implicit obedience to lodge rules, who are starting on the road to papal Rome, by requiring them to utter or join in prayers offered for dead soldiers, as if they were not already beyond probation where prayers in their behalf would avail nothing.

MARDI GRAS.—Since this revival of the Saturnalia of pagan Rome and the Carnival of papal Rome begun a few years since in New Orleans, the cities up the Mississippi have attempted an imitation, Memphis with her festival of Momus and St. Louis with her performance of the Veiled Prophets. These carnivals,full of brilliant tableaux and gross vulgarities, are a reproduction of one phase of heathenism, as the lodge is of another. We are glad to note an article by Rev. B. A. Imes of Memphis in the Living Way giving a Christian pastor's warning against the performance to be held in that city next month. "No place," he says, "can be demanded for the Mardi Gras celebration as an amusement worthy of patronage by Christian people. It is a shame and a sin that this Bacchanal festival is tolerated by the people of this age, and that the authorities turn the city over to the devil." Bro. Imes promises in another article on the origin and nature of the Mardi Gras.

THE NEW BOOK ON THE RULING MASONIC RITE.—Its excellencies are: 1. That it carries its proof with it. The leading, trusted, Masonic authorities are quoted, volume and page. The foot notes,which would make a small volume, are taken from the same Masonic authors, are a skeleton ritual themselves, and are proof positive that the revelation is genuine. So the reader knows the whole thirty-three degrees as well as if he looked on and saw them worked. 2. The book sets forth the true nature and object of the lodge. In the words of Dr. Edward Beecher's report to the Illinois Congregational Association (1867): "By it Christ is dethroned and Satan exalted."

Its defects are: 1. Repetition. This was unavoidable. The degrees repeat one another, over and over again; and if comments follow them they will repeat. The labor of both writer and compiler has been immense; and, carefully read and pondered, it is believed it will do for the anti-lodge cause what Weld's "Testimony of a Thousand Witnesses" did for the anti-slavery cause; which Dr. Leonard Bacon called, "a tremendous book."

Another deficiency equally unavoidable is that there wants another book of equal size to set forth the beauties and glories of Christianity in contrast with the ghastly deformity of the lodge. This,however, can only be done by reducing the Gospel to practice in such stupendous revivals of religion as followed the fall of the lodges after the murder of Morgan. Such revivals will yet come, when "He shall send his angels to gather out of his kingdom all things which offend and them which do iniquity." But the reign of the lodge and liquor are bringing in the Pentecost which is to enthrone Christ.

—A letter from Bro. Hawley reports some hindrances from drifting snow in Iowa, and ably reviews a grand Odd-fellow lecture by Rev. Frank Evans, defender and champion of lodgery in Iowa.

—The Heart and Hand, the monthly bulletin issued by Le Moyne Institute of Memphis, Tenn., mentions the late visit of Bro. Hinman in that city with pleasure.

—The railroad notice in our paper last week contained two errors. First the time allowed for the trip either way should have been TEN instead of fifteen days. In the eighth line the word "route" was inserted instead of "rate."

—Bro. W. B. Walthall was interested in the appeal for Wheaton College in the Cynosure of Dec. 22, and sends $1.00 to help the fund therein suggested. The N. C. A. Treasurer informs us that another friend wishes to take a share in that good effort. We heartily commend it to every co-worker in our reform.

—The Birmingham Free Press, admiring the excellent portrait of the editor of the Cynosure week before last, speaks for numerous friends in Birmingham and Iowa who would be delighted to see the likeness of their "Agamemnon," Dr. J. N. Norris, adorning these pages. Bro. Warrington has our hand for a partnership in such an enterprise.

—The Free Methodist of London, England, published in a late number an address by Rev. John Boyes of Huddersfield, our English correspondent. The subject was "God's Dealings with the Children," and the occasion the Conference of Sabbath-school Teachers of Huddersfield First Circuit of which Mr. Boyes is the respected superintendent minister. The address is an earnest appeal to the church to make the Sabbath-school a more efficient agency for the salvation and Christian instruction of the youth.

—Two of our earnest readers, Edwin B. Webster, of Ortonville, Wis., and C. A. S. Temple, of Reading, Mass., wish to reopen the discussion of the Seventh-day Sabbath question which we agreed to close some time since. While thanking these friends for the contributions they have sent, we must keep to the main issue for which the Cynosure is established. Bro. Webster makes an interesting and original argument to prove that the Jewish Sabbath was set back one day, and the Christian Sabbath restores the day to the original time set apart in the Creation. The late Dr. J. B. Walker, held, on the contrary, that the Jewish Sabbath was set one day in advance, and the Christian one day still further.

—Pres. J. S. McCulloch of Knoxville, Tenn., president of the N. C. A. National Convention, had a singularly perplexing experience lately. He was conducting the funeral exercises over the body of one of his students who was, unknown to the college faculty, an Odd-fellow, and part of the funeral expenses had been promised by the colored lodge. Shortly after the service began,into the United Presbyterian church marched a drove of Odd-fellows in regalia with swords and poles, who sat down and rose up as the leader indicated by banging the floor. They made no further demonstration, and probably deemed they had their money's worth. The effect of this lodge impudence was not lost upon the students present, who saw a proof of their instructions in college, that the lodge spirit is from hell not heaven.

—Bro. I. R. B. Arnold conducted a Bible reading in the College Hall at Wheaton Sabbath evening, January 8th. He had arranged a union service and a very large audience was present. The subject, "Christ in the Old Testament," gave an opportunity, after the Scripture passages were read, to further explain the subject by means of a fine chart which showed in a striking manner how Christ was recognized in the worship of Abel, Noah, Abraham, Moses, etc., while the altars of Cain and Jeroboam turned the soul off from the only Way to the Father. The explanation of these worships was remarkable in making clear the difference between true prayer to God and the mock prayers of the Sons of Veterans, and all other lodges who reject the name of Christ, or refuse to use that name as he has commanded.

PERSONAL MENTION.

—Judge McCullough, of Peoria, is prominently mentioned as the Prohibition candidate in Illinois during the coming campaign.

—Rev. D. C. Martin, late of Princeton, Indiana, has removed to Etna, Allegheny county, Pa., where correspondents will please address him.

—Rev. A. J. Chittenden, pastor of the College Church, Wheaton, has been voted a six weeks' vacation on account of ill health. He expects to attend the New Orleans Convention during the time.

—Miss Willard, president of the W. C. T. U., is a warm personal friend of John G. Whittier, and thinks that the State should own the early home of the poet. She urges the women of the country to unite and buy it.

—Dr. A. H. Hiatt, of this city, and member of the Wheaton Faculty, expects to attend the New Orleans Convention, and go on to Los Angeles and San Diego, spending some weeks in California and on the return journey through Utah and Colorado.

—The address of Rev. J. T. Michael is now 619 Third St., Washington,D. C.,whither he has removed from South Oil City. All who are interested in his proposition to combat the lodge in the Methodist Episcopal church should read his letter in last Cynosure.

—Governor St. John, who last week returned to California to resume his work against the saloon, will be accompanied on his trip to the Sandwich Islands by his wife and daughter. In the latter part of June he will go to Nova Scotia for a series of engagements.

—Rev.Edward Mathews,whom many of the Cynosure readers have heard with interest and profit in addresses against the lodge, is now in the Congo country, whither he went nearly a year ago as a worker in the Wm. Taylor mission. He was, last fall, on the swollen river in a boat with seven natives when the current upset their boat. Bro. Mathews had nearly sunk for the last time, when by a desperate effort he reached the capsized boat and clung to it until rescued with all but one of the natives.

—Rev. Dr. Alfred S. Patton, editor and owner of the Baptist Weekly of New York, died last Thursday at the residence of his son-in-law in Brooklyn. In 1872 he purchased the American Baptist, then edited by Dr. Nathan Brown, who returned to the mission work in Japan, and there died two years ago. The Baptist was a pronounced anti-slavery paper before the fall of the slave system, and as earnestly warned against the lodge. Dr. Patton changed the name of the paper and dropped its unpopular reform principles into the East River. He was active as a pastor until he became editor, and was the author of several religious works.

ROUTES AND RATES TO NEW ORLEANS.

This is a question that interests all our readers; especially those purposing to attend the seventeenth annual convention of the N. C. A., Feb. 17th to 20th next. There are different routes, of course, from Chicago, and each has its special attractions for individuals desiring to inspect certain localities or visit points or places for personal reasons. I have made inquiry of agents and tourists familiar with routes and accommodations, and the result of my investigation is indicated by the fact that I have arranged for Bro. Chittendon and Mrs. Stoddard and myself to go by the direct line of the Illinois Central railroad. This line runs through trains of coaches and Pullman sleepers, and offers first class accommodations in every respect. Leaving Chicago at 8:30 P. M., the train reaches Cairo at 9:30 next morning. Leaving Cairo at 10 A. M., the train arrives at Durant, Miss., 11:09 P. M. of the same day, and New Orleans at 8:20 the next morning, making the trip in less than thirty-six hours. The fare for the round trip is $30; tickets good to return until June 1st next. Double berth in Pullman Buffet Sleepers $6, or $12 for a section. Parties can stop over on these tickets south of Cairo ten days in either direction.

J. P. STODDARD,
Gen'l. Ag't. N. C. A.

LATEST AND BEST RATE TO NEW ORLEANS.—Round trip tickets will be on sale at $25 from Feb. 6th to 12th next, good to return until March 1st next. This will make the fare less than 1½ cent per mile from Chicago to New Orleans via Illinois Central Railroad. This reduction from the usual rate will probably be general throughout the country at that date, but we are not able to speak positively at present. Look for further notice hereafter, or make inquiries of railway agents.

OUR NEW YORK LETTER.

BROOKLYN, Jan. 11, 1888.

EDITOR CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE:—An article in the November number, 1887, of the Methodist Review, by Rev. Richard Wheatly, D. D., Cornwall, N. Y., on "The Alleged Decay of the Family," contains some startling facts. Referring to "the shamefully criminal practice of pre-natal infanticide," he says: "The committee of a Western State Board of Health avows the conviction 'that in the United States the number of women who die from its immediate effects is not less than six thousand per annum.' Gynecologists affirm that it is not maternity which sends to them the largest number of patients, but the needless refusal of its responsibilities." "In Ohio careful medical investigation has led to the conclusion that pre-natal infanticide annually robs the family of one-third its legitimate increment. In the Northern States it is said to be more prevalent than in Buddhist China. The murder of adults or of children may be comparatively infrequent, but the All-seeing alone knows to what extent the destruction of unborn life has gone and is going." As to "the facility and frequency with which marriage bonds are dissolved," he says: "In 1878 Connecticut granted one divorce to every 10.4 marriages; Vermont, 1 to 14; Massachusetts, 1 to 21.4; New Hampshire, 1 to 10.9; Rhode Island, in 1882, 1 to 11; Maine, in 1880, 1 to 10; Ohio, in 1882, 1 to 16.8; San Francisco did yet worse, and in 1881 granted a divorce to each 5.78 marriages. Marin county, California, bears the banner in front of the pestilent divorce march, or one divorce for every two and eleven-hundreths marriages. Legal divorces appear to have doubled in proportion to marriages or population within the last thirty years." In some New England manufacturing towns "swapping wives" is not uncommon. Many men "maintain two families." He quotes this passage from Judge Noah Davis: "A. is married in New York, where he has resided for years and has a family, and is the owner of real and other estate. He desires divorce and goes to Indiana where the thing is cheap and easy. Upon complying with some local rule, and with no actual notice to his wife, he gets a decree of divorce, and presently is married in that State to another wife, who brings him other children. He again acquires new estates; but tiring of his second wife he deserts her and goes to California, where in a brief space he is again divorced, and then marries again, forming a new family and acquiring new real and personal estates. In a few years his fickle taste changes again, and he returns to New York, where he finds his first wife has obtained a valid divorce for his adulterous marriage in Indiana, which sets her free and forbids his marrying again during her life time. He then slips into an Eastern State, takes a new residence, acquires real property there, and after a period gets judicially freed from his California bonds. He returns to New York, takes some new affinity, crosses the New Jersey line, and in an hour is back again in New York, enjoying so much of his estate as the courts have not adjudged to his first wife, and gives new children to the world.... He dies intestate." What is the legal standing of these children? Are they illegitimate? What of his wives? These facts are a disgrace to our Christian civilization, and they cry to heaven for vengeance. God will surely visit such a nation as this.

Last Sabbath evening I preached in the Reed Avenue Presbyterian church, Rev. A. Bridges, pastor. This congregation numbers 350 members. The house was filled, and they drank in National Reform with a relish. An elder said to me, "All that is necessary is to get those facts before the people. I wish we had a large number of men in the field doing this work."

On Monday afternoon I heard Dr. Cuyler deliver a lecture in Union Theological Seminary on Revivals. He pronounced it God's work. It comes not by the will of man. Astronomers can tell when an eclipse will occur, but no one can predict a revival. God's sovereignty alone determines its advent. It consists in the outpouring of the Holy Spirit. The day of Pentecost; the Reformation in Germany in the 16th century; the preaching of Livingston at the kirk of Shotts when 500 were converted; the preaching of Edwards at Endfield, Conn., "Sinners in the hands of an angry God;" the preaching of Whitefield in Boston in 1740; the revival of 1858, when Dr. Beecher preached a powerful sermon, and when he came down from the pulpit some one asked him how long it took him to write that discourse, and he replied, "for years;" the searching, pungent preaching of Finney, stirring men's hearts as the plough turns up the subsoil; the melting, winning talks of Moody, were referred to as illustrations. Each of these men was himself. Every one differed from every other. The only prescription he could give for a revival, was prayer, plain preaching, and personal effort for souls. He had nothing to say against the noble work done by the evangelists; but he was sure each pastor should do his own evangelistic work. These evangelists have no monopoly of the Holy Spirit. "When the day comes that pastors must await the advent of an evangelist for a revival, we may as well vacate our pulpits, close up our theological seminaries, and call the work a failure. Spurgeon has a continual revival. Young men, do not seek an easy place.

Four accidents have occurred on the elevated roads in the past month. The Tribune this morning thinks we have had enough. No more privileges should be granted to build them. Underground roads should be demanded. Perhaps God is frowning upon their Sabbath desecration.

THE N. C. A. NATIONAL CONVENTION.

OFFICIAL CALL.

The Seventeenth Convention of the National Christian Association is hereby called to meet in the Central Congregationalist church in the city of New Orleans, Louisiana, at 7:30 P. M., February 17th, 1888. An interesting programme has been arranged, able speakers have been secured, and three sessions will be held daily, closing with the evening of Feb. 20th. Seats are free and the publie are most cordially invited to attend.

REV. J. S MCCULLOCH, D.D., Pres.
REV. LEWIS JOHNSTON, Sec'y.

PROGRAM FOR NEW ORLEANS.

Topics for discussion at the New Orleans Convention, Feb. 17th to 20th next,are given below. Time will be given for brief volunteer speeches after the prepared address on each topie at the day sessions. Friends will please note carefully the topics and come prepared to make brief, pithy remarks.

Why I Joined and why I Left the Lodge, Elder R N. Countee.

Origin and Symbolism of Freemasonry, Elder J. F. Browne.

How Shall we Educate our Boys and Girls for the Practical Duties of Life, Rev. L. N. Stratton, D.D.

The Real Issue between the Church and the Lodge, Rev. Wm. Johnston, D.D.

Bible Reading on True and False Worship, Pres. J. Blanchard.

Christ in Civil Government and the Secret Empire, Rev. Geo. W. Elliott.

Secrecy as a Basis of Organization and an Element of Education and Reform among the Common People, Rev. Byron Gunner.

The Secret Lodge as an Agency for Securing Prohibition, Practical Benevolence and Labor Reform, Rev. A. J. Chittenden.

Past, Present and Future of the Secret Empire and its Effect upon Morals, Education and Civil Government, Pres. J. Blanchard.

PROGRAM FOR THE ANNUAL MEETING

OF THE DU PAGE COUNTY CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION OPPOSED TO SECRET SOCIETIES, FRIDAY, JAN. 27, 1888.

10:30 A. M.—Devotional exercises conducted by Rev. A. Thompson, followed by an address of welcome.
11 A. M.—Business session.
1:30 P. M.—Devotional exercises.
2 P. M.—Prof. C. M. Lowe, on the work of the National Christian Association in the South.
3 P. M.—W. L. Enlow, on the Sons of Veterans.
4 P. M.—E. Wylie, on the Rejection of Christ by the Masonic Order.
7 P. M.—Devotional exercises.
7:30 P. M.—Address in German by Rev. R. Menk.
8:15 P. M.—Address by Pres. C. A. Blanchard.

Addresses and papers are to be followed by discussions in which all are invited to participate. Members of secret orders are specially requested to attend.

—The date of the annual meeting of the National Reform Association has been determined, April 24 to 26. At its meeting in September last, the Execution Committee decided upon Philadelphia as the place. The following speakers have been secured: Rev. Herrick Johnson, D. D., "Marriage and Divorce, or Laws Affecting the Family;" "Miss Frances E. Willard, "Woman's Work for Christ;" Rev. O. P. Fitzgerald, D. D., "The Nation as a Sabbath-breaker." Joseph Cook and President Julius H. Seelye it is hoped will be present; ex-Justice Strong also contemplates the preparation of a paper, should his health permit. "These arrangements are announced at this early day," says the Christian Nation, "in order to awaken a widespread and marked interest in the proposed convention, as the committee hope to provide a program that will secure the attendance of large audiences and secure a National bearing."

THE HOME.

THE SHEPHERD FOR HIS FLOCK IS DYING.

[From the German of Benjamin Schmolke.]

The Shepherd for his flock is dying;
My Lord is going down to death;
For them the powers of hell defying,
And sighing out his mortal breath:
He's nailed there in the sinner's place;
Such love divine, such matchless grace!

His life to save his sheep he's giving,
And tasting death there for them all;
How patient he, and how forgiving!
O heart, but hear his piercing call!
'Tis finished now, the offering's made,
Thy sins, thy burden, on him laid.

The Shepherd dies for those who hate him,
For those who buffet and despise,
Who, as he hangs there, loud berate him,
And fling at him their mocking cries;
His life he pours out for his foes,
To save them from eternal woes.

For all who die my Lord is dying,
It is the travail of his soul;
To heal Death's hurt his blood applying,
To make the bitten sinner whole;
And when the lost ones to him come,
He bears them on his shoulders home.

He dies there, God's propitiation,
He dies to pay man's hopeless debt,
To purchase for him full salvation;
Such love as his must win us yet!
His blood atoning and his Cross—
For these all else must be as dross.

My Shepherd dies! I must be living;
I die in him, he lives in me;
His death eternal life me giving;
I live, I die, O Lord, in thee;
I trust in thy atoning blood,
O dying shepherd, named the Good!

—Dr. J. E. Rankin in Christian Advocate.

OUR LORD'S MIRACLES OF HEALING.

Undoubtedly, Christ's miracles of cure have a two-fold significance—practical and prophetic. They effect the present recovery of the body, and they also predict the future redemption of the body. Indeed, a miracle under Christ's hand is generally but a parable writ large—a prophecy exhibited in illuminated text. We know, from many Scriptures, that a wonderful thing is to be wrought upon these bodies of ours at the second coming of Christ. They are to be transfigured into the likeness of his glorified body. Happily, the phrase, "our vile body," has been eliminated from our revised Scriptures. What God has cleansed, and consecrated to be the "temple of the Holy Ghost" ought not to be called vile, surely; and we are grateful that a more faithful rendering of the original enables us to read now, "Who shall fashion anew the body of our humiliation, that it may be conformed to the body of his glory" (Phil. 3:21). This transformation is predicted expressly in connection with our Lord's return from glory. In another Scripture, the agent by whom this change is to be wrought is distinctly named: "But if the Spirit of him that raised up Jesus from the dead dwelleth in you, he that raised up Christ Jesus from the dead shall quicken also your mortal bodies through his Spirit that dwelleth in you." As Jesus, during his earthly ministry, wrought his miracles "by the Spirit of God" (Matt. 12: 28), so will he effect this great consummating event of his ministry—the resurrection of the body—by the same agency.

Now let us link these two parts of our Lord's redemption together—that of healing and that of resurrection—and observe their relations. Every time Christ restored a sick person he gave an enacted prediction of the final redemption of the body. Healing is partial resurrection; it is a pulse-beat from the heart of Him who is the "resurrection and the life," giving us a fore-taste of our full recovery at his appearing and kingdom. Hence, observe that significant phrase in Paul's saying about the groaning and travailing creation (Rom. 8: 22), "And not only so, but we ourselves also, which have the first-fruits of the Spirit, even we ourselves groan within ourselves, waiting for our adoption, to wit, the adoption of our body." He that has the first-fruits only longs the more intensely for the harvest. And this is yet to come. God's acre has been sown thick and deep with resurrection seed. Each body in-dwelt by the Holy Spirit contains the gem of immortality; and when the time comes for its re-animation, it will spring forth, and He that raised up Christ from the dead shall quicken our mortal bodies by his Spirit that dwelleth in us. But even now we "have the first-fruits of the Spirit." Every renewal of our inward man, every quickening of our mortal bodies by the divine touch, every miracle of healing wrought by our blessed Lord, is an earnest of our inheritance, a pledge of the final redemption of our bodies. "Now he that has wrought us for the selfsame thing is God, who hath given unto us the earnest of the Spirit."

Let us recall the striking words in the Epistle to the Hebrews, in which Christians are spoken of as those "who have tasted the good Word of God, and the powers of the age to come." The age to come is the resurrection age, the time of the redemption of the body. We do not know the powers of that age simply by prediction and promise, but also by experience. Every miracle is a fore-taste thereof, a sign of its universal healing and restitution. The drift-wood and floating vegetation which met the eye of Columbus, as he was one day keeping look-out upon his ship, assured him of his proximity to the new world which he was seeking. His study of geography had convinced him of the existence of that world. But now he tasted its powers; he saw and handled its first-fruit. So it is with us voyagers to the world to come, the millennial age, and "time of restitution of all things." As those who have known and credited our Lord's miracles while on earth, or have experienced the wonders of recovery which he has wrought as he still stretches out his hand to heal, we have tasted the powers of the coming age. And it is very striking to observe how invariably our Lord joins the commandment to heal the sick, and cast out devils, with the commission to preach the kingdom. "Jesus went about preaching the Gospel of the kingdom, and healing all manner of sickness and all manner of disease amongst the people.' "And as ye go, preach, saying, The kingdom of heaven is at hand. Heal the sick, cleanse the lepers, raise the dead, cast out devils." Healing and resurrecting and the casting out of demons were a kind of first-fruits of the kingdom, to be presented along with its announcement. As, to use a familiar illustration, the commercial traveler carries samples of his goods as he goes forth soliciting trade, the Lord would have his messengers carry specimens and tokens of the kingdom in their hands as they went forth to announce his approach. Thomas Erskine says very truly, therefore, that "Jesus, while on earth, healed the sick and raised the dead, not merely to typify a spiritual healing and quickening, but to prove that he was indeed the promised Deliverer by destroying the works of the devil, and also to give a fore-taste and a shadow of the ultimate effects of his redemption upon the whole man, body and soul. And thus we find in the New Testament that the healing of the sick and the preaching of the Gospel of the kingdom are always cojoined, and are spoken of as though they meant the same thing."

Miracles of healing, then, are an answer to man's universal longing for restoration from the consequences of the fall,—sin, sickness, and death. Pledges and foretokens they are to our wounded and suffering humanity that at his coming and kingdom Christ will swallow up death in victory. And not in humanity, only; even dumb, inanimate nature, suffering with man the wounds of the fall, is to be made glad by these coming tokens of deliverance. Goethe beautifully says: "Often have I had the sensation as if nature, in wailing sadness, entreated something of me, so that not to understand what she longed for cut me to the heart." But we understand what she longs for. "For we know that the whole creation groaneth and travaileth together in pain until now,.... waiting for our adoption, to wit, the redemption of our body." And if we have believed the miracles of our Lord, wrought in the days of his flesh, or if we have experienced his miracles wrought in our own flesh, we are to go forth preaching the kingdom, and bearing those grapes of Eschol which we have obtained as an antepast of that kingdom, that we may show what a goodly land that is where "the inhabitants shall no more say, I am sick."
—Dr. A. J. Gordon, in S. S. Times.

"In March, 1830, in the town of Port Glasgow, on the Clyde, lived a family of MacDonalds, twin brothers, James and George, with their sisters. One of the sisters, Margaret, of saintly life, lay very ill, and apparently nigh to death. She had received a remarkable baptism of the Spirit on her sick bed, and had been praying for her brothers, that they might be anointed in like manner. One day, when James was standing by, and she was interceding that he might at that time be endowed with the power of the Holy Ghost, the Spirit came upon him with marvellous manifestations. His whole countenance was lighted up, and with a step and manner of most indescribable majesty, he walked up to Margaret's bedside and addressed her in these words: "Arise, and stand upright." He repeated the words, took her by the hand, and she arose. Her recovery was instantaneous and complete, and the report of it produced a profound sensation, and many came from great distances, to see her. Mr. Erskine visited the house, and made careful and prolonged inquiry into the facts, and put on record his conviction of the genuineness of the miracle."—Ministry of Healing, Dr. Gordon.

A CHILD'S TRUST—A TRUE STORY.

"Mother dear, what is the matter?" and Ada looked up from the spelling book over which she was bending. "Mamma, is breakfast ready, and oh! isn't there coffee to-day?" and Edith's beaming face was clouded and her voice pettish.

"Hush! Edith, mamma looks troubled this morning," and Ada drew her sister to one side, whispering, "don't take any notice of the breakfast, I am afraid the rent is wrong again." "Do you think she was not paid for all that sewing last week, and she worked so hard; it is real mean then." And she stamped her little foot. "When I am grown up I will always pay right off and then the poor mother can have coffee and everything else for her children."

"My darling, come, breakfast is ready," and Mrs. Lynch sat down to the table.

"Not much of a breakfast," murmured Edith, "only porridge and bread and butter."

"Oh! Edith, hush," and poor Ada looked wistfully at her mother, who, nevertheless, overheard. "I am very sorry, Edith dear, but I am behind with the rent and I must be careful."

"Didn't Mrs. Edwards pay you, mamma?"

"No, dear."

"The mean old thing," cried Edith.

"Hush, hush, my child, she does not probably know that I depended on it for my rent, and Ada, will you go around there after school and ask for it for me?"

"Why yes, mamma, only don't worry. I guess I can get it."

Ada was late for dinner and she came in slowly, rather differently from her usual bounding step.

"Did you see Mrs. Edwards?"

"Oh mamma," and the eyes filled, "she went to Atlantic City for a week."

She heard the low murmur, "Father of the fatherless, wilt thou help us now?"

"Can't I do something to help?" the child asked, springing to her mother's side and throwing her arms around her.

"No, my blessing, only help me to pray for help."

"Is it so very bad this time?"

"I am behind five dollars, just the amount of that sewing, and I depended on it. Mr. Jones, the agent, told me last month that he could get higher rent for this house, and if I was not prompt in paying, he would turn us out. But Ada, I ought not to trouble your child's mind with cares like these!"

"If you are worried, I am too, but I thought that we were getting on so nicely now."

"So we were until Edith had the measles, then the medicines cost a good deal, and I could take no work in on account of infection. Mrs. Martin could not wait for me, and gave her work to some one else; you know she was going to Europe. Mrs. Spring promised some, but she changed her mind about having it done now, so it has been so hard to manage."

"Mamma, yesterday our lesson was Elijah and the ravens, and our teacher said that God would always hear and deliver anyone who cried to him for help. If we pray a great deal won't he help you to pay the rent?"

"My child, we will; I ought not to doubt Him who, ever since your dear father's death, has always taken care of us. We will pray and trust."

Tuesday came, and as Ada kissed her mother before going to school, she whispered, I am praying, mamma."

She was clasped in her arms, and as a tear dropped on her bright hair, the silent prayer went up, "Hear, dear Lord, this thy little one."

Mrs. Barron was in her handsome bed room leisurely preparing for bed, her mind, in the meantime, reviewing the incidents of the day, its duties, pleasures, and the opportunities she had had for kind words and cheering sympathy; and she never neglected such opportunities. Many a heart had reason to bless her that night for kindness shown and substantial help given. Suddenly the thought flashed through her mind, "I have not heard of Mrs. Lynch lately, and those two dear little children." And the remembrance of sweet little Ada, and impetuous bright Edith, for one instant recalled her childless home with a pang. "Poor thing, she did have a struggle, but I thought it was smoother waters lately. I will go and see her sometime when I am in that part of the city," and picking up a little book of devotional reading, she opened it where her place was marked, and tried to concentrate her thoughts. But strangely, Mrs. Lynch's name seemed to dance over its pages. "I wonder why I am thinking of her. Mrs. King sees her constantly, and I met her to-day, but she said nothing about her; but I may as well stop reading and go to bed."

After a semi-dozing state, in which the faces of the widow and her two little girls mingled themselves with other shapes and fancies, she fell asleep, to be confronted by the first waking thought, "I do wonder how Mrs. Lynch is getting on? This is absurd for poor, innocent Mrs. Lynch to haunt me this way. I don't suppose she has bestowed a single thought on me this morning."

Breakfast over in the sunny, cheerful room, where birds sang and flowers exhaled their fragrance, and the latter were often made little messengers of mercy to brighten some sick-room,—then care for the family needs in the ordering of stores—and Mrs. Barron sat down to her morning employment, some artistic work, in which she was interested just then, feeling that her duties done she might rest in comfort. It was Tuesday morning, and little Ada had gone to school as we know, after trying to cheer up her anxious mother. But Mrs. Barron knew nothing of this; she only knew that the troublesome question had arisen again. Mrs. Lynch's name struck with unerring force her mental consciousness. She became uneasy, tried to abstract her thoughts, planned engagements for herself and others, but in vain. At last conscience awoke, "Didn't this mean something? Is there not work to be done?" She dropped her work, "I am ready, dear Lord, what wilt thou have me to do?" Then rising, she went to her room, changed her house-dress for a street-dress, and looking to her pocket-book that it was well supplied, she started on her errand of mercy. A long ride in the street cars brought her to her desired neighborhood, and her ring was answered by the lady herself. To her kind inquiry, "Are you in any trouble or anxiety, Mrs. Lynch? you haunted my thoughts so last evening and to-day that I was impelled to come and see you," the weary heart of the widow burst all the bounds of self-control fixed upon it. "My God has sent his angel," she exclaimed, "Mrs. Barron, I have been praying in agony for three days and nights for some one to help me, and God has sent you."

Tenderly supporting the weeping woman into the little parlor, Mrs. Barron asked what was the matter. "I thought that lately your troubles were over?"

"They did seem so until Edith's sickness, but that threw me back; and to-day at twelve o'clock, Mr. Jones, the agent, threatens to put my furniture out of the house if I have not all the rent, and my children and I will have no place to put our heads."

Mrs. King, who was a kind friend of Mrs. Lynch, came in. Mrs. Barron was often associated with her in good works. "I am so glad to see you," she exclaimed. "I could not reach you in time, I feared, and I have been vainly trying to get help for our friend nearer home."

"Mrs. Lynch," said Mrs. Barron, cheerily, "there need be no further trouble about rent. Where is this Mr. Jones' office?"

She went at once to interview that gentleman, and returned soon. "You need not fear now, Mrs. Lynch, he was very polite to me and has promised to let me know the next time there is any difficulty."

Ada came home from school to find her mother with a peaceful face putting the dinner upon the table and singing softly, "The Lord will provide."

"Mamma," she cried joyfully, "is it all right?" "Yes, darling, kind Mrs. Barron has been here and paid the rent, and not only that, she and Mrs. King lent me a little sum to get along with and I am to pay it back at my own time." "God did hear our prayers."

"We should never doubt again, and Ada, the strange part of it is, Mrs. Barron said that last night and this morning she could not help thinking about us so that she felt obliged to come and see if anything was wrong."

With an awe-struck face the child listened and then said simply, "It was God who made her think about it."—Presbyterian Journal.

In Parsons, Kan., a city of 10,000 inhabitants, there is not a man whose business is not known, nor one who does not pay his bills. This is one result of prohibition. The editor of a local paper says: "Before we had prohibition there were twenty-one saloons in Parsons, and I had from one-fourth of a column to a column of police items every day. Now I can not get together more than half a column once in three months. We have no city debt, and have a public library building, paid for, which cost $10,000.

TEMPERANCE.

A WARNING TO SMOKING FATHERS.

Apropos of your paragraph, "A Crusade Against Tobacco," in Saturday's issue, may I give you, in as few words as possible, my recent experience with tobacco smoke. It may be a warning to others. I have one child, a bright little girl not yet two years old; a fair-haired, blue-eyed pet, who was as healthy as the birds when she was born. For more than a year past—ever since she was old enough to be less in the nursery and more with her father and me—she had ailed mysteriously. I could not say she was ill yet she was never quite well. I was kept in a continual anxiety about her. The symptoms were entire absence of appetite, constant complaints of sickness, stomach and digestion out of order.

Last August I took her away by myself to a country town, where we stayed two months. After the first week she flourished like a young bay tree; ate and drank and played and slept and laughed, and kept me continually enlarging her clothes. I took her home—not so pretty and delicate in appearance, but rosy and robust. In one week all the old symptoms reappeared: loss of appetite, dark lines under the eyes, listless ways, restless nights. Some one suggested that the neighborhood did not suit her, and I was cogitating how to take her away again, when she caught a severe cold and was confined entirely to one room for three weeks. She recovered her general health completely while shut in the nursery. Appetite, spirits, sleep—all returned. It could not be the neighborhood. After her cold she joined us down stairs, as usual, two or three times a day. In less than a week sickness, etc., returned. I was in despair.

For nearly three months I racked my brains about drains, wall paper, milk, water, sauce pans, and everything in vain—the child slowly wasted away. In my agony of mind I noticed one day that far from outgrowing her clothes, as I had expected, they were too large for her. The little thing was not eating enough to keep up her strength, and we could not coax her to eat. Yet she was not really sick; she ran about and played in a quiet way, and seemed well enough to those who had not seen her robust.

Suddenly my husband was summoned to the country. A week after he had gone the child began to eat with eager relish. In a fortnight she was her own happy self, full of riotous, childish spirits.

"Her father never saw her like this," I remarked one evening, when she was particularly merry and mad, and then the truth flashed upon me. It was his tobacco that upset her. He has been away now for a month, and the child's limbs daily grew firmer, rounder, and she is the merriest, healthiest mortal possible. He always smoked after breakfast and after lunch with her in his room, neither of us dreaming it was injurious to her.

But for his providential absence this time, I doubt whether it would have occurred to me, and we might have lost our darling—for she was wasting sadly. It was acting like slow poison upon her.

This is a true, unvarnished statement, which my nurse can corroborate. When shall we have a parliament that will dare to tax our slow poisons to the utmost? I enclose my card and remain your obedient servant.—E. H., in Pall Mall Gazette.

THE CIGARETTE MUST GO.

The physicians hereabout are beginning to talk as if the cigarette would "have to go." Thus Dr. Wm. A. Hammond tells us, "to young boys it is poison. Everybody knows that excessive smoking will stunt the growth of the young and sow the seeds of disease, which will develop in later years. Cigarettes only drop the seeds a little faster. If a boy begins to smoke a great deal early in life, you may be sure he will never become an intelligent soul, as the effects on his body will by affinity reach the mind; he will lose energy and steadiness of purpose, and will become a vacillating, weak man, unfitted for the struggle of life. Cigarette smoking is like whisky drinking; the appetite for it increases just in proportion as the body becomes unable to bear it." Dr. Shrady, who attended General Grant during his last illness, says: "The cigarette has had much the same effect on the smoking habit in this country that 'the growler' has had on the drinking habit; by its inexpensiveness and convenience for short smokes it has spread the habit among all classes, and comes within reach of the bootblack as well as the millionaire. Cigarette smoking induces a condition of the heart and digestive organs which may cause death at any time. The effect may not be noticeable for years in a man, but it is not long in making its appearance in a boy." Dr. Loomis, Jacob Sharp's physician, also says he regards the cigarette as a dangerous article, since its moderate use generally degenerates into excess.—New York Cor. Phila. Ledger.

POISONED BY TOBACCO.

A case of poisoning by nicotine occurred lately in Paris. The victim, a man in the prime of life, had been cleaning his pipe with a clasp-knife; with this he accidentally cut one of his fingers, but as the wound was of a trivial nature he paid no heed to it. Five or six hours later, however, the cut finger grew painful, and became much swollen; the inflammation rapidly spread to the arm and shoulder, the patient suffering such intense pain that he was obliged to betake himself to bed. Medical assistance was called, and ordinary remedies proved ineffectual. The sick man, questioned as to the manner in which he cut himself, explained the use to which the pocket-knife had been applied, adding that he had omitted to wipe it after cleaning the pipe. The case was understood, and the doctors decided amputation of the arm to be the only hope of saving the patient's life, and this was immediately done. His life was barely saved. No wonder smokers so often have sore and poisoned mouths, cancer of the lips, and like troubles.—Selected.

BEER DRINKERS DANGEROUS.

In many minds there is a mistaken notion in relation to the effects of beer on the human system. Because those who use it largely often become fleshy, and apparently healthy, the conclusion is reached that its use is wholesome. The Scientific American, a high authority, thus expresses itself in relation to the matter:

"For some years a decided inclination has been apparent all over the country to give up the use of whisky and other strong alcohols, using as a substitute beer and other compounds. This is evidently founded on the idea that beer is not harmful, and contains a large amount of nutriment; also, that bitters may have some medical quality which will neutralize the alcohol which it conceals.

"These theories are without confirmation in the observation of physicians. The use of beer is found to produce a species of degeneration of all the organs; profound and deceptive fatty deposits, diminished circulation, conditions of congestion and perversion of functional activities, local inflammation of both the liver and kidneys being constantly present.

"Intellectually a stupor amounting almost to a paralysis arrests the reason, changing the highest faculties into a mere animalism, sensual, selfish, sluggish, varied only with paroxysms of anger that are senseless and brutal.

"It is our observation that beer-drinking in this country produces the very lowest kind of inebriety, closely allied to criminal insanity. The most dangerous class of ruffians in our city are beer drinkers."

SNUFF-TAKING AMONG THE ZULUS.

On the snuff-taking habit among the Zulus, Rev. Josiah Taylor, who has been a missionary in Africa over thirty years, gives the following account:

"The Zulus make their snuff of tobacco, dry aloes, and ashes, grinding it very fine. It is exceedingly pungent, causing the tears to flow profusely down their cheeks, which they wipe off with a snuff-spoon made of bone or horn, this being their only handkerchief. Old and young of both sexes carry snuff-boxes made of small calabashes tied to a girdle around the waist. Sometimes diminutive reeds full of snuff are inserted in holes in their ears.

"When they meet, after the usual salutation, 'I see you, friend,' the snuff is passed round, each one taking a good pinch. It is a nasty habit, and their nostrils after this operation are generally covered with filth; and it is also injurious to health.

"Zulu men, especially young men, are becoming fearfully addicted to smoking; and I perceive, after thirty-two years' observation, that it makes serious inroads on their constitution. This is one of the unpleasant results of European civilization.

"I am glad to say that, so far as my knowledge extends, no American missionary in South Africa uses tobacco in any form. We shall ere long have anti-tobacco societies in all our missionary stations, and shall fight against this vile habit till we lay our armor down."

I have four good reasons for being an abstainer—my head is clearer, my health is better, by heart is lighter, and my purse is heavier.—Guthrie.

RELIGIOUS NEWS.

—The evangelists Jones and Small began meetings in Kansas City on the 1st of January.

—Pres. C. A. Blanchard assisted Pastor Abbott of Geneva, Ill., last week in an interesting revival service which has continued several weeks and has brought fifty or more souls to Christ.

—A five weeks' protracted meeting with blessed result to the church closed in the Wesleyan church at Wheaton a few days since. Rev. L. Swartz, of Leaf River, Ill., assisted one week. The Methodist church of the same place has begun a protracted meeting. In the College a revival interest has continued since the fall opening with conversions reported every week.

—Dwight L. Moody, it is reported, will aid Major Whittle in an evangelistic campaign in Burlington, Iowa.

—When Dr. Withrow, pastor of the Third Presbyterian church of this city, reviewed, lately, the first year of his pastorate, he said some very frank things about the reputed membership of the church. After remarking that during the year there had been 221 additions to the church, 100 on confession of faith, he said that the roll of members, which a year ago was reported to be 2,300, had been reduced to 1,200, by dropping the names of members long removed.

—Dr. Pentecost and Mr. Stebbins opened evangelistic meetings in Lawrence, Mass., Jan. 1. The attendance is good and interest deepening among Christians.

—David Gregg of Pittsburgh, Pa., father of the pastor of Park Street church, Boston, has made a New Year's gift of $100,000 to the Reformed Presbyterian church of which he is a leading member. Mr. Gregg is a Scotchman by birth, seventy-six years of age, and has a fortune of three-quarters of a million. A large part of his latest gift will go to the theological seminary of which he was treasurer for twenty years.

—Rev. Edward Mathews, remembered for his labors in the N. C. A. work but now in the Congo country, writes to the Free Methodist under date of October 11th last of his labors and prospects. He says: "Your many inquiries about the religion of this country, etc., must be deferred until the future. This much I can say: I have not seen anything like picty in Africa, so far, among the whites or natives, excepting three cases, including Bishop Taylor. Licentiousness and drunkenness abound. The natives have learned the white man's sins, and so his Sabbaths, when he is not obliged to work, are spent in dancing, drinking, or worse. This I have seen again and again. Preaching through an interpreter comes very natural to me, and I am often blessed while so employed. You may be curious to know how the Bishop's movement prospers. At present the outlook is very dark. And as to the boats and boilers, the building of them is postponed for one or more years, so reads my "honorable release." I am in the service of the Sanford Exploring Expedition, being employed in building and keeping in repair their boats and boilers at Kinchessa, Stanley Pool. I may stay two years or five, I do not know which, but, thank God, it is settled to meet you in heaven. * * The rainy season is about to set in now. We now have occasional rains, and they will increase until the wet months are passed. The swollen Congo shows that the rains are abundant in the interior. The river has risen more than twelve feet in the past month, and is swift and dangerous in proportion."

—The mother of Mr. Hartman, a Moravian missionary in South Africa, after her husband's death, lived alone for nine years among the savage Bush Negroes, teaching their children, preaching to them in little companies, nursing them in sickness, facing death many a time, not only in the pestilential swamps, where four missionaries died in rapid succession, but boldly confronting the brutal plantation overseers, who would have driven her away, but for the clamor of the slaves who loved her dearly; living the while in a little hut, her only bed a hammock swung between two posts, often sick and almost dying, and finally contracting the elephantiasis, a sort of leprosy which prevails among the black population. She died in 1853, lying on the floor in the mission-house at Paramaribo. All her children are engaged in mission service—the oldest son in South Africa, a daughter in Thibet, and the other son, first in Australia, and now among the Indians in Canada.—Messenger.

—The American Board of Missions has information that Turkey is revising its school laws with the aim of suppressing American missionary and other foreign schools. The new law provides that no foreigner can open a school without a special firman given by the Sultan himself; and such documents he he is slow to give. The law forbids any Ottoman subject from attending such a school until he shall have taken a course of religious instructions. The schools now existing are to be suppressed unless they conform to these regulations within six months. The American minister has protested against this law, and urges other embassies to join him.

—Mrs. Emma Baldwin writes to the Christian Conservator of Dayton, of the great revival at Cedar Creek, Michigan: "The meeting commenced December 17th, and closed January 1st. The church was very cold and dead. We asked God to send the fire, and the people confessed their sins. The fire fell from heaven the third evening, and sinners started. Disputes eleven years old were settled. One hundred and ten came to the altar for prayer. Besides, eighteen of the Sabbath-school children started and many professors were reclaimed, making in all not less than one hundred and sixty. The country was shaken for miles around. Infidels, Universalists, moralists, and all kinds of sinners were saved. Praise the Lord! We left this meeting in the hands of the pastor, Bro. Sheldon, with twenty-eight at the altar Friday evening and twenty-seven Saturday evening. Some who had joined the G. A. R. Post came back to the church. The post is badly wrecked. Several came out who will join the church."

—The Boston Herald sent to the various pastors of the city, asking them if they were in favor of abolishing Santa Claus, in favor of keeping him as he is, or in favor of telling the truth about him. The ninety-five replies received are classified as follows: For abolishing Santa Claus, 41; for keeping him as he is, 26; for telling the truth about him, 18.

—A correspondent writes to the New York Witness: "There has been a work of grace at Medina, Ohio, during two weeks and a half beginning Dec. 4. Bible readings and Gospel addresses were given by the Rev. Charles M. Whittlesey, of Saratoga, N. Y. Mr. Robert W. Swayne, the song evangelist, who resides in Lockport, N. Y., a man of God and full of the Spirit, was especially useful in the progress of the meetings. Between fifty and seventy souls, perhaps more still, professed conversion.

—The evangelistic services conducted by the pastor, the Rev. Francis Edward Smiley, at the Wharton Street Presbyterian church, Philadelphia, have resulted in a great blessing to the church. At the bi-monthly communion, Dec. 11, forty-three persons were received into membership, seven of whom were baptized. This church has been blessed with a continuous revival during the past eighteen months, and over two hundred and fifty have been added to the roll of membership.

—The American Missionary Association has 8,616 pupils in its schools for the Freedmen in the South; 608 pupils in its Indian school, and 1,044 in its schools for the Chinese.

—We remember when the Rev. A. A. Myers, perhaps six years ago, built his first church and school building in Western Kentucky, at Williamsburg, Whitley county. His influence banished the saloon, and put church and school in its place, entirely renovating the community. He has continued to devote himself to the establishment of churches in that mountain region, and during the first week in December a company of friends of the American Missionary Association accompanied him in a tour dedicating seven new church or chapel buildings. In one of these counties, said a member of one of these new churches, there were, during a period of eighteen months, eighty-four murders, mostly in drunken quarrels; and not very long ago, while preaching in Jellico, Tenn., where one of these new buildings has been dedicated, Mr. Myers heard firing in the street, and went out and found four dead bodies of men shot in a broil, and laid them out in a drug store.—Independent.

LITERATURE.

A HAND-BOOK OF HOMILETICS AND PASTORAL THEOLOGY. By Rev. Wilson T. Hogg. T. B. Arnold, Publisher, Chicago.

The merits of this book are many; its defects, "few and far between." The necessity of studying the theory of preaching is obvious. Animals swim by nature; men have to learn swimming or sailing as an art. In this book, the writer has given the best thoughts of the best men, both on preaching and pastoral labor. He thus makes it a small library in itself; and no young minister can read it without becoming a better preacher and a better man. His "Call to Preach" will give a young minister a deeper reverence for his calling; and though, while speaking to or visiting his people, rules, instances and ideas of the great pulpit orators cited, will not be in his memory, they exist in his mind, and modify, shape and direct his discourses and pastoral labor; as, while the steam is what propels the engine, the rules of engineering make the motive power useful and safe.

There is nothing in this whole book which is extravagant, unscriptural, or unsound; so that the young minister who reads it thoroughly, becomes not only a better preacher, but a wiser and better Christian. That the writer cites Augustine, Luther, Baxter, Wesley, Fletcher, Edwards and Moody as examples, is sufficient guaranty that his purpose is not narrow or sectarian; and, in brief, the work is preeminently fitted for the object designed by the author, to aid teachers and pupils in the science of preaching the Gospel of the Son of God.

The National W. C. T. U. Convention at Nashville, Tenn., in November, requested Miss Frances E. Willard to prepare a volume of personal reminiscences and speeches, which should sketch, autobiographically, the development of the socicty of which she has so long been the head, and also give fuller accounts than have yet been had of her life as a teacher and her years of study and travel across the sea. Miss Willard has agreed to do this, and is now at her home, Rest Cottage (called by those who know it best, Restless Cottage, by reason of the many women who there ply pen and type-writer), working, as her varied duties will permit, upon the volume. It will be finely illustrated, and will be issued by the Woman's Temperance Publication Association in time for the fall trade.

Cape Breton Island, off Nova Scotia, is described by F. M. Endlich, in the American Magazine for January. Aside from its quaint inhabitants and primitive scenery, the island is of interest on account of a projected railroad, whereby the ocean trip to Liverpool may be shortened to four days. "Some Boston Artists and Their Studios," by Wm. H. Rideing, is the first of a short series of papers on this subject, giving illustrations of the style of noted painters of that city, and reproducing some characteristic specimens both of their work and their workshops. Alice Wellington Rollins explains what is meant by "Manual Training in Schools," and demonstrates its need and value. The question of granting further pensions to our soldiers is discussed by Col. E. H. Ropes. The debt of our country to its defenders, and their increasing needs, are very plainly set forth; as well as some of the distinguishing features which should be incorporated in pension legislation. Hamlin Garland, in a prose sketch of "Huskin' Time," draws a vivid picture of his experience in boyhood on a prairie farm, which thousands of Western readers will enjoy heartily. The leading poem of this number, "Twilight at Nazareth," is one of the best that Joaquin Miller has written. It handles with reverent touch and graceful art a subject dear to Christian memory.

George Kennan's third Russian Prison paper will appear in the February Century, and is a description of the life of the "Politicals" in the famous fortress of Petropavlovsk. The interest of these papers is cumulative. In this forthcoming one, Kennan will describe "The First Night in the Fortress," "Routine of Life in a Casemate," "How Prisoners are Watched and Guarded," "Interviews with Relatives," "An Artificial Hiccough," "Prisoners' Methods of Intercommunication," etc. The first paper in the series describing Mr. Kennan's journey through Siberia, with Mr. Frost's illustrations, will begin in April. Copies of the Century now entering Russia have Mr. Kennan's articles torn out of them by Government officials on the frontier.

"Which is the True American Mother?" asks Babyhood in the January issue, after a number of contributors have expressed their opinions on "Shunning Maternity," and "The Mother who is Tired of Little Children." The spirit of this discussion is an eminently proper one. No less interesting and valuable will be found the illustrated medical articles, "How Children may Have Sound Teeth," by Dr. Leslie; and "Children's Heads," by Dr. Yale. "Worms and Worm fever," by Dr. Dodge, furnishes much needed enlightenment on this subject.

The pleasant homes of the sensible people who use the trees and plants and flowers of Nature for their adornment, will read the coming numbers of the American Garden for 1888 with interest and profit, for it is to be full of instruction by practical men and women and noted writers of many States and countries, in the planting and arrangement of home grounds; flower culture in-doors and out-doors; fruit-growing in orchard, vineyard, plantation and home garden; vegetable-gardening for home and market; greenhouse and conservatory construction and management; uses of garden products in cookery and preserving, etc.; plants and flowers in decoration of house and table and person, etc.

The January 7th issue of the Library Magazine, the first of the year 1888, contains the following interesting articles: The First Chapter of Genesis, by Prof. W. Gray Elmslie; Captured Brides in Far Cathay, from Blackwood's Magazine; The Time it Takes to Think, by J. McK. Cattell; Kinglake's Invasion of the Crimea, from the Pall Mall Gazette; Mr. Donnelly and Shakespeare, from the Athenæum, and others. The Cynosure and Library Magazine, weekly or monthly, $2 a year for both.

Lieutenant Schwatka tells the young people who enjoy scientific studies, in the Swiss Cross for January, about "The Snow-house of the Eskimo." The article is illustrated and is quite a study in snow architecture. The way of a grasshopper's life, how cobwebs are made and a sketch of the Hupa Indian tribe are among the other interesting contents of the number.

LODGE NOTES.

A suit which is to exonerate or condemn the general officers of the Knights of Labor is to be begun at Philadelphia by the "antis." An accounting will be asked for, and an inquiry, it is expected, will be instituted by the court to determine whether any of the officers have been guilty of criminal acts.

Chief Drummond, of the United States Secret Service, in reporting on a band of Italian counterfeiters now operating in this country, has called attention to the existence of a formidable secret organization originating in Sicily, but having branches in New York, Boston, Chicago, St. Louis, St. Paul, San Francisco and several other cities. The members of this society are described as assassins and villians of the worst type, engaged in all sorts of criminal schemes, but especially in the counterfeiting business.

In Canada a conflict between the Catholic church and the Knights of Labor would not be so serious as here. Accordingly, we find Cardinal Gibbons here the defender of the Knights, and in Quebec Cardinal Taschereau is their foe. In consequence of a printers' strike the latter Cardinal has written another letter strongly urging his flock not to join the Knights, reminding them that his former pastoral condemning the order has not been countermanded but only suspended. He seems to expect that the final decision will be against the Knights, and meanwhile he throws all the weight of the church against them.

The provisional committee of the anti-administration Knights of Labor has at last decided upon a plan by which its objects can be attained, and the general officers of the Knights of Labor condemned or exonerated, as the issue of the case may result. Eminent counsel have been consulted, and as a result it has been decided to begin a suit in equity against the general officers of the order for an accounting of funds, and also to determine whether any of the officers have been guilty of criminal acts. The expenses of the suit will be met by a fund to which members of the order and assemblies who are opposed to the present administration are to be asked to contribute. Friends of the administration say they are glad of this opportunity for a vindication, and that they will contribute their share of the expenses.

Grand Master Frank P. Sargent, of the order of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen of the United States and Canada, has made some emphatic statements respecting the Reading strike. He says: "As for the treatment of J. J. Leahy, of Philadelphia, a member of our executive board, who is also a Reading Railroad employe, and who refused to recognize the strike, all I can say is that it is abominable. My telegram to him published in this morning's papers explains itself. It meant just what I say. I will have no bulldozing of our order by the Knights of Labor. That may as well be settled now as at any other time. Mr. Leahy has been treated shamefully. A social boycott has been declared on him at home and he is treated as if he were a common vagabond. His Knight of Labor friends will not speak to him and he cannot get a shave or a cigar at Port Richmond. I will protect him to the fullest extent of my ability, as I indorse fully the course he has taken. We will not be coerced into taking sides with the strike by any such tactics as these."

FIFTY YEARS and BEYOND:

OR,

Old Age and How to Enjoy It.

A most appropriate gift book for "The Old Folks at Home."

Compiled by REV. S. G. LATHROP.

Introduction by
REV. ARTHUR EDWARDS, D. D.,
(Editor N. W. Christian Advocate.)

The object of this volume is to give to that great army who are fast hastening toward the "great beyond" some practical hints and helps as to the best way to make the most of the remainder of that now is, and to give comfort and help life that is to come.

"It is a tribute to the Christianity that honors the gray head and refuses to consider the oldish man a burden or an obstacle. The book will aid and comfort every reader."—Northwestern Christian Advocate.

"The selections are very precious. Springing from such numerous and pure fountains, they can but afford a refreshing and healthful draught for every aged traveller to the great beyond."—Witness.

THE TALMUD.

What It Is and What it Knows about Jesus and his Followers. By Rev. Bernhard Pick, Ph.D. Ideal Edition, Small Pica type, cloth, 50c.; postage 6c.

One of the most interesting and valuable of recent contributions to religious literature. It answers popular curiosity as to what the Talmud is, and gives to students information of transcendant value, not heretofore accessible.

"The Talmud is the slow growth of several centuries. It is a chaos of Jewish learning, wisdom and folly, a continent of rubbish with hidden pearls of true maxims and poetic fables."—PHILIP SCHAFF.

"Here, then, we find a prodigious mass of contradictory opinions, an infinite number of casuistical cases, a logic of scholastic theology, some recondite wisdom, and much rambling dotage: many puerile tales and oriental fancies; ethics and sophisms, reasonings and unreasonings, subtle solutions, and maxims and riddles."—BENJAMIN DISRAELI.

"It has proved a grateful task to wander through the mazes of the Talmud and cull flowers yet sparkling with the very dew of Eden. Figures in shining garments haunt its recesses. Prayers of deep devotion, sublime confidence and noble benediction, echo in its ancient tongue. Sentiments of lofty courage, of high resolve, of infantile tenderness, of far-seeing prudence, fall from the lips of venerable sages. No less practicable would it be to stray with an opposite intention, and to extract venom, instead of honey, from the flowers that seem to spring up in self-sown profusion. Fierce, intolerant, vindictive hatred for mankind: idle subtlety; pride and self-conceit amounting to insanity: indelicacy pushed to a grossness that renders what it calls virtue more hateful than the vice of more modest people: all these strung together would give no more just an idea of the Talmud than would the chaplets of its lovelier flowers."—Edinburgh Review.

HISTORY of the JEWS.

The Jews Since the Destruction of Jerusalem. Brevier type, double leaded; cloth, 15c.; postage 3c.

"A very interesting and valuable sketch, exceedingly well written, of the political condition, numerical strength, and employments of the Jewish people in the different countries, since their dispersion at the destruction of their National Capital."—The Guardian, Philadelphia.

"This monograph may be regarded as the fullest treatment of this subject in the briefest compass. We have found it fascinating reading, and share more and more as we proceed in the author's strong and just sympathy for this outcast and oppressed race."—Christian Evangelist, St. Louis.

Apocryphal LIFE OF JESUS.

By REV. BERNHARD PICK, Ph.D. Ideal Edition, Small Pica type, cl., 50c.; post. 6c.

"Dr. Pick has done a good service in translating these extra-canonical narratives. They form a highly interesting addition to Christian literature, and the accompanying notes increase their value."—Lutheran Observer, Phila.

"These narratives are of decided value as a foil to set off the brightness, beauty, and simplicity of the Gospels. When one reads the infinite absurdities of which even good men have been guilty, when trying to supplement the silence of scriptures on the childhood and youth of our Lord; and compares, with such human attempts, the inspired narrative, these apocryphal Gospels become at once evidential in value."—Presbyterian, Wilmington, N. C.

HOME AND HEALTH.

DANGER IN MUSTY MEAL.

It has long been known that moldy and decayed vegetable foods are sometimes productive of violent disease, but the subject has not received that amount of public attention which it deserves. This is especially the case respecting flour and meal. Musty or stale flour and meal are frequently used, and until recently no very serious results have been directly traced to this cause. A short time ago, however, a case of poisoning occurred which clearly demonstrates the exceedingly deleterious character of such food. In a boarding-house at Mt. Holyoke, Massachusetts, forty persons were made violently sick by eating brown-bread. An examination showed that the meal from which the bread was made was stale, and that this was undoubtedly the cause of the sickness.

Meal and flour should always be kept in a cool, dry place; and if it becomes stale or musty, should be devoted to some other purpose than human consumption. —Good Health.

ADULTERATED BREAD.

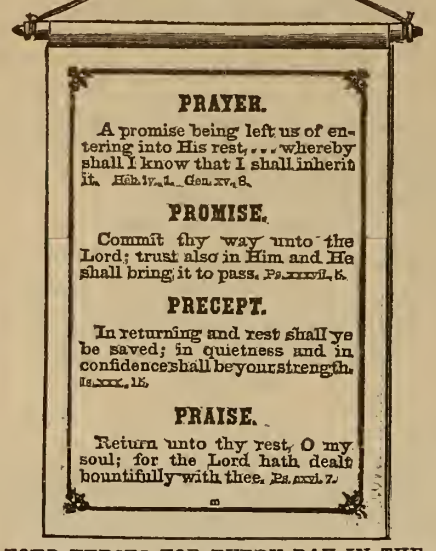
A certain gentleman of Chicago, who seldom eats any but home-made bread, one day, when in good health, partook at all three meals of the so-called "Vienna bread," eating altogether nearly a loaf. In the evening he was troubled with nausea, severe pain in the stomach and bowels, eructations, and persistent heart-burn, which continued for several days. Analyzing carefully the bread partaken of, the doctor found alum in considerable quantities. The analysis was confirmed by Mr. Fuller, of New York, with the microscope and polariscope. Alum, says Dr. Mitchell, is an astringent, and when taken constantly in bread, there is a decrease in the quantity of secretions in the intestinal tract, causing indigestion. The disagreeable effects of eating baker's bread, varying in intensity, according to the physical constitution of an individual, manifest themselves within twenty-four hours.—American Miller.

—Many think that sleep is lost time. But the style of your work will be mightily affected by the style of your slumber. Sound Asleep is the sister of Wide Awake. Sleep is not a subtraction: it is an addition.

ANOTHER CAUSE OF DIPHTHERIA.

The causes of diphtheria, like the remedies for the dread scourge, are without number. But it is as well that we consider all suggestions under that head, since no harm is likely to result therefrom, even if no good should be produced.

A writer in an Eastern exchange reports a prominent doctor as saying that the fumes of kerosene, when a lamp is turned low, are likely to cause diphtheria. The New York board of health a few years ago decided that to this, more than any other cause, the prevalence of this disease was to be attributed. This is given as accounting for the fact that diphtheria generally begins to spread with the advent of short days and long nights. Children dislike to go to bed in the dark, and the kind mother lets the lamp remain in the bedroom, usually turning down the flame, so that the light shall not keep the child awake. Many bedrooms are thus semi-lighted all night and the windows being closed, or raised but slightly, the atmospheric condition is simply deathly. A turned down kerosene lamp is a magazine of deadly gas that the healthiest lungs cannot safely be exposed to.



GREASE SPOTS.—What will remove grease spots from clothing in the best manner, is a frequent inquiry. There is probably nothing better than equal parts of strong ammonia water, ether and alcohol. Pass a piece of blotting paper under the grease spot, moisten a sponge first with water to render it "greedy," then the mixture, and rub with it the spot. In a moment it is dissolved, saponified and absorbed by the sponge and blotter.

CATARRH CURED.

A clergyman, after years of suffering from that loathsome disease, catarrh, and vainly trying every known remedy, at last found a prescription which completely cured and saved him from death. Any sufferer from this dreadful disease sending a self-addressed stamped envelope to Prof. J. A. Lawrence, 212 East 9th St., New York, will receive the recipe free of charge.
